A Paramount Picture

CRITICS OF MOVIES SHOULD SEE THIS

"BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK."

Produced by Paramount. Directed by James Cruze. Presented at Orchestra hall.

By Mae Tinee.

GOOD MORNING!

After seeing a picture like "Beggar on Horseback," I wouldn't swap jobs with anybody in this world!

It's a production that ANYBODY who's interested in the movies should crow over. It's one that should make a convert of anybody who is not. It's beautiful, funny, imaginative, realistic, fantastic, weird, wild, charming, charming, CHARMING. It is comedy, rare, exquisite, and utterly original.

(I've run out of adjectives and now I'll tell you what it's about.)

The hero is a young composer forced to lay aside a pantomime practically completed and ... that is the very soul ... out jazz pot boilers ... may eat.

... lives across the ... has been work... pantomime— ... as he at ... ostitute ... rich, ... zy ... hat a ... with

ESTHER RALSTON plays the role ... Cynthia in "Beggar ... back." ... family

But I will ... the play by George ... Marc Connelly, you'll love the ... and if you didn't see the play you love the picture.

It is perfectly acted and the camera, under the brilliant direction of James Cruze whose picture should hang in the Hall of Fame because he made "Beggar on Horseback," has performed marvels.

"If riches were horses beggars would ride . . ." and believe "Beggar on Horseback," it would be rough riding!

See you tomorrow!

CHICAGO TRIBUNE

BY ASHTON STEVENS.

MY hat is off—and if I wore a toupee that would be off too—to the man that made "Beggar on Horseback" into a screenworthy motion picture—Director James Cruze.

It required nerve, imagination and a keen, lean lucidity to translate this subtle, satirical romance into the terms of the studio without losing its flavor.

It required originality, too, for this is no mere photograph of the Kaufman-Connelly play, but a fine collaboration that fits the screen as well as the original did the footlights.

NOT, I hasten to declare, that Mr. Cruze has reduced this satire of the artistic mind in conflict with the commercial to its lowest terms—not by a long shot!

He has respected his scenario and respected himself.

But he has taken a thousand hidden pains to insure the pleasure and understanding of the spectator, working, I should say, with nothing less than a loving and impassioned humor.

He has amplified the prologue unboringly and shown us the rich and hideous homelife of the Cadys in such a way as to make plainer, but by no means duller, a great many things that the musician-hero dreams about in his nightmare of the play proper.

I should say offhand that "Beggar on Horseback" is about the best camera show we can hope for this Summer.

Lady Robinhood

Star, story, production, title—give you a four-ply box-office wallop in this one!

Exhibitors who are playing the Evelyn Brent pictures know that she has won her place among the really big favorites. This story is absolutely different from anything she has done and the fans are going to love her in the part. The production is the most pretentious she has made and the title is filled with the thought of romances and adventure. It's surefire box-office!

WHAT DANNY SAYS ABOUT HIS FIRST PRODUCTION

THE Film DAILY EDITORIAL

THERE'S a picture out called, "The Girl Who Wouldn t Work.' Get it. And run it. And make yourself not only money. But all that a good picture helps. In building patronage. B. P. ("Ben") Schulberg is the producer Franchise rights all around the country will allow you to get it wherever you are. And you should have it Because it has all the earmarks of a mighty fine box office attraction.

This happens to be what is called an "independent" production. This "independent" phrase has been overworked to the limit. Frankly, we don't know just what an "independent" is, or is supposed to be But anyway the Schulberg picture is a real box office bet; a real picture, and the best of it is that it comes from practically a brand new director—Marcel de Sano. He made two for Universal several years ago. But they could not touch his latest. It is full of touches, full of delightful surprises, and with a tempo that makes you think it came from the Lubitsch school of expression. There are bits all the way that make you laugh, smile, or feel good. And then, after about five reels, the tempo changes, comedy is replaced with tragedy—a father presumably kills his own daughter And from there to the finish it moves with real dramatic force. This looks like a box office bet for any type of house. There is a fine cast. Incidentally, Marguerite de la Motte never appeared to such advantage as in this. De Sano makes her troupe

Another whirlwind action picture!

The young star has packed more punch, more action, more speed into this one than you get in two or three ordinary pictures! He has a story that has all the elements of a Robert Louis Stevenson and a Robinson Crusoe rolled into one and it keeps him fighting, laughing, skylarking, leaping, punching, swarming all over the place.

It's Talmadge at his athletic best and your fans are going to go wild over him!

Another factor that will sell a lot of seats, particularly to your reading public, is the fact that Rupert Hughes, the eminent author, wrote all the titles for this picture.

The Editor's Views

THE examiner of the Federal Trades Commission, who has conducted the hearings in the Famous Players case for these many, many months, has filed a report adverse to the film corporation. The report, it is understood, sustains the contention that there has been evidence sufficient to prove an attempt at monopoly.

Lest the bald statement of this fact in the news columns give rise to false impressions on the part of film men throughout the country, it might be well to inquire further into the meaning of the action.

First of all, the examiner is NOT the Federal Trades Commission. He is an attache, whose report is only a report, and not a final finding in the case.

Those within the industry who are hoping for action inimical to Famous will do well to bide their anxiety until the Commission itself registers a decision; and, even granting encouragement to them from that source, it is opportune to inquire just what actual effect such a finding can have on the present-day picture situation.

Incidentally, it might be well to record that the examiner's finding was not unexpected; that opinion differs as to the attitude that will be taken by the Commission, with a slight leaning to the belief that it will not uphold the examiner in entirety.

LET'S look into the facts. It is difficult to do so in a case where men prefer to allow their desires to father their opinions.

Clearly, to anyone who has made a study of anti-trust acts, and previous tendencies of the Federal Trades Commission, three points stand out:

First, that Famous Players cannot possibly tread on the law by the acquisition of key city theatres UP TO THE POINT where it can claim necessity as an outlet for its own product. The danger line comes by acquisition after that point, in the possible inference that such purchases are intended to either stifle competition from other producers, or to hamper the buying of competing individual theatre owners.

Second, that Famous can continue the acquisition of smaller theatres to undreamed of limits without in any way encroaching on Federal laws. In this case the dividing line between that which can and that which cannot be done is the METHOD used; the steps taken either by the corporation or its employees to bring about the purchase of the theatres or to meet the remaining competition.

Third, that Famous cannot continue the acquisition of theatres that bring it into possession of franchises or stock interests in other producing or distributing companies. For this, as shown in Standard Oil and other cases, is directly construed as competition of an unfair sort and a concretely monopolistic step.

THERE are the facts. We can argue and debate all day and night; orate and fume about independence and trust movements in this industry, and we cannot get away from the law and from precedent.

That word precedent brings us to the remaining point in the Famous Players case. Studying past actions of the Federal Trades Commission it seems barely possible that either the Commission or courts later appealed to might order a severance of the theatre and distributing activities of Famous.

This has been done before, American Tobacco and Standard Oil standing forth as the bright examples. Judging by the results in those cases, however, it seems difficult to see where the action had any real fundamental effect on the conditions it strove to remedy.

There is only one element of the equation left for consideration. Public opinion. An element mightier than the law, because it is bound by no written word or enacted statutes. Famous is aware of its existence; and it's dollars to doughnuts Famous is giving more farsighted consideration to its power than any of the scattered opposition.

While it may as well be admitted that to date all our internal industrial fussing hasn't made the slightest ripple on the current of public opinion. Not a ripple.

First in the Field!

John Bull Still Flaying Yankee Films

By
W. Stephen Bush

THE European press is printing with obvious delight "that an American film man of some importance" is going to cross the ocean and make a personal appeal to President Coolidge to stop the bad American films from coming into Europe and working havoc among the good folk who dwell in the old world. The "news" so carefully and adroitly launched in the daily paper and reverberating in excited shrieks through the columns of European trade journals is but the culmination of an insistent and sinister propaganda against American films. In the field of fair competition the Americans have won without an effort. The latest report on the quantity of our film export is ample proof. If we were to talk in the language of the exchange we would say that not only are American films away ahead, but they are "closing strong." It is this realization of the unbeatable quality of the American film as a decent and successful entertainment which has roused all this insidious agitation and all this vehement denunciation from the House of Lords down to the manager of a British film company.

There is little doubt that the distinguished British peer who launched his diatribe in the House of Lords has a meritorious defence, i. e., that of impenetrable and invincible ignorance, not so with Mr. H. C. Hoagland, manager of the British film company who has now rushed into the lists against the films of his native country.

"Among the most objectionable films," Mr. Hoagland is quoted as saying "are sex pictures which give the impression to European people that the Americans are a race of degenerates and sex maniacs and films which hold the white races up to contempt."

These are rather loose and sweeping generalities. The cause of truth and real reform would be served much better by giving names. Possibly Mr. Hoagland has the names and we will hear of them later. Then we will have a real basis of discussion.

In the mean time it is perfectly clear that these utterances of Mr. Hoagland will be a very Niagara upon the prayer-wheels of the ignorant and fanatical enemies of the motion picture. The implication is obvious: Our native censors are careless and overlook a multitude of bets. There must be a special censor board which is to pass on films intended for export. "The innocent European nations" must be protected against this "flood of corruption." I can hear an unctuous phraseologist right now pleading for an appropriation and later applying for a job.

Mr. Hoagland has recently spent a good deal of his time trying to form film alliances with German and Austrian firms to meet the American competition and to beat it. That was his undoubted right and the very thing his British employer wanted him to do. The alliances have failed to produce any satisfactory results. The discovery of the dreadful American films came soon afterwards and now the war is to be carried into America.

The European representative of The Moving Picture World has been in Europe the greater part of the last four years. He has witnessed the showing of all kinds of films (most of them of American make) not only in all the key cities of Europe but in the smaller towns as well. He has watched the reactions of European audiences to our films. He has spoken to scores of producers and exchangemen, until now the highways of Europe are almost as familiar to him as the highways of his own country. He has no commercial interest or stake in any American films nor ever had.

According to his observations the American film in Europe is popular not merely because it is technically superior, not merely because it is first class entertainment but because it carries a message of hope and cheer and enlightenment in almost every reel. Scholars and statesmen and jurists and men from every walk of life have told me that the American film has given them a better conception of American life and American philosophy and American institutions than either books or lectures. They say that they infer these things from our films: That our standards of living are higher and our notions of morality the most chivalrous. They dwell on the respect and courtesy shown to women. They easily recognize the typical American love of fair play; the detestation of all kinds of shams and arrogance; the natural instinct to protect the weak and the tenderness toward children and the kindness toward animals.

I have seen a group of women and children first gasp and then cry as they watched a husky New York policeman helping the children to cross the street in safety. To them it seemed a sudden glimpse of paradise. The American film is a source of consolation to the plain people of Europe who wonder at the opportunities which our country affords to advance in the world in spite of poor surroundings. The absence of caste, the rewards of intelligent effort, the supremacy of manhood give the average European a thrill which he can never get out of the European film. Even socialists had something good to say for the the relationship between labor and capital as they find it portrayed in our films. The subject is too deep and far reaching to be exhausted in a few columns of the Moving Picture World. To put it in a nutshell: The American film has fulfilled a great cultural mission in Europe besides furnishing wholesome entertainment. Yes I have seen some films that were not so pleasing, representing rather the disordered imagination of some director than a true phase of American life. Perhaps the underworld has been emphasized too much now and then. On the whole however the American film has held up the mirror to American life and the revelation has been good and uplifting for the European mind.

Even according to the most optimistic system of theology the consequences of original sin have only been abated and not altogether abolished. It is the common creed of all Christians that they will persist until the angel summons us to final judgment.

The crowning joke of the situation is the fear of Mr. Hoagland for European morals. His apprehensions in this respect are not shared by the multitudinous censor boards that are scattered all over the map of Europe. These ladies and gentlemen take off their gas masks when they begin to examine American films. Not five per cent of the European films could be shown in our country without substantial cuts.

If Mr. Hoagland is eager for the information I can hand him a long list of European films that could never be shown on our screens at all not merely because they are absolutely lacking in entertainment value but because they are unspeakably low and nasty.

Coming and Going

J. I. Schnitzer, vice president of F. B. O. in charge of production, and John Brownell, East Coast scenario editor, left on August 21 for a six weeks' trip to the West Coast studios to supervise production activities for F. B. O.'s 1926-27 program.

Edgar B. Hatrick, vice-president and general manager of International Newsreel Corporation and vice-president of Cosmopolitan Productions, has returned from California where he has been for four weeks in the interest of both organizations.

Pandro S. Berman, son of the late Harry M. Berman, general sales manager of F. B. O., has returned to Hollywood to resume work as assistant director at the F. B. O. studios.

Paula Gould, general press representative for Film Booking Officers in the East, leaves on August 28 for a three weeks' trip to the West Coast studios of the company.

Lee Marcus, general sales manager of Film Booking Offices, left today on a tour of the southern exchanges. Mr. Marcus will visit New Orleans, Dallas, Oklahoma City and Memphis.

O. E. Goebel of the Associated Arts Corporation left the West Coast this week for New York for further production conferences. Ludwig Erb, with whom Mr. Goebel is associated in production affairs at the F. B. O. Studios, will remain on the West Coast.

Katz Made Assistant Sales Manager of F. B. O.

Sidney M. Katz, associated with Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., since its inception three and one-half years ago as assistant manager of the New York exchange and later as a district manager in the East, was this week appointed assistant sales manager, according to an announcement by Major H. C. S. Thomson, president and managing director of the company.

Mr. Katz is widely known in film circles, especially among Eastern and Mid-West exhibitors, and his promotion is the result of conscientious effort and the excellent results achieved in sales because of many innovations which he personally conceived and executed.

Mr. Katz left this week for a swing around the exchanges of F. B. O.

Incorporations

The companies incorporating in Albany, N. Y., this week were: A. and A. Amusement Corporation, $25,000, with R. H. Clarke, F. C. Taylor, James T. Aspbury, New York City. Hubert's Museum, $10,000, D. Blum, I. H. Greenfield, B. Schenke, New York City. United Stars Distributing Company, Inc., $5,000, Nat Nathansen, Samuel Goldfarb, W. Mason, New York. Wellwood Amusement Company, Inc., Great Neck, $20,000, Fred Kilgour, Oyster Bay; George Duck, H. S. McKnight, Great Neck. Little Neck Amusement Company, Inc., $5,000, Samuel Baker, Daniel Kerner, Ozone Park; B. S. Michaelson, New York. Magnus Film Sales Corporation, $5,000, Henry Arias, Edmund Souhami, Essie Bregstein, New York, the capitalization of the following not being specified: Hudson Valley Theatres Corporation, with M. L. Elkin, M. Sallt, Anne Eichel, New York. H. E. R. Laboratories, Inc., David Bernstein, Morris L. Greenberg, Sylvia T. Stern, New York. The Herkimer-Little Falls Corporation, H. E. Hughes, New York; Louis Mehl, Charles B. Paine, Brooklyn.

Balaban & Katz to Expand Theatre Chain

Formation of a large chain of Balaban & Katz controlled motion picture theatres outside of Cook County, Illinois, was forecast by the announcement of the organization of Great States Theatres, Inc., as the holding company of the chain.

Sixteen theatres already are included in the merger. Others are in the process of acquisition and several new theatres are to be built, it was stated at the Balaban & Katz offices.

The theatres controlled by the new corporation at present consist of the Strand, Fox and Rialto in Aurora; Crystal, Prince and Rubens-Rialto Square in Joliet; Crocker, Rialto and Grove in Elgin; the $2,000,000 Orpheum and the Majestic in Springfield; Orpheum in Galesburg; Majestic in Bloomington; Midway in Rockford, and the Dekalb Theatre in Dekalb.

All will be remodeled and programs similar to those given by the Balaban & Katz theatres in Chicago will be featured.

Officers of the new corporation are Samuel Katz, president; Jules Rubens, vice-president and general manager; Maurice Rubens, secretary, and Barney Balaban, treasurer. Stock in the company is divided between the Balaban & Katz corporation here and the owners of the theatres taken over, it was said.

DOUG AND MARY ESTABLISH NEW YORK SERVICE BUREAU

Mary Pickford and Douglas Fairbanks are the first motion picture stars to establish in New York an editorial service bureau. This, it is explained, is not just a fancy or high-brow term for a press agency office, as no stories will be broadcast from this department, but from it will be supplied on request special material to meet the needs and demands of specific publications on specific subjects or to fit specific circumstances; also authoritative information of any sort regarding Miss Pickford or Mr. Fairbanks, as well as their photographs.

Harry D. Buckley, who represents Pickford-Fairbanks interests in the East, as a director of United Artists Corporation, has put Arthur Zellner in charge of the new bureau, and Mr. Zellner will endeavor to maintain as close touch as possible with editorial requirements. Mr. Zellner will make his headquarters at the home office of United Artists Corporation, 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

BIGGEST AUGUST BUSINESS

Whether it is the advertising or the general weather conditions, the fact nevertheless remains that the Greater Movie Season in Albany and Troy, N. Y., is bringing the biggest August business in the history of the houses that are featuring Greater Movie pictures and advertising. Increased business is also being reflected in other houses. "Night Life in New York," played to capacity during the week at the Mark Strand in Albany, while the Lincoln and Troy theatres were characterized by standing lines in front of the ticket booths. Incidentally, the fore part of the week brought some of the hotest weather of the entire summer, but this fact seemed to have no impression in cutting down the size of the crowds. The latter part of the week turned off cool and every house featuring big pictures played to capacity business.

LOEW'S DECLARES DIVIDEND

The Board of Directors has declared a quarterly dividend of fifty cents per share on the capital stock of the company, payable September 30th, 1925, to stockholders of record at the close of business September 12, 1925.

A Canadian Exhibitor Becomes Philanthropist

A. R. McNichol, a well-known exhibitor of Winnipeg, Manitoba, has decided to die poor. Mr. McNichol, who is 63 years of age and a bachelor, is one of the best known independent exhibitors of the Canadian West, owning the Lyceum, College and Starland Theatres. He is rated as a multi-millionaire, his fortune being estimated at $6,000,000, which he made out of the moving picture business and real estate.

Recently he started the distribution of his wealth by the donation of $250,000 in cash to the Winnipeg General Hospital, this being a part of the sum of $1,000,000 which he is donating to Winnipeg institutions. He has also designated a number of substantial gifts to relatives and others. Following his decision to distribute his dollars, Mr. McNichol has been shown in the news weeklies all over Canada.

PLAN ANNUAL CARNIVAL

Into the mind of C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, Greater Movie Season has placed one idea which promises to be permanent. In the future, Greater Movie Season will become an inter-state-wide annual event in Kansas and Missouri. It will be on the order of a huge mardi gras or carnival, with the co-operation of both states at command.

The big downtown street costume ball for Kansas City is set for the night of August 28. Petticoat Lane, the "Fifth Avenue" of Kansas City, between Main and Walnut streets, will be the scene of the event, permission for use of the block having been obtained from city officials by the Greater Movie Season committee.

YORK, PENN., THEATRE OPENING

Moving Picture World acknowledges with thanks an invitation from Nathan Appell to attend the opening of the New Strand Theatre, York, Penn., on Thursday, August 27. This house was designed by E. C. Horn & Sons and decorated by Willie Pogany.

Moberly's Request

The city council of Moberly, Mo., a town of 25,000, voted to repeal the ordinance prohibiting Sunday motion picture shows. A battle, as bitter as ever waged on any municipal problem, continued for three and one-half hours before the matter was allowed to come to a vote.

Ministers of virtually all churches of the city opposed the plan to change the ordinance and submitted a petition containing 3,200 names. On the other hand, theatre interests submitted a petition containing 4,226 names, including 154 business firms and 671 traveling salesmen, asking the city council to change the ordinance. The debate was in the council room before one of the largest crowds that ever attended such a meeting. Mayor J. M. Jefferies has not yet signed the ordinance, asserting that he wanted a little time to study it.

Connecticut Delegation Meets With Hays Directors on Tax Situation

After Meeting Walsh, Only, Issues Statement —Hays Promises One After "Eventuations," Scouting "Boycott" Family Row Reports— Plan Emergency Fund—Talk of All Exchanges Evacuating the State

By Tom Waller

FOR over three hours on Tuesday afternoon, August 25, nearly every big producer and distributor in the film industry was locked in a conference presided over by Will Hays with a committee of five exhibitors representing the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut. The session had to do with the best means to combat the $10 tax per reel on all film going into into Connecticut.

Contrary to an earlier announcement to newspapermen by Gabriel Hess, of Hays' counsel, that Hays would issue a statement, the only message forthcoming at the conclusion of the conference was a signed document from Joseph Walsh, president of the M. P. T. O. of Connecticut.

Harmony Prevails, Says Hays

Hays when interviewed by the reporters several hours after Hess had made the announcement, remained mute, except to deny that there had been any friction in the meeting. He said: "There is no acrimony or difference with the exhibitors. In fact we all are in perfect accord."

Upon the persistent requests of the newspapermen, Hays said that he would probably have a statement of his own ready for release by three o'clock the following day, August 26. Such a statement would depend entirely upon "eventuations." The latter, Hays explained, would be the outcome today, August 27, when the Connecticut committee went back to its state and started putting into effect some of the unannounced plans reached at the confab.

Members of the Hays organization seemed perfectly agreeable to explaining the substance of Walsh's statement. As to their own version they had nothing to say, as yet.

Charles C. Pettijohn, attorney for the Hays organization and also counsel for the home office of the Film Boards of Trade, came out from the meeting and announced to reporters in the anteroom that a statement would be forthcoming in a few minutes. He said that it would embody "the big fellow taking the brunt for the little fellow" and that he did not believe that after the present contracts expire there will be any more for the Nutmeg State.

About a half hour later Hess came out with statements signed by Walsh. He said that later on there might be a statement from Hays. Still later he announced that there would be no statement from Hays that night.

Plan Emergency Fund

Hess was then requested to explain in detail Walsh's statement. He said that members of the M. P. T. O. of Connecticut had agreed to the establishing of a fund which would go toward meeting the tax; also that all exchanges would be removed from Connecticut. If the exchanges evacuate the distributors are not liable to the tax. He admitted that the law has its penalty for the exhibitor who accepts a film for which the tax has not been paid and also that a projectionist who projects such a film is subject to a revocation of his license. The newspaperman were given to understand that the fund being created would temporarily prohibit the imposition of such penalties.

Both Hess and Pettijohn stated that the execution of the plans and the meeting of exigencies from now on will be up to the Connecticutians themselves, under the personal supervision of Benedict Holden, who was described as the Hays lawyer in Connecticut.

Walsh's Statement

The Walsh statement reads as follows:

A committee appointed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut at a mass meeting held in New Haven last Sunday met with the Committees of the New Haven Film Board of Trade and of the Boston Film Board of Trade, the members of which two oranizations distribute all of the motion pictures shown in Connecticut.

The uncertainty and ambignities of the Connecticut Tax Laws have aggravated a situation which this very unpopular and unnecessary law created.

Mr. Benedict M. Holden of counsel for the producers and distributors of Connecticut has advised his clients to remove their film exchanges from New Haven and to ship all films into Connecticut by United States Parcel Post or the American Railway Express. Anticipating the confusion which will inevitably result when the New Haven exchanges are moved and deliveries are made through interstate common carriers and to enable the exhibitors to keep open and show their pictures already contracted for, the Motion Pietnre Owners of Connecticut and the New Haven Film Board of Trade and the Boston Film Board of Trade have arranged to borrow sufficient funds for the payment by theatre owners of the tax on films now in Connecticut under contract for exhibition there.. After existing contracts have been completed the exhibitors will leave to the distributors the problem of paying the tax.

This action was taken to relieve exhibitors who might be the first to receive films from interstate common carriers and be obgated to pay the entire tax before exhibit-

No Further Contracts and Immediate Evacuation of Exchanges Is the Hays Dictum for Connecticut

CONCERNING the meeting of directors of the Hays organization and Connecticut exhibitors held at the Hays office on the afternoon of August 25, Will Hays on the following afternoon issued this statement:

"The Connecticut law which provides for a one-man political censorship of a method of expression and for a tax of a confiscatory nature is as unjust in its provisions and conception as it is impractical in its operation.

"The exhibitors, producers and distributors are united and unanimous in their conclusions as to the impossibilities of the situation.

"It is a most unfortunate condition, placing an entirely unnecessary and expensive burden on the amusement of the people and placing in the hands of one man the determination of what much of that amusement shall be. It is a serious economic problem. There is left for the motion picture theatre owners, producers and distributors scarcely any option. Producers and distributors will carry out their existing contracts; they will immediately remove their exchanges for the distribution of films from the State of Connecticut, and for the time being they will not make further Connecticut contracts."

Government Delivery of Film for Connecticut

ing them as the tax on many motion pictures is several times the amount of the rental of such pictures.

Many theatres in Connecticut not having pictures under contract will not come under the operation of this fund and there are a great number of exhibitors who will be compelled to close their theatres and suffer a total loss of their entire investment.

Plan Government Delivery

Lawyer Holden when asked about the statement said that its proviso that film may be delivered by parcel post, American Express or other government carriers should place the responsibility of paying the tax upon "Uncle Sam." In this respect he stated: "The bill specifically states that the film shall not be delivered without the tax having been previously paid."

The significance of this, in view of the penalties imposed upon exhibitor and projectionist for exhibiting and projecting film with the tax unpaid, was not touched upon by Holden.

"Has to Be," Says Exhibitor

Walsh, when interviewed after the session, as to whether the agreement apparently reached, according to his own statement, was satisfactory to theatre owners, replied: "It has to be. We have got to keep our theatres open."

The Aug. 25th session, from what can be gleaned in New York and from New Haven dispatches, was the culmination of what has been described as a special and warm convention of the M. P. T. O. of Connecticut, held in the Hotel Garde, New Haven, on Sunday, August 23rd.

According to reports from the Garde, the chief subject then under discussion was a report that national producers and distributors had in mind making an "object lesson" of Connecticut to legislators in other states by declaring a "boycott." The convention is said to have registered determination to "fight to the last ditch," and accordingly, to have appointed Walsh to head a committee including L. M. Sagal, C. M. Maxfield, I. J. Hoffman and N. J. Fournier, to come to Manhattan and confer with the Hays organization.

Investigate "Boycott" Report

The newspaper containing the Hotel Garde report was brought to the attention of Courtlandt Smith, assistant to Hays, at the conference on Monday, August 24, of the Hays organization with the New York trade press. In an effort to strike the root of the "boycott" rumor and also to get something in a news sense which might throw official light on the Connecticut situation, Moving Picture World asked Smith a few questions. These questions and Smith's answers are in substance as follows:

Is it true that an appeal may not be taken to the United States Supreme Court as is reported in this paper?

The statement that we are not going to appeal is false and misleading. Of course we are going to appeal.

Have you filed your notice of appeal yet?

No. We have sixty days in which to do that. It is up to our attorneys.

What about the report that film into Connecticut may be boycotted?

I will not make any statement or even give an intimation. It is too silly and absurd. We will decide what to do but we will not talk about it and issue statements. We are not anxious to get our names in the papers. We have been rottenly treated by the State in a law that has never seen its equal.

Didn't you hold a meeting here last week when Connecticut exhibitors were present and when this boycott matter was first broached?

We held a meeting here on August 21, of our lawyers when plans were made to affect the appeal.

Were any exhibitors present at that meeting?

I said it was a conference of our attorneys to effect the appeal.

What did you decide to do during the interim before the appeal is decided?

The only way to find out what we have decided to do is to wait and see the action that is taken.

In deciding that course was the subject of boycott mentioned?

No one from this office will talk about boycott. If he does it will not be as an official of this organization.

What remedy will the exhibitors have during the period of appeal? An appeal of this kind often takes several months and even a year before it is decided, doesn't it?

Holden, our representative in Connecticut, is now looking for some means of relief. He may do this by endeavoring to enjoin the state from enforcing the law by filing other suits. It is up to him and I am not of a legal frame of mind so that I am going beyond my province to say what he might do.

Smith said that the hearing of the appeal will probably be set for the opening of the fall calendar of the U. S. Supreme Court in October. That anything involving a constitutionality and a state is always expedited and given preference on the calendar. He said that Connecticut has 165 theatres. Smith then stated that tax is levied on delivery of film to exhibitor, not on its admission to the state.

After this interview with Courtlandt Smith, Moving Picture World continued its investigation in New York into the origin of the boycott report.

Sidney Kent Talks

On the morning of the big conference of the Hays organization Moving Picture World sought the opinion of Sidney Kent, general manager of Famous Players, which organization, as is generally known, is the leading member of the Hays unit.

Over the telephone Kent said: "There is a meeting this afternoon at the Hays office. I imagine the whole matter, including the boycott proposition, will then be thoroughly discussed. I have my own opinion at this time but in all fairness to the others and in view of the fact that I would not want to influence them one way or the other, I will express no opinion until after the meeting. The proposition of a boycott was gone into by some at Friday's meeting at the Hays office, I understand, but I do not believe that it has assumed much shape so far."

When the Hays meeting did get under way on the afternoon of August 25, David Weinstock of Hartford was one of the exhibitors who accompanied the official Connecticut delegation. Interviewed by the World, he said that the report of "boycott" gained impetus in Connecticut through Powers, a Famous Players exchangeman in New Haven.

Weinstock said that he attended the Hotel Garde session and that Powers then addressed the meeting.

Walsh and his committee were among the first to arrive at the Hays office. Interviewed before he had gained access to the Hays meeting room, Walsh said that his committee had been fully empowered with all authority by the state organization to fight a boycott, which he said would mean a speedy death for Connecticut exhibitors. He stated that the "boycott" had been discussed at previous sessions with Hays' counsel as a means to fight the tax measure but that it had been given only lukewarm consideration. At that time he also expressed himself as being opposed to the exchanges leaving the State since it would slip the full brunt of the tax upon the exhibitors' shoulders.

Richard Rowland's Opinion

Richard Rowland of First National, was one of the first producers to leave this meeting. When he came out at 4 o'clock he said that there was no fight between the producers, distributors and exhibitor delegates but that no solution has been arrived at up to that time. He said that it was his personal opinion that First National would remove its exchanges from Connecticut.

Rowland stated that First National will not use the new law as a means to abrogate its present contracts. He said that holders of franchises of his company in Connecticut are few and that the maximum time for their expiration is within the next six months. He did not say as to whether First National will consider their renewal if the present law is still in effect.

Adolph Zukor and Sidney Kent were the next to leave the meeting. It was then after 5 o'clock and Kent said no settlement had yet been reached. It was decided during the course of the session that no individual statements would be given out so that Kent said he would be unable to give his opinion and that Hays would give out the only statement.

Other producers and distributors who attended the conference included: E. W. Hammons, Educational; Robert Kane, Robert T. Kane Productions; Major H. C. S. Thomson, Film Booking Offices; E. M. Goldstein, Universal; Nicholas Schenck, Metro-Goldwyn; D. W. Griffith.

Independents in Accord with Hays on Connecticut Stand—Hundreds Out of Work Will Plea for Special Session of Legislature to Kill Drastic Tax Measure

THE Independent Exchangemen of New Haven and representatives of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America at a meeting held in the Hotel Bond, Hartford, on Thursday afternoon, August 27, decided to act in accord with the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors' Association of America in the present Connecticut situation and adopted resolutions which will be presented to the executive committee of the independent association at a special meeting to be held noon, Friday, August 28, in New York City, for official action.

Among those present at the Hotel Bond meeting were: Harry Asher of the American Picture Film Company, Boston; Joseph McConville, Independent Film Company, Boston; Edward Golden, Golden Distributing Corporation, Boston; President Wallenstein, of the Franklin Picture Film Company, Boston; Lester Tobias, Yale Film Company, New Haven. Frederick Elliott represented the I. M. P. A.; Attorney C. Pettijohn, the Hays organization; Attorney Benedict Holden, the Connecticut producers and distributors; Joseph Walsh, the M. P. T. O. of Connecticut.

After the discussion it was decided that a union of all elements in the industry is necessary in this emergency.

A mass meeting of the 700 people thrown out of work by the closing of exchanges in New Haven will be held on one of the public thoroughfares of that city tomorrow, August 28, at eleven o'clock. Following the meeting those present will parade in a body to Mayor Fitzgerald of New Haven and seek to prevail upon him to use his influence with the Governor to call a special session of the legislature.

Exhibitors who attended the Hotel Bond meeting reported that already the people of Connecticut are up in arms over the news accounts on the prospective closing of motion picture theatres in the state as the result of the new law.

VOTE TO REPEAL ORDINANCE PROHIBITING SUNDAY SHOWS

The city council of Moberly, Mo., voted 5 to 3 August 17 to repeal a city ordinance prohibiting Sunday motion picture shows.

Mayor Jefffries has not announced whether he will sign the repeal ordinance. However, Sunday shows now have enough votes to pass the measure over a veto as one of the three opposition aldermen has since come out in favor of Sunday movies.

William Cotter of the Fourth Street Theatre directed the fight and obtained 4,200 signatures of persons who want Sunday shows. The ministers are fighting the repeal bill but could obtain but 3,200 signatures.

Report Is Adverse

The examiner has filed an adverse report in the case of the Federal Trade Commission against the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and others. Copies will be supplied the defendants and oral arguments probably will be held before the commission hands down its decision some two or three months from now. The motion picture industry anticipated that the examiner's report would be unfavorable. It is the feeling in the industry that the commission's report will be distinctly favorable.

The case came up several years ago with the following companies named as defendants: Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Realart Pictures Corporation, Stanley Company of America, Stanley Booking Company, Black's New England Theatres, Inc., Southern Enterprises, Inc., Saenger Amusement Company, Adolph Zukor, Jesse L. Lasky, Pules Mastbaum, Alfred S. Black, Stephen A. Lynch and Ernest V. Richards, Jr.

Tax Law Violators Subject to $1,000 Fine in Conn.

According to announcement by State Tax Commissioner William H. Blodgett, Connecticut commenced the collecting of the special tax and censuring of pictures under the new statute on August 24. The penalty for violations of provisions of the law is not more than $1,000 in addition to loss of license by the projectionist and exhibits a film in violation of the statute

Blodgett has issued a call for the records of all photoplays exhibited in the state between July 8 and August 24. Under this order the records are returnable before September 5, and they must show the name of the producer and distributor; length of each reel; whether the subject is a comedy, drama, news or educational film; the date delivered to the projectionist and the name and address of the person who delivered the films.

Failure to make returns or the sending of incomplete data will result in a check up by the state tax department, which is authorized to administer the new law. Attention is called to the order, which further prohibits after August 24 the showing of any taxable films. which have not been registered and on which the tax has not been paid. The non-taxable subjects may be exhibited only after such authorization has been issued under a permit by Tax Agent John J. Splain.

ROXY NOT BUILDING IN BERLIN

S. L. Rothafel has issued an emphatic denial concerning a story which has been given some circulation to the effect that he would build in Berlin, Germany, a new theatre for the Ufa Enterprises.

Crandall Merges With Stanley Co.

The Crandall group of theatres in Washington, D. C., has been bought by the Stanley Corporation of America, with headquarters in Philadelphia. The purchase price is estimated at all the way from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. Harry M. Crandall, chief power in control of the theatres, will retain a large block of stock in the new corporation, as this operation is, in effect, a merger and the new concern will be known as the Stanley-Crandall Company, incorporated under the laws of Delaware.

Negotiations are said to have been going on for some time. Less than a month ago Mr. Crandall mailed a description of the sales plans to each stockholder of the old company, and it is said that 95 per cent. of them approved.

Thirteen theatres comprise the Crandall group. Those in Washington are the Metropolitan, Ambassador, Tivoli, Apollo, Savoy, Home, Avenue Grand, York, Central and a house building on Georgia Avenue. Other theatres are in Cumberland, Md.; Roanoke, Va.; and Martinsburg, W. Va. The Stanley company controls many theatres in Philadelphia and Baltimore. Its one Washington house is the newly erected Earle.

Kane Offers Annual Endowment For a Chair in Movie-Making

THE first definite step by a motion picture produced toward attracting to the industry college graduates trained in the various branches of cinema making was taken this week when Robert T. Kane, president of the Robert T. Kane productions, offered an annual $5,000 endowment for a university chair in motion picture learning.

Mr. Kane limited his list of colleges to Yale, Harvard, Princeton, University of Pennsylvania, University of California, University of Wisconsin, University of Chicago and Columbia University. The first of these institutions accepting the offer will be granted the $5,000 initial endowment payment.

"I have felt for years," he said, in explaining his plan, "that we in the industry are paying genius prices to mediocrity. This must be curbed.

"We have got to bring into the business good minds, thoroughly trained, and young men and young women who are willing to study the camera and its possibilities as well as its limitations. We must have creators of the motion picture language—persons who are capable of taking hold of and giving expression to the new medium.

"The parasitic scheme of attempting to reduce novels and stage plays to the screen play will not do. We have a new and distinct device for dramatic expression and no one seems to know what to do with it."

He said he wished especially to invite Adolph Zukor, for Famous Players; Marcus Loew for Metro-Goldwyn; Joseph M. Schenck for Warner Brothers; Richard Rowland for First National, and the Pathe Company to join him in the new move, with each of these endowing in like manner another large university or college.

"All of these men," he said, "I happen to know will look upon the suggestion favorably, and if each of them acts upon it the time will not be far off when we shall all find a definite rise in the general tone of motion pictures."

He added that aside from the annual gift from his company to cover the cost of instruction in the college, he would arrange for his experts—cameramen, directors, scenarists and players—to co-operate actively in the practical teaching of the subject. Each month he will send these craftsmen to the classrooms. His studios, he said, would be opened to the specializing students in order that they might, when possible, study picture making at first hand.

"I offer this endowment in this fashion," he said, "because I do not wish to choose any particlar college, preferring to leave it to their own alertness to determine who shall take advantage of it."

"There is no other profession or business in the world wherein the financial reward is so great as in ours. I can name at the moment eight young men earning on an average $1,000 a week in New York studios, and not one of them would be able to last a week if pitted against college trained, highly specialized and serious-minded contemporaries. We must have creative thought and competent counsel. This is the only way of obtaining it."

West Coast Theatres, Inc., Plan Two Additional Links in Chain

TWO real estate deals of huge proportions, involving more than three-quarters of a million dollars, and among the most important transactions of their kind in the theatrical history of this city, was consummated as far as the letting of the contracts were concerned, according to M. Gore, President of the West Coast Theatres, Inc. These big deals call for magnificent theatre buildings in two of Los Angeles' most important suburban communities.

One of these structures will rise at Mesa and Slauson, representing an investment of $550,000, divided as follows: $300,000 representing the cost of the building; ground value at $150,000, and building equipment representing $100,000. There will be large stores on the street level of this building, with commodious offices, apartments, and halls on the second floor. The theatre itself will be one of the most elaborate suburban show-palaces in Southern California, wit a 2,000 seating capacity, and the decorative motif, as well as the fixtures and other appointments will be of the most modern design and construction. A stage capable of housing the large variety and road attractions will be a feature of the playhouse. A huge orchestral organ will also be installed. Luxurious loge seats are but another item of the costly equipment to be provided. This superb building will, without a doubt, be among the most valued assets of this rapidly growing community.

The contract for this building was let to Bartley and Gould.

At the intersection of Vermont and 87th Streets, a building with many splendid stores, as well as a large theatre, will be erected. This will be of semi-Spanish design, representing total cost of approximately $250,000, and the contract for this structure was let to the Wasco Construction Company. The theatre portion of the building calls for a 1,500 seating capacity, with luxuriou loges, a modern orchestral pipe-organ of tremendous volume, and a decorative scheme as elaborate as any house of its size on the Pacific Coast. This theatre will also have an enormous stage with capacity for presenting large road and vaudeville attractions, and the balance of the equipment will be of the most modern and latest improved type.

The negotiations call for the erection, equipment and operation of this edifice jointly by the West Coast Theatres, Inc., and the Southside Theatres, Inc., and the completed theatre will be under the personal local management of Ralph B. Grunauer, general manager of the latter organization, which also is now erecting a beautiful theatre at the intersection of Moneta and Manchester.

According to Mr. Gore, construction on both edifices will begin immediately.

ST. LOUIS EXCHANGES CO-OPERATE WITH ARMY

Col. David L. Stone, commanding officer at Jefferson Barracks, St. Louis, has won his fight for free movies for the boys at the army camp. Through an arrangement made with the managers of the various St. Louis film exchanges Col. Stone has made it possible to give free shows of good films for the soldiers in the future.

Shirley—Selznick and Miami, Fla.!

Referring to "ten grand" and "twenty-five grand" just as though they grew on bushes, William Shirley returned from Miami last week but will remain in Schenectady for a few days. Shirley plans to erect three apartment houses in Miami as well as to become associated with Lewis J. Selznick in a big enterprise near Palm Beach, not forgetting a theatre that may be erected in Coral Gables.

Myer Freedman, with whom he was associated in Schenectady, and who recently took over the Woodlawn Theatre on a speculative basis, is also planning to wing his way via the auto to Florida, soon.

Tiffany Doing Its Part

"Souls for Sables," reviewed elsewhere in this issue of Moving Picture World, is concrete evidence, as the reviewer says, that M. H. Hoffman and his associates in Tiffany are doing their share for the independent market. Aside from its elements as motion picture entertainment, we are glad to comment on "Souls for Sables" real money that has been spent in the desire to produce a picture that would measure up in every way with the best of attractions. Money is only money—but in this case it spells sincerity. And that says a lot for independence.

William Fox to Build New Academy of Music

Another landmark of old New York is soon to disappear in the commercial building transformation of the metropolis. The Academy of Music, first home of opera in the city, is to be torn down to make way for a modern skyscraper.

With the passing of this famous playhouse a New Academy of Music will open directly opposite the old site on 14th Street on March 1, 1926, the date on which the famous theatre will close its doors. William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation and head of the Fox Circuit of Theatres, who holds the lease on the building is erecting a greater Academy of Music on the ground occupied for years by the Thalia Music Hall and Dewey Theatre.

The new Academy of Music has been planned by Mr. Fox as a "temple of music" to the public. It is now under construction and was conceived as a center for true music lovers who abound in the 14th Street district and below it. Motion pictures will also be shown.

The new structure will cost $1,500,000 and have a seating capacity of 4,900. It will have an orchestra of 100 artists with a leader of international reputation.

"I'm Weary of it all"—Biechele

"I'M weary of it all," sighed R. R. Biechele, a national director and president of the Kansas-Missouri body, upon his belated return from the Detroit meeting, having motored home by way of Minnesota. "This continual fighting and arguing is leading only to destruction. We all know it and we've all been 'preaching' about it; yet the practice continues right along in the same old groove with no effort to check it. Consequently we are going to devote our time to our own local organization in the future and this petty quibbling can go to the 'land of heat.'

"I have no personal grudge against Sydney Cohen. Yet, he knows perfectly well that he no longer is acceptable of being a leader. He contends he has the welfare of the organization in his heart. Then why doesn't he step aside for some man in whom the country will have confidence? That would be a good method of showing how much he thinks of the organization.

"No, it hardly is likely that we will adopt any string of resolutions at our next directors' meeting to effect any further affiliation with Allied. It seems quite probable that Allied will, temporarily at least, string along with the M. P. T. O. A. There is too much to be done in Kansas and Missouri. We have no time to waste. Therefore we're going to devote everything to our own body until such a time as there is a national organization which does not have rivalry and jealousy as its foundation."

Woodhull Issues Statement on Progress of M. P. T. O. A.

THE various committees of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have been working steadily and earnestly in behalf of the Independent Theatre Owners of the Country. The Administrative Committee, consisting of A. Julian Brylawski, Nathan Yamins, Harry Davis, M. E. Comerford and John Wells, has been proceeding with the securing of a business manager and the other duties of the committee, and at a meeting to be held in New York City Wednesday, September 2, it is expected that a most important announcement will be made in this regard.

The Contract Committee, of which Joseph M. Seider is chairman, has had several meetings, and on Monday, August 24th, met with representatives of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America with the purpose in view of featuring a simple equitable contract. A contract is being drawn up at this time for submission to a further meeting of the committees of both organizations.

The Legislative Committee has been busy laying out a program for various taxation relief to present to Congress when it convenes in December. These plans will require the co-operation of the theatre owners of the country and their intercession with their representatives at home, as it has always been our contention that it is the appeal of the voter direct to his Congressional representative that weighs most with the legislator. This program is a most important one as it effects every theatre owner and will be enlarged upon at a later date.

A real evidence that theatre owners appreciate the necessity of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America continuing to function for their protection is the fact that with the direct membership in the national organization we have members from every state in the Union, men who have paid their dues and are rendering us support and co-operation. This is most gratifying to our officers.

With the functioning of the business manager, as has so long been recommended but which the lack of finances heretofore prevented, it is believed that theatre owners will feel the benefits and results of an even greater Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, the organization which has so consistently fought the cause of independence in their behalf, labored and secured taxation relief and been a bulwark against the encroachment of the forces bent on monopolization and control. We are sure that theatre owners realize that if it were not for the M. P. T. O. A. these interests would have made such strides and progress that the word "independent" in so far as our industry is concerned would be but an empty title.

We want theatre owners to feel free to call on us for any and every service we can render them, and assure them that their matters will continue to receive our best and prompt attention

Report B. & K. May Invade Buffalo

Rumors of new theatres are cropping out right and left these days in Buffalo. It is now reported that Balaban & Katz have an option on a Main street site, that there will be a new picture theatre in North Main street and that plans have been filed for a new house on Genesee near Bailey, several blocks from the new house which Barney Vohwinkel is erecting and which has been leased by the Shea Amusement Company.

Frisco Theatres Cut Orchestras Because of Union Demands

As a result of demands made by the musicians' union that players in the orchestras of moving picture houses be given a twenty-six weeks' contract after a two weeks' "tryout," and that the working day be reduced from six and a half hours to six hours, theatre owners have ordered their orchestra leaders to reduce their staffs to the union minimum, commencing September 1. They have also decided to pay only the minimum union scale of wages. The union scale for San Francisco theatre musicians is $63.50 a week, but many players have been paid much more than that, some of them earning as much as $125 a week.

The demands were discussed at a meeting between the theatre managers and a committee from the musicians' union held on August 13. The union representatives reported that a new rule covering the demands had been almost unanimously adopted at a meeting of the union and that they were without power to make any change in it.

The theatre managers decided that the large amount of money involved in the long term contract prohibited them from adjusting their business to meet periodical commercial conditions and they concluded to comply with the demands.

PROJECTIONISTS ASK INCREASE

The theatres of Ottawa, Ontario, are faced with labor difficulties through the demands of the local Moving Picture Projection Machine Operators Union and the International Alliance of Theatrical Stage employes for wage increases. The projectionists have asked for wage increases ranging up to 10 per cent. while the stage employes want increases that run as high as 20 per cent. over the theatre managers have held important meetings but a settlement was not in sight the present scale. Both the employes and late in August.

Exhibitors Liable

Warning all motion picture theatre owners that they will be held liable for film contracted for in case they dispose of their house, and do not arrange for the transfer of unplayed contracts, the Albany Film Board of Trade has sent a circular letter to all exhibitors in this section of New York State.

The Albany Film Board of Trade is also warning exhibitors to see that their operators do not use pins in place of cement in patching film. Local exchanges have reported several instances where pins have been found in film being inspected upon its return to this city.

$100,000 Campaign Fund Is Goal of Filmdom for Walker

By Tom Waller

A BUDGET of $100,000 is hoped to be raised by the Motion Picture Division of the James J. Walker Mayoralty Campaign Committee.

The offer of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce directors to use their headquarters in the Times Building as the meeting place of the showmen during the campaign, has not been accepted by the committee. This, it is said, is due to the fact that the industry's position in the fight looms even larger than it did last week, thus necessitating the more commodious quarters in the old Universal offices on the third floor of 1600 Broadway.

The division held one of its primary meetings on August 24, when about thirty prominent film men were present. The big point of this session was the naming of campaign officers and the devising of means to secure subscriptions to the cause. A finance committee, headed by A. H. Schwartz, well known Brooklyn exhibitor, was appointed. Lunches and benefits will constitute one of the chief means of securing money, it was later reported. As to whether individual amounts will be solicited from the campaigners was not made known.

Greater New York has actually 450 theatres. Of these Loew controls about 50; Fox approximotaly 15, and Famous, about 4. As far as could be learned none of these circuits were represented at the August 24 meeting. It seems assured, judging from reports from reliable sources at this time that Fox will enter his houses. The status in this respect of the other chains could not be ascertained.

At the request of Senator Walker, it is reported, Samuel Berman was made secretary of the division. Berman presided at the session early this week. Charles O'Reilly, head of the T. O. C. C., has been made chairman of the division, with Sydney S. Cohen in the capacity of his associate.

Before the August 24 meeting closed Cohen introduced a resolution endorsing Walker for the candidacy of Manhattan's Mayor. This move, it is said, met with unanimous approval, as in the case last week when Cohen, as head of the T. O. C. C. directors presented a similar resolution.

Great Leap in Membership Of Independent Association

IN his first formal report, submitted to the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, Frederick H. Elliott, general manager, revealed that the membership of the organization has grown 45 per cent in two months.

When Mr. Elliott was elected to office on June 15 the association had seventy-one members, twenty-eight producers or distributors and forty-five exchanges. On August 15 there were 103 active members and two associate members. The active list now shows thiryt-five producer-distributors and seventy-eight exchanges.

"To the best of my knowledge," said Mr. Elliott in his report, "this is the largest by far of any organization within the inustry as regards corporate membership."

At the last meeting of the I. M. P. A. the Krause Mfg. Co. was elected to associate membership and eleven active members added to the rolls. These are: Freedom Film Co., Buffalo; Home State Film Co., Inc., Dallas; Independent Film Service, Inc., Dallas; Oklahoma Specialty Film Co. Oklahoma City; Standard Film Exchange, Inc., Pittsburgh; Oklahoma Independent Film Service, Inc. Oklahoma City; Lands Film Co. Pittsburgh; Renown Pictures Indianapolis; Capitol Film Exchange, Indianapolis; Midwest Distributing Co., Milwaukee; Arkansas Specialty Film Co., Little Rock.

A large part of the meeting was taken up in consideration of the Connecticut tax situation. Mr. Elliott, who has been in close touch with the situation since the injunction hearing which resulted so disastrously for the industry, submitted a proposal for special action by the independents, and his suggestion was unanimously indorsed. His report of conditions was confirmed by Lester S. Tobias, of New Haven, regional director for the I. M. P. A. I. E. Chadwick, president, will appoint a special legislative committee to consider the situation

SEATTLE KEEPS NIGHT "MOVIES"

Efforts on the part of the Seattle censor board, backed by the mayor, to have the city council pass an ordinance making all night picture houses close at midnight have again proved futile. After several meetings stretched over a period of weeks, the council has tabled the petition for four weeks, on the ground that the evidence was not convincing and lacked proof, whereas prominent ministers, club women and some private citizens who had quietly investigated conditions in these houses on their own initiative, testified in favor of the houses, alleging that all were well patrolled by capable matrons, that law and order were preserved and that no offensive conduct was observed.

HOWSON SUCCEEDS MRS. KEATING

Albert Sydney Howson has been appointed head of Warner Bros. literary department to succeed Mrs. Pearl Keating resigned. Howson will be located at the New York office of the company and is already at work selecting books and plays for the 1926-27 program.

Managers' Training School Begins With 42 in Class

THE opening session of the Paramount Theatre Managers' Training School, Monday morning, August 17. There were present the forty-two members of the class who had been selected from about 500 applicants. They average in age about 27 and come from every section of the country. Six members of the first class were enrolled because of their proficiency in speaking three or more foreign languages. These men will be especially trained for work in the foreign field.

John F. Barry, director of the school, welcomed the students and read telegrams expressing good wishes. There were lectures on the history of the motion picture by Robert E. Welsh, editor of Moving Picture World, and Joseph Seidleman, assistant manager of the Foreign Department of Famous Players-Lasky. Norman Collyer, assistant secretary of Famous Players-Lasky, lectured on "The Position of the Motion Picture in the Economic Structure of American Business." Edmond Raeburn explained the United States theatre map and the economies which justify the theatre circuits.

Edwin Porter, who directed the first motion picture, "The Great Train Robbery," explained how direction twenty-five years ago differed from the methods of today. The first film, now distributed by Hal Hodes, was shown and Mr. Hodes also spoke on the production methods of earlier days. The 1912 version and 1922 version of "The Man From Home" was screened to show the advancement in production during the last decade.

Glen Allvine explained the campaign for "The Wanderer" and this picture was viewed by the students at the Criterion Theatre. The press sheet of "The Ten Commandments" was studied and students viewed the picture at the Rivoli. The trade papers were studied, Robert E. Welsh explained how Moving Picture World can be used effectively by managers. Editors of the other trade papers will carry on this series during subsequent weeks.

Ralph Kohn, secretary and treasurer of Famous Players-Lasky, gave the first of the lectures on "The History of Paramount." The first division of the subject, "Types of Theatres," was introduced by Ed Olmstead, who explained the Class A metropolitan theatre, its departmental organization and how the management and policies of such a theatre differ from others.

Russell Holman of the Advertising Department of Famous Players gave the first lecture of the series on "Press Sheets."

Five days of each week there are seven full hour periods, with three full hour periods on Saturday. Each evening a definite assignment is given the members of the class on the material of the day.

First National's Sales Meet Develops Keen Enthusiam

FIRST NATIONAL PICTURES reports that its three-day national sales convention, held Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday at the Roosevelt Hotel in New York City, attended by every branch and district manager, was the most successful and enthusiastic gathering of sales executives that it has ever held. The managers left Thursday night and Friday morning for the respective territories keyed up to undertake the biggest selling campaign of the company.

E. A. Eschmann, director of distribution, who called the convention, imparted to his men his own enthusiasm for the product scheduled for the next fifty-two weeks and outlined to them the sales policies which he has worked out with the aid of his assistants and company executives for the new product.

On the first day of the session the managers were addressed by Mr. Eschmann, C. M. Steele, A. W. Smith, Jr.; Stanley Hatch and C. W. Bunn of the distribution department on sales policies and problems, and by C. F. Chandler of the advertising department, and Allan Glenn, supervisor of exploitation on advertising and exploitation possibilities of the new product. After dinner at the Hofbrau House the visitors were entertained at "Louis XIV" to see Leon Errol, recently signed by First National to star in a series of pictures, the first of which will be "Clothes Make the Pirate."

Richard A. Howland, general manager of production, and Samuel Spring, secretary and treasurer, were the principal speakers at the Thursday session, following a three-hour round table conference on selling problems and other important angles of operation. Mr. Rowland imparted to the branch and district managers his own enthusiasm for the new pictures now in work and in active preparation, both at the New York and the Hollywood studios, having just returned from a three weeks' trip to the Pacific Coast.

A letter was read from President Robert Lieber regretting his inability to be present.

Other speakers at the Wednesday conferences were Earl Hudson, production manager at the Eastern studio; Mrs. Florence Strauss, scenario editor; R. W. Perkins, general counsel; W. C. Boothby, financial comptroller; Mark Kellogg, director of advertising and publicity; E. B. Johnson, manager of foreign distribution; Bruce Gallup, manager of advertising; Lynde Denig, manager of publicity.

In the evening Mr. Rowland and Mr. Eschmann gave a banquet for the visiting managers at the Ritz-Carlton, followed by a dance.

On Thursday the managers were taken to the studio to see the companies at work on "The Unguarded Hour," "The Scarlet Saint," "Clothes Make the Pirate" and other films.

Montreal Picture House Receipts Show Prosperity During Summer

PICTURE theatres in Montreal, Quebec, have been exceptionally prosperous this summer and the facts cannot be disputed because the situation is plainly designated in the statistics of the city's Amusement Tax Department. Figures for the month of July have just been issued by Georges Crump, chief inspector of the amusement tax for Montreal, showing that the total patronage at all Montreal theatres during the month was 1,529,964, as compared with 1,155,085 during the month of July, 1924, an increase over the corresponding period last year of 374,879 admissions.

The amusement tax revenue in the City of Montreal shows a corresponding increase for the month of July over July of 1924 of $9,800.18. In the Province of Quebec there is no Provincial Amusement Tax, the municipalities of the Province being authorized to collect their own ticket tax for the benefit of local hospitals and other charities. The city's revenue from this source during last July amounted to $41,740.16 all told.

An interesting detail is that the Montreal theatres are divided into two classifications, one being those which hold bonds by reason of which they are able to make returns on the basis of their own box office reports. The other class comprises those theatres which are required to use the actual amusement tax tickets along with their own tickets.

In the bonded class, the number of patrons during July, 1925, was 1,079,623, the tax revenue therefrom being $33,406.62, as against a total patronage in July, 1924, of 890,054 persons, giving a tax revenue of $30,142.15. In the theatres where tax tickets are employed, the number of admissions was 450,341 during last July, the revenue in the amusement tax therefrom being $8,333.54.

The Province of Quebec permits the sale and consumption of liquors of practically all kinds and, naturally, much money is spent on drinks. There is hardly any effect, if at all, on the theatre patronage because of this fact, it is frequently stated. There is a great tourist trade in Montreal and other Quebec cities and this, too, helps, rather than hinders, the theatrical business in Montreal.

Albany Business Men Petition Retention of Herman Vineberg

Three hundred business men of Albany, including presidents of banks, manufacturers and others who frequent the Mark Strand Theatre, Albany, N. Y., signed a petition last week asking that Herman Vineberg, who has been handling the theatre for two years or more, be retained as manager rather than shifted to the Albany and Regent theatres, recently acquired by the Strand company, and which will be operated in conjunction with the larger and better known house. The petition has been sent on to Walter Hays and Moe Mark.

Present plans call for important shifts in the personnel of the Strand forces in this city and Troy, brought about through the acquisition of the two Albany houses and the reopening of the American in Troy. These plans call for Ben Stern, assistant manager of the Troy, to become manager of the Lincoln, Tony Veiller to be transferred from that theatre to the management of the Mark Strand, with Mr. Vineberg given the management of two houses rather than one, although the two are not as large nor do they cater to the same patronage as the Mark Strand. The American is to be handled by Mr. Roberts in conjunction with the Troy.

The Bright Spot in Rensselaer, which has not been particularly bright during the summer owing to its being closed, shone forth on August 22 when it was reopened with Charles Miller at the helm

It now looks as though the film boys would be calling Irving Goldsmith, of tne firm of Harrington and Goldsmith, of Saratoga Springs, operating a theatre on Broadway in that city, "Assemblyman Goldsmith," for he is in the race for a seat in the lower house of the Legislature. Mr. Goldsmith served two years as deputy Attorney General and has a host of friends.

The lovely Carmel Myers has been cast for a prominent role in Benjamin Christianson's initial production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Carmel is seen too seldom, her admirers assert. So Harry Rapf put her right to work!

Cohen and Kernblite, who control the situation in Binghamton and Endicott with a string of seven houses, announce that they will remodel the Stone Theatre in Binghamton next spring.

A small book containing the payroll of employes at the old Majestic in Troy was unearthed last week by Jacob Rosenthal, who now owns the Rose in that city but who was connected with the Majestic for many a year. The name of Wanda Hawley appears on the payroll as the pianist at the Majestic and receiving the stupendous salary of $7 a week. Miss Hawley originally hailed from Troy and pictures in which she appears always bring out the crowds.

Meet Oscar Perrin, new resident manager of the Capitol Theatre in Albany. Mr. Perrin succeeds Edward Lyons, who has returned to New York, and from Mr. Perrin's long experience in the business you can bet your bottom dollar that the Capitol will be found right on top of the heap this winter. Burlesque and road attractions will be featured. Mr. Perrin resigned two weeks ago as manager of the Buckley theatres.

There is a polo player among the exhibitors of Central New York, a rare bird as it were and the only one of its kind to frequent Film Row. Samuel Goldstein, with houses in Utica as well as a chain in Massachusetts, lays the claim to being a polo player and there is none to dispute him. Mr. Goldstein was in town during the past week. He has a wonderful home in Massachusetts, and is a recognized breeder of fine horse flesh.

It appears that the deal whereby the Famous Players was to take over the four houses of Farash Theatres, Inc., in Schenectady, is still hanging fire. At least the final papers haven't been signed yet and as a result the management of Farash Theatres is booking pictures only from day to day. According to one report, Famous Players would like to enter into some sort of an agreement with Proctor's to the end that they would not be forced to buck the new 2,200-seat house being erected by the latter.

The biggest day in Myer Schine's life, and there has been many a big one in the career of the man who started with nothing and who is now part owner of a chain of sixty-five theatres in New York State, will occur on August 30 when he will walk up the aisle to the tune of Lohengrin's Wedding March. Miss Feldman of Johnstown will be the bride.

Walter Hays dropped in town last Tuesday on his way back to Buffalo, from a vacation spent in the White Mountains, looking very fit, too.

In a city where all the other theatres run on Sunday, and where that day goes far in meeting the expenses of the week, there is one house that is closed and where any attempt to open on Sunday would probably be met with such opposition that it would ruin business for the remainder of the week. This house is the Cameo in Schenectady, located in the exclusive Bellevue section where Sunday movies are not wanted, although the residents journey downtown for their entertainment on Sunday night. The Cameo is run by George Dwore, who never plays a western and who is a lawyer by occupation.

James Shultis opened Studio Hall in Woodstock on August 18, using "Broken Laws" as the feature. When the American in Troy reopened Saturday night, several from the F. B. O. exchange in Albany, were on hand to extend congratulations to the management.

The best cable Dave Seymour has received since he has been running the Pontiac in Saranac Lake came the other day from William Morris. It was a contribution of $50 for a benefit being staged by Mr. Seymour for one of the local institutions.

How's this for a record? And it speaks pretty well for Morris Silverman of the Happy Hour and Pearl theatres in Schenectady. In nine years there hasn't been a change in his working force with the exception of a couple of girls, and one couldn't blame them for quitting Mr. Silverman when a husband came along. Incidentally, Mr. Silverman announces that he will erect a new theatre next spring and close the Pearl.

From now on H. L. Berinstein of Elmira will be in town two or three times a month. The Berinstein boys are likable chaps, always smiling and as friendly as their late father. Now that the boys are doing it alone, Julius will look after the two houses in Albany, making his home in an apartment at the Colonial and spending a portion of his time at the Palace in Troy. Harry will be up from Elmira to help him out from time to time. The Van Curler in Schenectady, also run by the Berinsteins, opened Monday with A. J. Rachell as manager.

With her mother out of town, making it necessary for her to do the housework as well as look after the Crescent Theatre, Betty Feuer of Schenectady is about the busiest individual in that city, so busy in fact that she doesn't have time even to use the automobile she bought a few months ago. Business is good, so Miss Feuer isn't much on the protest.

James Roach, now handling the Farley houses in Schenectady, is taking a vacation. Yes, the vacation runs from 11 o'clock at night until 9 o'clock the next morning. Since assuming his new position Mr. Roach is a decidedly busy man, to whom the ordinary meaning of vacation possesses no appeal. In running the serial "Play Ball" Mr. Roach personally gave away over 600 baseballs the other day to the boys of Schenectady and at the end said that his arm was as lame as though he had pitched nine innings.

Claude Wade runs a theatre in North Creek and likewise the village hotel. He boasts the best pictures at the theatre and the best beds in the entire Adirondack region. Not that there is any connection between the two, except that the combination, through assured patronage, enables Mr. Wade to strike a good bank balance each week end.

When the American Locomotive Works and the General Electric plant close down each Friday night in Schenectady, hundreds of dollars that would ordinarily drift the way of the picture theatres of that city ride out of town in everything from a Ford to Rolls-Royce. In a city of mechanics, there is now an automobile to every three persons in Schenectady.

Bill Smalley of Cooperstown is playing the part of host these days to his mother and sister, who are spending the month of August with the genial exhibitor. They have reason to be proud of Mr. Smalley, for he has built one of the best chains in all New York state and one in which cleanliness is next to godliness.

Nate Robbins of Utica, whose houses were recently taken over by Famous Players, draws down the nice little stipend of $25,000 a year for handling the theatres in Watertown, Syracuse and Utica. Not a bad arrangement.

With the county fair drawing thousands of persons to Gouverneur, the Graylin Theatre in that village used a stock company, changing the play each night during the week, and with prices running from 50 cents to a dollar.

C. L. Gardner of the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany rather welcomes a rainy night. He explains by saying that when it rains the people can't ride and a front porch isn't half as appealing as an orchestra seat in his house.

Constance Pedone, cashier of the Strand in Schenectady, is at a hospital in that city recovering from an operation for appendicitis. The Barcli in Schenectady is due to reopen the fore part of September with a change of pictures daily. It is possible that the Albany may close for two or three weeks for renovating as soon as the Barcli reopens.

J. B. Hart, who has a couple of theatres in Bennington, Vt., was in town the other day. Mr. Hart took a vacation last winter and went to Florida with a couple thousand dollars in his pocket for expense money. He invested in real estate and incidentally cleaned up $40,000.

William Benton of the Congress in Saratoga ran "The Gold Rush" for part of last week, opening on Sunday. It was rather hard luck, however, that the mercury jumped to the nineties and remained there for four straight days. Still, business was not bad.

Mrs. Elizabeth Meeker will reopen the Casino in Waterford the fore part of September. The Lyceum at Pawling is also open.

"The Freshman" has just been booked for the Troy and the Strand Theatres, the Robbins circuit, as well as for every house in the Schine Chain.

The State Theatre in Schenectady, is being repainted and the furniture is also being re-upholstered. Both the auditorium and lobby are being redecorated.

Charles Dery, manager of the Empire in Port Henry and who recently adopted a 3-months-old child, is now seriously considering the adoption of another as a companion to the first.

Buffalo, N. Y.

The original deal whereby the Kreiger Brothers of Batavia were to have taken over the three Border Amusement Company, Buffalo houses is off. Now David Kreiger alone has taken over the Ellen Terry, one of the links in the chain, and will at once redecorate both interior and exterior and erect a big new electric sign.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A dandy comedy drama; as good as "Hottentot." If you ran that one you should run this one. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

NEVER SAY DIE. (6 reels). Star, Douglas MacLean. This is an entertaining comedy drama; not up to the standard of "Going Up" but a satisfactory show. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

F. B. O.

ALIAS MARY FLINN. (5,550 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. Boys, if you are not playing this series, step on the gas. They are very good and should please any type of patronage. This one very good. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Very good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. A good picture. Better than any Thomson before. Business was satisfactory for two-day run. General class, city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5,291 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Showed this two nights and turned people away second night. Thomson pictures get better each time. Silver King does some clever acting. Thomson and Silver are our best drawing cards here. Would advise every small town to book them. Audience appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Ross S. King, Opera House (250 seats), Barnes City, Iowa.

BROKEN LAWS. (6,413 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. A very good picture but did not get them in. Lost money on a two-day showing. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

GALLOPING GALLAGHER. (4,700 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fair western. Lots of fighting but the religion injected into the rough house scenes did not look just right even to me and I am no crank on religion. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers, town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

SCAR HANAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. A good, fast western picture, but Canutt can't compare with Thomson or Custer of F. B. O. features. "Scar Hanan" is just an ordinary western story about a son seeking revenge for the death of his father. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Farmers and merchants, town of 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

SCAR HANAN. (6,000 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. Canutt a better drawing card than Mix or Thomson for me. He sure is a good rider. Hope F. B. O. keeps him in westerns. Good luck, "Yak." Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

WHITE FANG. (5,800 feet). Star, Strongheart (dog). This picture went over big. Will appeal to all classes in summer resort of 1,500. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Robert F. Cronen, Rockaway Theatre (300 seats), Rockaway, Oregon.

These dependable tips come from exhibitors who tell the truth about pictures to help you book your program intelligently. "It is my utmost desire to serve my fellow man," is their motto.

Use the tips; follow the advice of exhibitors who agree with your experience on pictures you both have run.

Send tips to help others. This is your department, run for you and maintained by your good-will.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Fred's latest but I do not think this is as good as some of his previous pictures. Silver King rings the bell. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Better class and ranchers. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

First National

ASHES OF VENGEANCE. Star, Norma Talmadge. Had many to say that this was the best costume picture they ever saw. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Good appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Just fair; inclines to be immoral. Draw general class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Great audience picture. Received many comments on this one. Keeps you guessing till the final sequence as how it will end. That's entertainment. Step on it. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, one hundred per cent. High class town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (200 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

BRASS BOTTLE. (5,790 feet). Star cast. This picture is a real queer picture. Had some censure it. Not good for children to see. Some laughs, but would say it is no picture for a small town. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

FURY. (8,709 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. A very good program picture that will please about seventy per cent. The worst feature is the length of show for a small town. Being in nine reels, too draggy in places. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy per cent. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,600 feet). Star cast. An extra good picture but not the shut-'em-up kind but will please. Pleased here. I call it a good picture. Tone, ninety per cent. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

HER REPUTATION. (7 reels). Star, May McAvoy. Played this as a program picture and had more good comments on it than I get on lots of specials. Tone, O. K. Appeal, 100 per cent. No as special—too old. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Average admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

HUSBANDS AND LOVERS. (7,883 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Many comments on this one from the adults as it pleased them one hundred per cent. Not enough action for children. Wedding scenes were great. Picture ends fine and audience leaves with a smile. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

JEALOUS HUSBANDS. (6,500 feet). Star, Earle Williams. This is a real good show that belies the fool title that adorns it. There is very good work done by Ben Alexander as the son who is sent from his mother by the jealous father. Not a great deal of unnecessary footage. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed classes, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

MIGHTY LAK A ROSE. (8,026 feet). Star cast. A mighty fine picture that will please one hundred per cent as it has everything that will please all classes of people. If you haven't played this picture, play it. A good one. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

MY SON. (6,552 feet). Star, Alla Nazimova. One of the best pictures of the year, but it didn't do business for me. Good tone. Yes for Sunday and as special. Admission twenty-five cents. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

NEW TOYS. (7,811 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Good business on our favorite star, but it did not satisfy my patrons. They told me they like him in heavy dramatic pictures. Kids like it as it has plenty of laughter. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, thirty per cent. High class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

PAINTED PEOPLE. (5,700 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A first class, entertaining picture which held interest all the way through. Many good laughs. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

Fox

AGAINST ALL ODDS. (4,850 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A fairly good western picture that measures head and shoulders above any other Jones productions. Good for almost any house. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Good program western. Good tone. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

DANTE'S INFERNO. (5,680 feet). Star cast. Went unusually well, considering the hot weather. It certainly is "different." Good tone. Big appeal. Yes as special. Draw all kinds, city of 100,000. Admission 10-20. S. H. Borisky, American and Royal Theatres, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

FOLLY OF VANITY. (5,250 feet). Star cast. Not so good, not so bad. Don't promise too much. Not a special. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GERALD CRANSTON'S LADY. (6,074 feet). Star cast. Good picture didn't draw much but pleased all who saw it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GOLD AND THE GIRL. (4,512 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A dandy one from start to finish. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

HEART BUSTER. (4,500 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A regular Mix show with Tom in a bit of dare-deviltry spiced with humor in such a way that a small town audience will eat it up. Mix is there every time in this town and the majority of people haven't missed one show. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre, Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LADIES TO BOARD. (6,112 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Not as good as Tom's best but better than most. A peculiar situation for Mix as the prop of an old ladies' home in the east. Some long drawn scenes but "Pee-Wee" Holmes helps out a lot and the show goes over fine. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LAST MAN ON EARTH. Star cast. A good comedy but not strong enough for feature attraction. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Below average audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

MAN WHO CAME BACK. (8,272 feet). Star cast. Good strong picture but didn't draw much. Hot weather. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats). Greenfield, Tennessee.

NORTH OF HUDSON BAY. (6 reels). Star, Tom Mix. Scenic beauty, but slower in action than most Mix productions. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

ROUGHNECK. (7,619 feet). Star cast. Slightly rough but pleased a Saturday night crowd. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

SCARLET HONEYMOON. (5,030 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Good program picture. Fox didn't hold up the standard he set with "That French Lady," of course we all know why. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

STAR DUST TRAIL. (4,686 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Good little picture. Worth showing as a program picture. Tone, okay. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Just about as good as Tom ever made. The dog is good for a few extra tickets. Tone, good. Special, yes. Good appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix with Duke (dog) and Tony (horse). Good business. Good tone. No as special. Draw general class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

TROUBLE SHOOTER. (5,702 feet). Star, Tom Mix. If it's a Mix it's bound to please Mix fans. This one is good. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WARRENS OF VIRGINIA. (6,000 feet). Star cast. They tried to put action in this one, but failed. The direction was very sloppy. Imagine a girl of Civil War days wearing jazzy stockings! It just wasn't done. Fair tone. Appeal 70 per cent. No for Sunday or special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WINGS OF YOUTH. (5,340 feet). Star cast. Good picture. Full of pep and sparkles with life all the time. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

To get the very best help from the dependable tips which exhibitors send in, remember E. W. Collins' advice:

"Study the reports and discover the exhibitors whose experience is the same as yours on pictures you both have played. Then follow such exhibitors on other pictures."

It's good advice, volunteered in the same unselfish spirit of helpfulness that keeps tips coming

Naturally, in order for exhibitors to use the advice, the boys have to stick to the tip sending.

So—folks—don't miss out on your report sending.

KEEP THE TIPS COMING!
VAN.

WINNER TAKE ALL. (5,949 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Just the type of picture the fans like to see Jones featured in. Fox should keep him in this class of picture. Print fair. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Metro-Goldwyn

ALONG CAME RUTH. (5,000 feet). Star, Viola Dana. One of the best comedy dramas that has come to town in a long while. Nothing spectacular, but a real good show that will pack them in if advertised properly. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ARAB. (6,710 feet). Star, Ramon Novarro. Why go to Algiers for the desert? It does not look near as real, nor are the characters as convincing as the sand hills about Hollywood. Lot of money spent on a very ordinary production. Novarro does not get much of a chance and Alice Terry just looks pretty. General class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

BROKEN BARRIERS. (6,717 feet). Star cast. Fairly good picture. The ten big stars are all that got it by. Tone O. K. Appeal 80 per cent. No as special. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Average admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

CHEAPER TO MARRY. (5,921 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. Not a bad comedy-drama. Will pass with plenty of advertising in a town that doesn't mind long drawn-out pictures with two reel plots. Mixed classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DADDY'S GONE A-HUNTING. (5,831 feet). Star, Percy Marmont. A snappy title that drew them in and helped me bust up a tent show. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Doubtful for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Average admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

GREED. (10,067 feet). Star cast. Four days to ordinary business. Picture pleased about half of our patrons. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Stars, John Gilbert, Aileen Pringle. A disappointment at the box office and as a pleaser. Just got by. Tone not so good. Fair appeal. No for Sunday, yes as special where it appeals. Draw better class, city 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Stars, John Gilbert. Eileen Pringle. One of Elinor Glyn's best. Acting very good. It won't break any records. Tone good. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

JANICE MEREDITH. Star, Marion Davies. Great production that keeps you interested from beginning to end. With extra good music to this sit in your box office and listen to them applaud. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred per cent. High class town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

REVELATION. (8,752 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Very good production. Even though some may think it too long. Good music will put this over well. It pleased almost everyone. Even the kids were interested from beginning to end. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. High class town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

SILENT ACCUSER. (6 reels). Star, Peter the dog. A great show. Everyone liked this and we had good business for three days. General class city of 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss. Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,750 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. Just another society story with a bit of comedy and spice that helps it along so that it will get by. A show that will not bring the general class of a small town. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty-five per cent. Mixed class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star cast. A fine picture which lost money for me on one day showing. No fault of the picture, however—Chautauqua week opposition. Fair tone. Appeal good. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

SO THIS IS MARRIAGE. (6,300 feet). Star, Conrad Nagel. Not so bad for a picture with this title. Colored bits were nice and helped it to draw. What this theatre needs is more and more colored pictures and there are not enough made. Why? You can get by with this show by advertising. Fair tone. Appeal 90 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw working class, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

WAY OF A GIRL. (6 reels). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Not a knockout as I was led to believe. May please where Eleanor Boardman is liked. She don't draw here. Print new. Tone, fair. Sunday, maybe. Special, no. Not much audience appeal. Better class and ranchers. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

WHITE DESERT. (6,464 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. Supported by rough and ready Pat O'Malley. This picture is well worth showing. Snow slides wonderful. Filmed in Colorado at the foot of Moffat tunnel. tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Better class and ranchers. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado

WHITE SISTER. Star, Lillian Gish. This is a picture that will not please everybody. A beautiful sad story of a young girl who takes the veil believing her sweetheart to be dead and the tragic ending when the lovers meet and they realize that a reunion is impossible as she is the bride of the church. A wonderful acted and directed photoplay.

Lillian Gish has a sweetness of soul no other actress possesses. This masterpiece will be appreciated only by intelligent and spiritual audiences. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerrville, Texas.

YOLANDA. (9 reels). Star, Marion Davies. Fine show. We had the nine reel version cut from the twelve reel one and saved us forty-five minutes of tiresomeness. Action moves with well regulated speed and photography is excellent throughout. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed classes town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

ZANDER THE GREAT. (6,844 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A wonderful picture that will entertain and please all classes. Boost it to the last penny. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Average admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

Paramount

ADVENTURE. (6,632 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Good production. Fine acting and realistic storm scenes. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ANY WOMAN. (5,963 feet). Star, Alice Terry. Usually run Alice Terry pictures two days. This, I believe, is one of her weakest with same old plot. Ran one day to fair business. Tone, doubtful. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Better class and ranchers. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

ARE PARENTS PEOPLE? (6,586 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. This is just a motion picture. It failed to arouse any enthusiasm here. A few walked out on it. A few old ladies said it was good, but the majority said it was too slow and lifeless. It seems to fool around all night and not get anywhere. Betty Bronson is supposed to be the star but she does not have much to do. Menjou is pretty good. The advertising matter failed to draw. Tone, okay. Special, no. Appeal, fair. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Fine western. Thrills, oh boy. People just raved about this. Good play. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-eight percent. Farm class town of 155. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

CHARMER. (6,076 feet). Star, Pola Negri. Her best picture, from our point of view, this star has made. Has popular audience appeal and seemed to please all the way. Pola has a dandy part in this and makes a good impression. General class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,994 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A magnificently produced feature with Gloria doing some great acting, that did not bring film rental at the box office. It takes more than Paramount or Gloria to bring them in—it takes a real story. Now that she has had her fling, let us hope for a box office picture or two. (Suppose Meighan will have to do "Romeo and Juliet" to keep pace). General class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

MEN AND WOMEN. (6,232 feet). Star cast. Good picture; above program schedule. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MONSIEUR BEAUCAIRE. (9,932 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. It's all right if your people like costume stuff but mine don't. Paramount sure draws their features out; this one could have been three reels shorter and would have been just as good. Good acting all through. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special with regard to above. Draw farmers and merchants, town 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

THREE POPULAR PARAMOUNT PLAYERS

NIGHT CLUB. (5,725 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. An extra good comedy. People here like him better every picture. Business on his pictures is picking up. This one did an extra good business against heavy opposition. As a comedian I think Griffith can't be beat. I only hope my people find it out before Paramount does. Tone, okay. Sunday, okay. Special, yes. Extra good appeal. All classes town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

NIGHT CLUB. (5,722 feet). Star, Raymond Griffith. Just a fair picture. Fair tone. No as special. Draw general class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

OPEN ALL NIGHT. (6,867 feet). Star, Viola Dana. A rotten show for all-star cast, especially in small town. Patrons went out disgusted. Viola Dana had been one of our best bets. No for Sunday or special. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. Did pretty good with it. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw all kinds, city 100,000. Admission 10-20. S. H. Borisky, American and Royal Theatres, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

POLA NEGRI PICTURES. I think this will be my last knock on poor old Pola for I am now paying for her pictures but I positively refuse to pay the express on them to get them here so we just let them lay on the shelf in the exchange. I get another picture to take her place and both I and Paramount make money on the deal, whereas if I played them I would lose. I think it a hell of a note when an exhibitor has to buy a picture that he positively cannot play and get some other picture that he does want. Personally I think Pola is an excellent actress, but I haven't seen her in a good picture since "Passion." My crowd positively refuse to sit through her later pictures. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

SAINTED DEVIL. (8,633 feet). Star, Rudolph Valentino. Fair picture: fair business in our style house which is neighborhood and don't care much for that class of picture. Draw all kinds, city 100,000. Admission 10-20. S. H. Borisky, American and Royal Theatres, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

STORY WITHOUT A NAME. (7,912 feet). Star cast. Might have been called "The Picture Without a Pull." Picture was rather good of the type, but it had absolutely no drawing power. Only 55 adults and 18 kids had enough curiosity to come out and see what the story was. Fair appeal. No as special. Draw all classes, small town 1,312. Admission 10-20, 15-25. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (300 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

WANDERER OF THE WASTELAND. (6,700 feet). Star cast. Very good western followed the story fairly well and the coloring was something of a novelty; some liked it and some were disappointed. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Fair appeal. Small town class and farmers town of 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

Pathe

GIRL SHY. (7,457 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. No doubt Lloyd's best comedy. A good story and some "wise cracks." Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, ninety per cent. Farmers and mixed class town of 600. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

GIRL ON THE STAIRS. (6,234 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. Very good. A fine mystery play and with Patsy you can't go wrong on buying it. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety-five per cent. Farm class town of 155. Admission 15-30. Robert W. Hines, Hines Theatre (250 seats), Loyalton, South Dakota.

RECKLESS ROMANCE. (5,550 feet). Al Christie Comedy. Created a fair impression with the few that saw it; however, it did not draw for some reason. On a two day showing lost money. Tone none. Fair appeal. No for Sunday or as special. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

United Artists

IRON TRAIL. This picture was very good, scenery especially so—but no box office pull. They have to be mighty good to pull them in these days. Good tone. Fair appeal. Possibly for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town 1,312. Admission 10-20, 15-25. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (300 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

ONE EXCITING NIGHT. (10 reels). Star cast. A thrilling picture, but too long; it took it too long to get started. By that time the people were worn out. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday and special, with regard to above. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Average admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels. Star, Mary Pickford. My patrons thought this was the best picture Mary had ever made, although a little too long. Tone O. K. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday, absolutely as special. Draw all classes, town 2,000. Average admission 10-20. L. H. Griefe, Opera House (450 seats), Windsor, Missouri.

TESS OF THE STORM COUNTRY. (10 reels). Star, Mary Pickford. Nothing need be said of this picture other than if any house has not yet shown it for some time, then get it—or get it again—as the case may be. It's a good show. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw working class, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Universal

BURNING TRAIL. Star, William Desmond. A very good western. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

DON DAREDEVIL. Star, Jack Hoxie. Good outdoor picture. Plenty of action. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

EXCITEMENT. (4,912 feet). Star, Laura La Plante. Good one. A little overdrawn in spots. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, sixty-five per cent. Farmers and mixed class town of 600. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

FIFTH AVENUE MODELS. Star, Mary Philbin. This is good entertainment; nothing big or spectacular but the star is attractive and the plot is satisfactory. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

FIGHTING FURY. (4,491 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. This picture didn't draw for me although I don't think it was the fault of the picture. Quite an interesting story in which Hoxie does fair work. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair appeal. Farmers and merchants town of 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

FOOL'S HIGHWAY. (6,800 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. One of the poorest pictures I have had the misfortune to get hold of. An underworld story that don't get anywhere. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Did good business on this one and it was very good. Lots of comedy all the way through and also lots of action. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, town 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

HUNCHBACK OF NOTRE DAME. (11,000 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. This photoplay takes rank among the movies masterpieces and is one of the most magnificent and stupendous that ever has been made. A cinema version of Victor Hugo's great novel of a historic romance of the reign of Louis XI and the year 1482. This production is a triumph of the screen art and Wallace Worsley must be a director of the first rank, but the greatest praise must go to Lon Chaney in his portrayal of the Hunchback. Nothing like this has ever been equalled before and he is supported by our superb Ernest Torrence, the lovely Patsy Ruth Miller and Norman Kerry the gallant knight. This picture will please any audience anywhere, anytime. City and country class town of 3,000. Admission 20-50. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre, Kerryville, Texas.

OH DOCTOR. (6,507 ft.). Star Reginald Denny. Get behind this one. Advertise it and it will get the money and please the people. It is a very good comedy drama. Not quite as good as the story, however, but much better than the average picture. Tone, okay. Special, yes. Good appeal. All classes in town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

PHANTOM HORSEMAN. Star, Jack Hoxie. A bit old, but still all right for a program western. Print in fairly good shape. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five percent. Farmers and mixed class town of 600. H. P. McFadden, Reel Theatre, Matoma, Kansas.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This one was a knockout. Book it and go the limit with it. It kept them laughing all the time and they didn't know what to expect next. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Appeal, one hundred percent. Farmers and merchants town of 450. Admission 15-30. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

RIDING KID FROM POWDER RIVER. (5,727 feet.) Star, Hoot Gibson. This is positively the best Gibson picture we have played to date and hope the balance of his productions are as good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Great audience appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

RIDIN' PRETTY. Star, William Desmond. Desmond is not nearly as bad as the other Universal "he-men" but the picture itself cannot be praised. It is an ordinary story, made in the usual ten year-old style of ride-'im-cowboy thriller. Will get by fine in some places. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw working class, town 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

RIDIN' THUNDER. Star, Jack Hoxie. Rotten. Hoxie I consider is the last of all the western stars. His pictures are too darn slow. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

SUNSET TRAIL. Star, William Desmond. Just a fair program offering neither good or bad, but you can get by with it. Print fair. Tone, okay. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Poor appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TORNADO. (6,575 feet). Star, House Peters. Very good. Wonderful tornado scene and a good story. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday and as special. Town 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

TURMOIL. (7 reels). This is a White List picture that is well worth showing in any theatre. Has a wonderful story and a cast of characters that make it talk. General class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

UNIVERSAL PICTURES. (I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN, SMOULDERING FIRES, WINE, FAST WORKER). Talk about trademarks! Just hook up with Universal's new ones and you will get real pictures at live-and-let-live prices. All these are first class attractions; had many compliments at the box office on them from my patrons. These new Universals are what they tell you they are and then some more on that. It was a big surprise to me as I have used so many trademark pictures that I did not think that they could do it. A. Mitchell, small town patronage, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Vitagraph

MY MAN. (6,800 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. Fireworks display in trailer drew some people who were disappointed by not finding much of the display in the picture. Not a bad story with Patsy Ruth Miller as pretty as ever and drawing fine. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

REDEEMING SIN. (6,227 feet). Star, Naximova. A very good picture but it failed to draw. I think star has lost out with me but she is just as good as ever. Print new. Very good tone. Sunday, yes. Special, yes. Poor audience appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WILDFIRE. (6,550 feet). Star, Eileen Pringle. Good race track picture but have had better ones of this type before. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Warner Brothers

COUNTRY KID. (6,300 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. Only a fair picture of the program variety. A little comedy and a little pathos makes it a fair offering. Good tone. Appeal 70 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FIND YOUR MAN. (7,300 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin (dog). Fellows, here is a real picture for the small town, and especially for those who like outdoor stories. This drew the summer's record house for strictly pictures. I advertised this as a picture that I would personally guarantee to please everybody, offering to refund the price of ticket to anyone who was not perfectly satisfied. Not a person walked out and I didn't refund a cent. If we could have about twenty-five per cent. of all pictures of this type we could stay open without worrying about the next week's bills. Good tone, fine appeal. Possibly for Sunday, yes as special. Draw all classes, small town 1,312. Admission 10-20, 15-25. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre (300 seats), Thornton, Arkansas.

KISS ME AGAIN. (6,722 feet). Lubitsch production. Technically it is almost perfect. Gave pretty general satisfaction. It is done in an exceedingly clever manner both as to direction and acting. A high class comedy for high class audiences. Tone O. K. Appeal high. Yes for Sunday and as special. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre, Pierre, S. D.

LUCRETIA LOMBARD. (7,300 feet). Star cast. A very fine picture. Worth running anywhere. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Pennsylvania.

Comedies

CANNONBALL EXPRESS. (Pathe-Sennett).

Here is a real laugh provoker with absolutely crazy situations and the most peculiar railway you have ever seen. Mack Sennett usually makes good ones and this one is no exception. It is a bit different. Comedy tone, fine appeal. For Sunday depends on town. Draw working class, town 3,500. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

DANGER. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. One of Jack White's best comedies. Old but worth showing anytime. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

F. O. B. (Educational). Star, Lloyd Hamilton. Hamilton comedies are in a class by themselves. Hamilton is different too. All good. Small town class town of 1,150. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

GREEN CAT. (Pathe). Star, Snub Pollard. Very few laughs in any Pollard picture. This was no exception. David D. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

KING DUMB. (F. B. O.) Star, James Aubrey. About the silliest comedy we have ever run. Greatly overdone. Aubrey is usually good but this is very poor. Print new. Poor audience appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MOVIE MAD QUEEN. (Fox). Some more of Fox's near comics. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MYSTERIOUS STRANGER. (Fox). Just a very good comedy. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

RUNNING WILD. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Lots of fun. A real laugh getter of slap stick variety. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Serials

GREAT CIRCUS MYSTERY. (Universal). Star, Joe Bonomo. A fine serial. One of the best. Town of 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. I'm on the sixth episode of this serial and don't find it is quite what it is cracked up to be. However, it has lots of action but could have been made just a little more interesting. Tone O. K. William A. Simon, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Fromberg, Montana.

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. The best serial from drawing-power view we have had this year. Don't know whether it is the best, but drew best. Draw all kinds, city 100,000. Admission on serial house ten cents. S. H. Borisky, American and Royal Theatres, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

Short Subjects

INTERNATIONAL NEWS (Universal). Used with "Pathe" to alternate, we find that it measures up good, with special features that "Pathe" doesn't have, and good photography. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Independents

EARLY BIRD. (C. C. Burr). Star, Johnny Hines. A comedy knock-out. Drew better than ordinary business and seemed to meet with emphatic approval of majority. Tone O. K. High appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw better class, city 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

FORBIDDEN RANGE. (State Right). Star, Neal Hart. Our people usually shy at anything they are not sure of and this was one of them. A passably good western show that did not bring good attendance. Tone, passable. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, eighty per cent. Mixed class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FUGITIVE. (Arrow). Star, Ben Wilson. Ben Wilson does some very good work in this picture and story is very good. Should please any type of patronage. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Hardly suitable for special. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Sttephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

GOLDEN TRAILS. (State Right). Star cast. A very weak attraction and very poor business. Better look at this before you book it. Print good. No tone. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

JACQUELINE (FLAMING BARRIERS). (5,821 feet). Stars, Lew Cody, Marguerite Courtot. Cast of stars in this a foot long, and a James Oliver Curwood story; but that is all. Lacks human interest—photography all long shots and not any too clear. Forest fire is real, and of course not so thrilling as set stuff. Too much smoke from a long distance. Story very ordinary all the way. General class. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

LUCKY RUBE. (Federated). Star, Syd Smith. Slapstick, pure but simple. Many laughs. Nothing new; however, will pass for one day. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-25, 15-30. A. E. Andrews, Opera House (500 seats), Emporium, Pennsylvania.

MAN FROM BROADWAY. (State Right). Star, Big Boy Williams. There is a dog in this picture but don't go too strong on advertising him. Story very weak and plenty of padding. Print new. Tone, okay. Sunday, no. Special, no. Poor audience appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MAN FROM BROADWAY. (State Right). Star, J. B. Warner. A good clean attraction that should please action fans. Print new. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Good audience appeal. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

MAN FROM GOD'S COUNTRY. Star cast. Did not see this one but reports were fair and box office proved fair attendance. All classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

PRICE SHE PAID. (State Right). Star, Alma Rubens. Three days to fair business. Picture is nothing but ordinary. Pleased a few. General class city of 35,000. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

TURNED UP. (William Steiner). Star, Charles Hutchinson. A good show for people who don't care about distinction in pictures. Mad with the obvious idea of being a thriller it succeeds in part and in part is dry and tiresome. Tone, passable. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Mixed class town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Nyman Kessler Finds Short Subjects Can Be Made Big Box Office Winners

NYMAN KESSLER, of the Atlantic Theatre, Atlantic, Mass., has made two discoveries that should interest the average small town manager.

He finds that the average Saturday night audience is appealed to by the long feature.

It pays to feature the shorter lengths in midweek bookings and to play them up at all times.

Recently Mr. Kessler, in reporting on a comedy week, remarked that while his Wednesday business was good, his comedy week Saturday matinee was good but the night business poor.

Now he writes that an Our Gang comedy, Giants vs. Yanks, drew him the best Wednesday night business he has had in seven months, and did it August 5, at that.

Must Be Played Up

He writes: "There is no getting away from facts. Advertising short features certainly draws dividends. From results to date I shall continue to give as much attention to my one and two reelers as I give to my features. You will notice from my program enclosed that 75 per cent. of the space is given the short features and only 25 per cent. to the main feature."

But to get the business on the baseball comedy, he had to play it up. He didn't just slide it in on the ball and let it work out its own salvation. He invited the local Athletic Club and the ball team to be his guests. Then he told the newspaper what he had done. Thes result was a surprisingly good busines, and he writes that some of the patrons actually fell out of their seats.

His dramatic feature was Revelation, which pleased his patrons, but the real draw was the two reel comedy, properly played up.

Two a Week

Mr. Kessler plays only two shows a week; Wednesday and Saturday. Even with this limited showing it is not easy to get them to come through the summer, but he knows that he can get them if he pulls hard enough. In one issue of his program he gives half of his Wednesday space to the Pathe News. Atlantic is near Boston and that particular issue featured the Yale-Harvard vs Cambridge-Oxford track meet. He knew that this section of the news reel had a cash value to him through the interest in the two New England universities, and he played it up, adding a reference to a 4,000 parachute dive to show that it was not just one feature.

You can't value your offerings with a yardstick. It's the box office appeal that counts, and if you can do more with a short than a program picture, it is suicidal to throw the money away through the conventional play up to the multiple reel.

Figure out what you would buy if you were a film shopper. Don't be a slave to force of habit.

Sea Breezes

George B. Peck dressed the lobby of the Strand Theatre, Tampa, Fla., with a lot of ship chandlery for Rugged Waters, and got so artistic a display with his life preservers, port lights, anchors and things that almost you could feel the breeze and smell the seaweed.

People came to the show to cool off.

Made His Sidewalk a Real Night Club

Newburgh, N. Y., is getting a taste of exploitation at last. For The Night Club Charles R. Hammerslough put chairs and tables on the sidewalk and served soft drinks in imitation of the Parisian cafes. At show times he went further.

He hired a local boys' band of five pieces and before each show they gave a program in front of the house. Each time they pulled about 500 persons, a majority of whom bought tickets when the concert ended.

During the day the band was tricked through the streets, with plenty of banners, and about closing time they made the factory district and made a lot of the workers late for their suppers.

On these trips Night Club cards were given away and were snapped up by those who stopped to listen to the music.

The band cost very little and the returns were unusually large. Newburgh is responding nobly to this new-fangled exploitation—at least it is new to them.

Twofers

Putting on Little Robinson Crusoe for a Summer attraction, the Royal Theatre, Salem, Ohio, put out a raft of tickets admitting two children for a single admission. It got practically every youngster in town, which was precisely what the Royal was after.

This encouraged C. C. Deardouff, the Metro-Goldwynner who put out the idea, to issue 10,000 tickets good for persons of any age, the attraction in this instance being The Great Divide. It was figured that giving them a big show at half price would bring them back at regular prices for later shows.

A Fox Release

TWO TIE-UPS FOR LIGHTNIN' AT KEITH'S PALACE THEATRE, CLEVELAND

One is two glass cased hives showing the bees Bill Jones drove across the desert in midwinter. It was a contribution from a honey concern which tied its product to the play. The other is the addition of dated stills to the Lightnin' card that is being used by all Postal Telegraph offices on the national hook-up arranged by the Fox publicity.

Caught a Band

It pays to be kind hearted. When Peter Pan was about to open at the Criterion, Macon, Ga., recently, a negro band, attached to the colored Knights of Pythias, came down to serenade the newspaper next door to the theatre, in the hope of getting a write up.

P. D. Griffith invited them to stand under his marquise, out of the sun, and the perspiring musicians were glad to accept his suggestion. Cool and comfortable, they played until the opening, and the crowd supposed it to be an exploitation stunt.

The music was shut off at the proper time by inviting the darkies to come down the street for a cold drink.

Real Prescriptions

M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, used prescription blanks on Oh Doctor! but he did not have them printed. He got the blanks from the local druggist and had pen copies made which he sent to all physicians, nurses and others who understood the prescription form. They were filled in with the name of the recipient and were far more convincing than the usual printed style, even where the latter are done in imitation of handwriting. It worked well enough to pay a good profit on the trouble and postage.

Happy Returns

Every year the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, celebrates its birthday with open house to all children under sixteen from ten until six, but frugally permits the local paper to print a clip coupon which is necessary to gain admission.

This year it got a three day run of production stills on The Air Mail, and helped the general business not a little. Two and three column layouts generally do help.

The stunt was worked by Herbert Sobottka, manager, with Roediger, of the Rialto and Harry Eagles, of Paramount, credited with assists.

Production Hints from Edward L. Lyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

Owing to the unusual length of D. W. Griffith's big picture, "Sally of the Sawdust," all attention on stage presentation was centered in a very elaborate prologue, prior to which there was a prelude by the orchestra. The only additional film subject was the Mark Strand Topical Review, which was given its accustomed 8 minutes.

The complete show took up 2 hours and 10 minutes, divided as follows: orchestral prelude, 3 minutes; Topical Review, 8 minutes; Circus Day prologue, 13 minutes, and the feature picture, 1 hour and 46 minutes.

The prelude by the orchestra, with the purple draw-curtains set with rhinestones, closed across the small production stage, was lighted as follows: one amber and one lemon Mestrum flood of 160 amperes on the orchestra from the dome, these lights also covering the purple draw-curtains; 2 light blue and 2 medium amber arch spots lighting the purple draw-curtains; blue borders and blue foots on large stage; amber coves subdued.

After the prelude came the Topical Review with its specially scored and timed music, and next came the prologue, billed as "A Circus Episode." This prologue opened "in one" and gradually worked up to full stage. Preceding it was an art-title announcement introducing the purpose of the prologue and the characters. Carlton Perard, a basso, made up as W. C. Fields in the photoplay, came on in front of the gold draw-curtains of the production stage for some business built around the character. In a moment Mlle. Francelli, premiere danseuse, as Sally made her appearance. For the two a special number was written, both music and lyrics, which embodied many of the sayings of McGargle in the picture, among them "the old army game." As the pair finish their stuff the gold draw-curtains opened, showing the outside of a circus tent. There was a group of performers in various poses and costumes, listening to a woman whistler, made up as a boy, whistling "Invitation." Then Jack Griffin as a hobo played two numbers on a football balloon, "Mother Machree" and "My Best Girl." He also had some stage business. Then for an encore he lifted a gallon can to his lips, appearing to drink, played "How Dry I Am." Then the clown of the group stepped out and played on a musical saw the selection "Old Pal." Harry Breuer, made up as the ring-master, played a xylophone solo, while Sally danced. Then the ensemble on the stage and in the orchestra took up the final, "The Gallop" from "Faust," after which they were seen packing their belongings in preparation to move. A cop came on and told McGargle to move along and as the lights dimmed down the circus tent, which was rigged on a traveler, slowly opened for the final scene which was that of the circus leaving town. This scene showed the wagons, one behind the other with the lights on the sides moving slowly along and disappearing in the distance. The calliope was heard playing as the circus left, gradually growing fainter and fainter as the act closed.

The lights were as follows: lemon and light blue overhead and side spots on the characters; amber foots on small stage; all dimmed off for the close to bring out the big effect of the circus leaving. The front lights included blue borders in foots, a purple Mestrum floods on the orchestra from the dome, 2 purple and green spots crossing on the ceiling. These reflected through the trees of the transparent windows at either side of the stage.

Ringing It

More or less gold wedding rings, supplied by Paramount at $1.75 a gross to advertise Marry Me, have figured in a number of good stunts. Thomas Shrader, of the Olympic, Pittsburgh, advertised a wedding ring to every woman attending the matinees of Marry Me, and also gave them out in small envelopes printed: "If he says 'Marry Me,' tell him here's the ring."

A Good Prologue

E. A. Rogers, of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, Tenn., planned a nice prologue on Kiss Me Again. He ran the main title and then flied the screen to show a pianist playing the song in a setting much like that used in the first scene of the picture. As the screen slowly dropped again, the first scene came up while the orchestra took up the theme. It was cheap and very effective.

A Universal Release

LAUNCHING THE RIDDLE RIDER AT THE COLUMBIA THEATRE, ALLIANCE, OHIO

This won the weekly prize in the Laemmle Serial exploitation contest for Mrs. Sara Abegglen, the manager of the theatre, who organized a parade two and a half blocks long with cowboys, girl riders, a masked Riddle Rider, a band and slathers of kids. The cut on the left shows the head of the parade, while on the right is seen the rank and file.

A Fox Release

A PROJECTIONIST EVOLVED THIS LOBBY AND PHOTOGRAPHED IT, TOO

He is an old-timer who is now working for Manager J. A. Stewart, of the Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario. If course the easel frames were out of the way at showing times, for they needed the space for the customers. It made a big three days.

Spotting the Vets

Most identification contests are based on naming the current stars. The Meserole Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., used a picture made at Universal City recently as the basis for a novel contest. The group included such comparative old timers as Francis Ford, King Baggot, Max Asher, Cleo Madison, Carmen Phillips, Grace Cunard, Ella Hall and Dorothy Phillips.

A two column cut was laid off to the Greenpoint News, which offered ticket prizes for identification of these old Universal favorites, many of whom have retired from the screen.

The picture was taken during the recent Anniversary Celebration, a sort of screen Old Home Week.

To complete the hook up, the newspaper announced that an enlargement of the photography could be seen in the lobby of the theatre. Here is a spendid tie-in to any newspaper identification. It brings them right up against the box office.

A Startling Tag

The "For Sale" cards for automobiles is not new, but we have not had one lately and Paramounteer George Gambrill has recently put out a peach in St. Louis. The copy runs:

"This car is not for sale because the owner will use it to drive to the Gem Theatre to see the best pictures obtainable, always. All week commencing Sunday, June $ 28 $ a week of super entertainment."

The card was set in 36 point block type and eight point Roman. The result was an apparent "This car for sale $ 28 $." The reverse carried the three Paramount pictures for the week indicated.

The tag was baggage tag size, and was hung on the handle of parked cars.

Gets Three Papers in on Pop Contest

Helping the Gem Theatre, Jefferson, Mo., launch Greater Movie Season, George Gambrill, Paramounteer, suggested a most popular girl contest, with prizes by Tom Meighan and Richard Dix. Two local prizes were added so that the list stood a loving cup from Meighan, a bracelet from Dix and a silver doren and a pearl choker as added starters.

There are three papers in town and all three were held interested through the frame-up of the contest, which was not laid off to any one paper, but made a theatre stunt.

Ads Were Votes

The newspaper interest arose from the fact that the advertisement in any paper was worth ten votes, but when accompanied by a ticket stub it counted as twenty five.

The contest opened simultaneously with Greater Movie Season on August 2, to run one month. The Mayor formally locked the ballot box and promised to hold the key until the end of the contest.

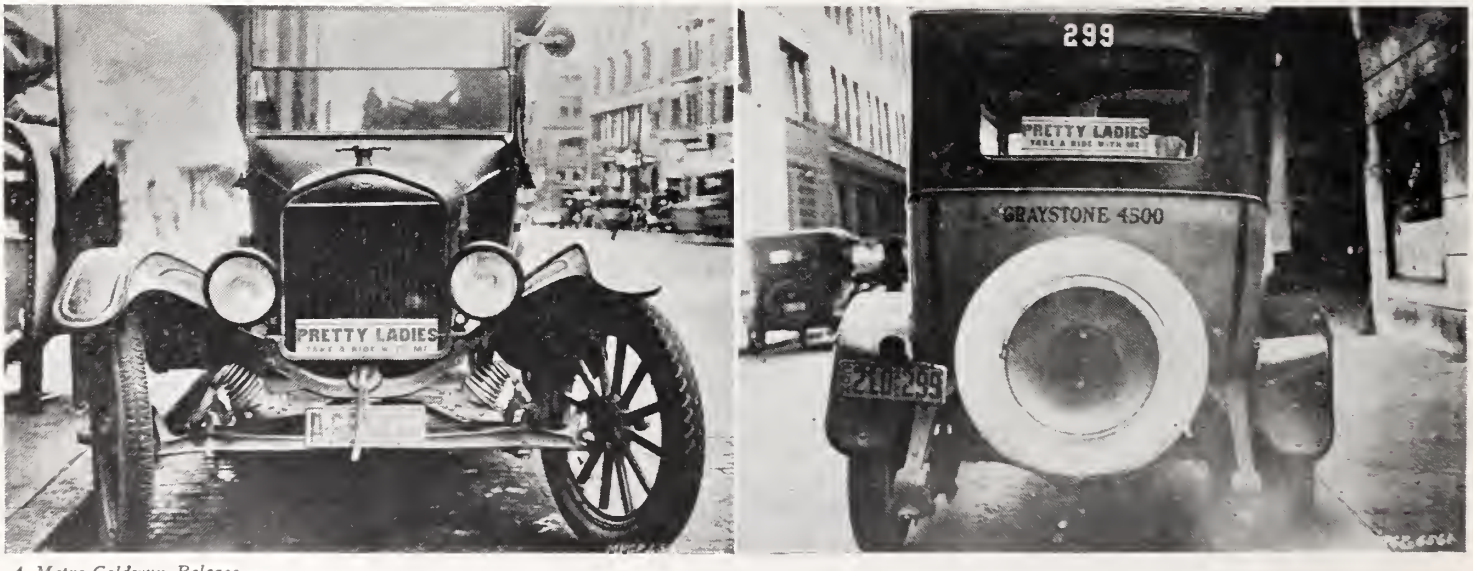
As the articles were obtained for less than cost, in consideration of the advertising the jeweller would receive, this gave a month of front page stuff in three papers at a comparatively small cost.

Of course wires were obtained from Meighan and Dix.

Polo Profited

Because the polo team of the Sixth U. S. Cavalry was to represent the South in the intercircuit tournament in Philadelphia, and money was needed for expenses, E. A. Rogers, of the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga allowed the Polo Association a percentage on all tickets sold by downtown business houses. It was more than a local movement and so many tickets were sold that he had to play to full houses.

Each evening the Sixth Cavalry contributed a specialty stunt at the nine o'clock show to help things along.



A Metro-Goldwyn Release

IF YOUR TOWN IS NOT PURITANICAL HERE IS A FINE AUTOMOBILE CARD

In some sections this hook-up on Pretty Ladies, reading "Pretty ladies take a ride with me," may goat the reformers, but it was a rolling riot for Loew's Warfield Theatre, San Francisco. After the first batch was placed the autoists came to the theatre and demanded a sticker. It helped to back up an unusually extensive campaign on this salable title.

Ran Circus Mystery All in Single Week

Getting the first prize for the 18th week of the Laemmle Serial Exploitation Contest was the least profitable phase Jack Muldoon's exploitation of The Great Circus Mystery. That was only $100—plus the glory.

The real money came from getting the same crowd every day for a week, at the Academy Theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., with a real circus in town—the John Robinson Shows. The show rents the elephant blankets and Muldoon bought one, instead of trying to crash the tail end of the parade. He was too busy with other things to worry about that.

He ran the entire serial in one week; two chapters a day for six days. To get real atmosphere he hired a sideshow, with a sword walker, snake charmer, electric girl and a dog troupe, to say nothing of a six legged sheep and a lot of small animals.

These were displayed around the lobby, in true side show fashion, with a clown and a juggler for a front ballyhoo. The acts did their stuff as part of the stage show in addition to the four reels of the picture.

Playing a serial in a limited period is not new, but putting in a real side show, the regular ten-in-one brand, is something else again, and with the aid of A. L. Burks, Universalist, Muldoon made important money in which normally should have been an off week.

A Pathe Release

JUVENILE "FIRST NIGHTERS" AT THE FIRST GAME

This represents the child population of Rockingham, N. C. E. A. Bailey, manager of the Star Theatre, told them they could see the first chapter of Play Ball if they were there by one o'clock. Most of them were there before lunch.

Back Again

Remember the days when you built a paddock or a grand stand for a racing play—any racing play. Made lots of money, too.

Oscar White revived the idea the other day for Gold Heels, at the Liberty Theatre, Greenwood, S. C.

Still packs a powerful punch. Try it.

Filling Stations

All delivery tank wagons of the Tidewater Co. in Newburgh, N. Y., carried banners to the effect that in Old Home Week at the Broadway Theatre Tom Meighan sold Tydol and Veedol. And a lot of people went to see if Charles Hammerslough was telling the truth.

A Universal Release

PHASES OF THE BIG STUNT USED TO PUT OVER THE GREAT CIRCUS MYSTERY IN BUFFALO

Jack Muldoon, of the Academy Theatre, used the entire story in one week, two episodes a day. To get them every day he had a man-sized side show in the lobby. The top shows an elephant in the Robinson (real) circus parade and the sword walker in the lobby sideshow. Below are the front and interior as dressed for t his event. A clown and a juggler were the ballyhoo.

A First National Relea

A GLENS FALLS PERAMBULATOR ON NEW TOYS

James R. Conklin, of the New Park Theatre, Glens Falls, N. Y., put out this street man and got a lot of attention. Practically everyone turned to look back after this grotesque figure, and if they did, they got the message on his back.

There Are Others

Apropos of the articles in American papers telling of the distaste of European countries for alleged "sensational" American exploitation, Allan S. Glenn, Supervisor of Exploitation for First National, sends in a clipping from a Galveston newspaper showing that there are other offenders.

It seems that an enterprising hatter of Sao Paulo, Brazil, where Spring begins in August, capped all of the city's numerous public statues with his brand of straw hats.

The city fathers raved and the conservative citizens threw fits, but the chain of hat stores did a rushing business. Glenn suggests that this must be the original Mad Hatter, but there seems to be method in his madness.

Building the Boom

Even Tampa, Fla., is paying more attention to real estate than cigar making these days, and it was easy for John B. Carroll to get windows for a Denny picture.

He had cards printed reading: "Come in. I'll show you the town." These were distributed to every real estate office in town, and used for window display. Mr. Carroll does not say how many thousand cards he had to print.

Masked Rider for the Black Cyclone

Desiring to get extra attention for Black Cyclone, D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., dressed a rider ace in black, in imitation of the white Klan costume, and sent him around town on the blackest horse he could hire.

There was a sign on his back for the feature, but nothing in front, so everyone had to turn and rubber, which sank the idea in. The slight effort was sufficient to impress the title and house more strongly on the mind.

The perambulator was kept on the street for two days before the opening and made talk which capitalized at the box office in an unusually good first night sale. Everyone went out and talked, and the rest of the run was easy.

The lobby display was the cutout of Rex and his mate, which tied up to the black rider.

Introducing It

Here's a new way to spring a serial. Credit Dick Darst, of the Hollywayn Theatre, Los Angeles.

After telling his audience that he had a surprise for them the following week, he had the drop taken up, disclosing 24 children in circus dress. At a signal each child produced from behind its back a card with a single letter, the set forming the words, The Great Circus Mystery.

Two Good

Remembering that the now familiar drawing contest was started on Vitagraph's Black Beauty, J. H. Stelling tried the idea on Black Cyclone and found the stunt was still in good running order. He also used a horseshoe matinee.

A Twin Contest

There is nothing in The Ten Commandments about twins, but Al Birch, Paramounteer, made twins sell the Commandments for the Shuler Theatre, Raton, N. M.

The theatre advertised it wanted to take a census of twins with the aid of the Raton Daily Reporter. Every pair of twins to enter were given tickets to the show, and then they were eligible to compete for the prizes, which ranged from $5 to the youngest pair to $20 for the prettiest girl twins between eighteen and twenty. There were other prizes for the fattest, thinnest and oldest.

It not only stirred the town. It had the entire section talking about twins and the commandments.

His robe is black, not dirty, and he was sent around Birmingham by D. Roscoe Faunce to tell the town that Black Cyclone was to be seen at the Strand Theatre, but the regalia helped more than a little to get attention for him.

Blanchard Plugs for Movie Season

Recently we told how J. M. Blanchard, of the Strand Theatre, Sunbury, Pa., got the major to shoot the opening gun for Greater Movie Season, but that was the opening gun, and Mr. Blanchard had lots more ammunition.

He landed a full page co-op for the Thursday before the opening and backed this with two thirds of a page for his own advertisement on the Saturday before. He showed the co-operators that he believed in taking his own medicine in liberal doses.

His program at the Strand was The Snob, Chickie, Wife of the Centaur and Night Life of New York, with Against All Odds, The Breath of Scandal, The Drums of Jeopardy and The Prairie Wife for the Victoria.

For each of these he did special exploitation, but about the best was on Chickie. For this he got a florist to let him plaster half of a plate glass window with head cutouts and title strips and a large "Greater Movie Season" for a centerpiece. Then on the side, (it was a corner store,) he used the set of lettered cutouts shown on this page. It is a good idea for any picture with a suitable head.

Chickie was part of his Greater Movie Season show at the Strand Theatre, and he got into a florist's window with a batch of stickers and cutouts. Then he made up this set to place above the window, but photographed them first.

Saddler's Model is Basis of a Float

Time was when even the small town harness stores carried a wooden horse on which to display its wares, but with the coming of the automobile the wooden horse has followed the cigar store Indian down the path to oblivion and not many of them graze on the village sidewalks these days.

When Robert Bender, manager of the Columbia Theatre, Seattle, wanted to enter a parade float for The Black Cyclone, he skirmished around until he located one. Mounted on a float, the pine thoroughbred took second prize in the industrial class, and every paper in town ran a picture the next day, as the parade was held by the American Legion and was real news.

After the parade, Mr. Bender sent the float out to the stadium of the University of Washington, where it was given a prominent place in a patriotic pageant.

The combined publicity, plus the picture itself, held the feature over for a second week—and in July, at that.

Lectured

The best bet on The Danger Signal when it played the Broadway Theatre, New York, was a fat man with a comedy make up, dressed in a jumper and overalls, who lectured on railroading in the front lobby. He kept the crowd laughing and his ready replies to would-be hecklers helped along a great deal.

A FLOAT THAT HELPED TO HOLD BLACK CYCLONE OVER

This was a contribution to the American Legion parade in Seattle, July 4, and not only won second prize for Robert Bender, manager of the Columbia, but it made a second parade in the University of Washington stadium.

Ralph Noble Wins Herd Competition

A gold watch was offered that manager on Southern Enterprises who did the best exploitation in connection with the Thundering Herd. The competition was won by Ralph Noble, of the Palace Theatre, McAlester, Okla. The next best were Guy O. Kenimer, of the Arcade Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.; W. E. Drimbar, Riviera Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn.; R. T. Newton, Capitol Theatre, Little Rock, Ark., and John J. Friedl, Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

The runners up were Colorado Springs, Pueblo, and Charlotte, N. C.

Mr. Noble did not have the largest campaign, but he bought the most for his money, which is the essence of all Lem Stewart's competitions. It is not merely the splash that is made but the splash in proportion to the cost and the return. Competitions often run the cost of exploitation up far beyond the proper ratio, so Lem works his own cost-plus standards and discourages extravagance.

The results were so uniformly good that a decision was difficult to arrive at, but Noble's ideas offered a diversity of appeal that probably was the deciding factor. He tied up the largest bank, a ten cent store and the public schools, got the backing of the Legion, a nice lobby display and a prologue that got front page mention in the newspaper.

It's worth spending ninety cents to catch a dollar if you have to spend ninety cents, but it's a better trick to buy dollars with dimes. This is the point that a lot of managers overlook.

Got a Page

For the reopening of the Des Moines, Ia., Theatre, A. H. Blank picked The Ten Commandments, so Seymour Ansley, Paramounteer, helped to dig out a page co-op. The ten commandments of good shopping ought to sell almost any bunch of merchants, but don't make the mistake of trying to paraphrase the decalogue in a humorous vein. Just play it straight, the way Ansley did.

The people you most want to reach are the ones who would resent a burlesque.

Fred Meyers Plugged Paths to Paradise

Fred Meyers, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is one of the few managers who frankly admits that he cannot understand why his patrons do not give their support to the right pictures. Probably most managers feel the same way about it, but Fred is not ashamed to admit it. In the autopsies he holds in his monthly magazine there are interesting obituaries on some very worthy plays and mild surprises that the public flocked to see some trashy offering. But he determined that if the whole town did not see Paths to Paradise they would not be able to hang it on him. He not only took extra space for his regular ads, but he started in early with single column appeals, a pair of which we reproduce here. These are singles, and there were three or four of different lengths, the deepest being eight inches; the "Warning" shown on the left. The text is well written and sounds as though he believed in what he was saying. That's the real trick in writing. You cannot sell if your own conviction is but half formed. Fred knew it was good before he started out to sell. He talked with convincing earnestness, and we hope he got the business he deserved. His opening was a five tens and a very nice looking space. There is a lot of talking, but no suggestion of crowding and so little heavy type that there is no oppressive blackness. It is all light and airy, as becomes a comedy advertisement. Did you ever stop to figure out that a heavy black announcement cannot carry the fullest suggestion of comedy? It does not. Meyers knows it and he kept this as open as a latticed summer house, with the result that it was more carefully read. And if you read it and if you ever go to the pictures, it is a cinch you saw this one, providing that you lived in or near Hamilton. It is a model space in which the selling is done through talk, since there is little in the scene cuts to carry the same suggestion of comedy. You can show some good stills, but they will not carry the same urge as talk, for no one picture is as funny as the play. If you use cuts you limit your appeal on this. Type is much better.

MYERS OPENING SPLASH ON PATHS TO PARADISE

are better than the run-of-mill samples that come to this desk, but they are below his standard. They fill space without gaining unusual display, partly because he went to extra space since the picture was made in a nearby town. But in the Negri space we have Frank Burns at his best. The space is only a three sevens, but a quarter page could give him no more because he uses so much white that it looks larger than it is. This is the secret of most of Burns' successes. He makes them look large, and chiefly through the use of white space and comparatively small type faces. Here you will find that the only big type is the cutout from a mat with the star and title and the signature of the Grand, which is the sister house to the Beacham. His type talk is all in an eight point, and runs only six lines in all, but he sells the story in the first three lines, the director in the next trio and creates the impression that he is telling a bookful because he has nicely condensed his arguments. It takes longer to write three good lines than to sell the same facts in ten, but it pays for that extra time to get the fact concentrated to the smallest possible space. Getting it from ten lines to three is what gives Burns his invaluable white space.

Silhouette Shows In a Small Space

This small advertisement from the Randolph Theatre, Chicago, is the original size, a single three and a half, or 50 lines. You have to see it on the page to get the full display value, for the merit of this space does not lie in its art display but in its ability to come through a mass of larger spaces, most of which are pretty black. In Chicago the average agent seems to think that the blacker he gets his space, the better his display. It is not quite as bad as Boston, but there is too much black ink spilled on the page. The advantage of this space is that it combines the smash of a black mass with the display value of white space, and does it all in comparatively small area. This emphasizes the value of black mass, though in the original the white letters have a hard time coming through. It will look much better in the reproduction, with a stronger black. The letters are well cut and are large enough, but the black is not heavy enough to give them the needed contrast, and this is something always to be reckoned with in reverse cuts in newspaper work. This is a better black than usual, but it is not good.

EFFECTIVE ON THE PAGE

Pictorial Display Holds to a Title

In this two eights for the Park and Mall Theatres, Cleveland, M. A. Malaney has told much in very little art work. Naturally the four girls at the top might be grounds for divorce and the lower sketches of the man and woman headed for their attorneys carries on the idea. The signature is a trifle top-heavy, or would be were it not for the keystone lines that carry the eye into the lower space. Straight lines would not get the same effect under a six point width, but the slanting line, running into the space, pulls the eye from the signature into the announcement without an effort. It is a clever trick, but all one with the rest of the art work, though it would seem that it should be possible to use type here for the title and the players' names.

Straight Line Form Works Well In This

Generally speaking the advertisement that is straightlined across the space is not good, but the America Theatre, Denver, turns out a nice three eights on I'll Show You the Town that is mostly straight across the space. That is a capital top line, working down to four lines of lively sales conversation and then skipping over the cut to the star and title below. The panel with the prices does break the regularity of the lines, but it still classes as straight line composition and yet it looks well. It is one of those instances where the layout man has followed good judgment rather than regular rules, for no regular rule would countenance this form. The answer is that Denny's head is so much higher than those of the girls that it is possible to drop a type bank into the space and so break up the prim regularity, giving a very effective display. Sometimes you may have to notch a cut to get this effect and even cut away a part of the lines, but if its your cut you can do what you like with it to make it fit your particular needs. A second display on the same run offers a peculiar layout. Practically the entire advertisement is contained in the paneled space. Apart from the house signature that is a complete advertisement in itself. Add the signature and it could run without the rest and be complete. But the house has added a number of jazz lines and a cut, and gets an extra punch for every extra line. This is purely trick stuff, but effective when rightly handled.

News, Comments of the Week and Guide to New Material

DE ROSA SCENIC TREATMENTS

JERRY DE ROSA, technical director, at the Colony Theatre, New York City, has developed some attractive fabric combinations which he uses as backgrounds for the effective presentations offered at this theatre under the supervision of Howard McCoy, the managing director. De Rosa has experimented to a great degree with "projected scenery" and has devised several effects whereby it is possible to secure some marvelous scenic backgrounds where no stage is available and only one drop used in the treatment. The experiments which have resulted at the Colony with the fabric treatments have been wide in their scope, and it has been demonstrated that one set of fabrics can be used three times on the same program, and with a manipulation of the lights and method of hanging the entire complexion of the set changed. It is worth an investigation to see some of the excellent effects achieved at this theatre with the fabric sets.

NEW PIANO INVENTION

MUSICIANS in general are interested in a new device invented by John Hays Hammond, Jr., which is expected to add a new phase to orchestral composition, and at the same time revolutionize orchestras by means of reducing the operating expenses. In a recent demonstration by the inventor, a grand piano was used with the device attached. The effect was surprising as the piano in retaining all of its original characteristics had obtained much of the sonorousness and sustained quality of a pipe organ. The general principal of the device is based on the use of reflectors set inside of the instrument and controlled by a fourth pedal. It has been found possible to build up a tremendous sonority and the tones might be allowed to escape with any degree of subtlety. Unlike the notes in an ordinary piano which gradually fade after being struck, this device permits the tones to be sustained and even increased in volume many times. Certain musicians have claimed that it may result in a new form of musical composition.

McDONALD THEATRE PRESENTATIONS

RUSSELL BROWN has written us many interesting things about the consistent presentation and prologue program which is being offered to the patrons of the McDonald Theatre, Eugene, Oregon. A portion of a recent letter holds some interesting statements in which he says that "our attempt in prolonging the 'Ten Commandments' was somewhat more pretentious than usual, and while we do not labor under the impression we are turning the First Run presentation world green with jealousy, we do believe the simplicity in staging this particular prologue makes it probable for some other exhibitor to find it of some interest. The entire stage setting (described in this issue) was constructed of rosin paper, excepting the platform, throne and back drape. The costumes were all made of solid colored cambric, the designs being painted on after the costumes were made. Just a daub of calcimine does the trick. We have been using the rosin paper, both in lobby display and stage settings for over five years and find it to be not only a big saver in production cost but a very effective and efficient material with which to work." We are pleased with the work being done by this organization and expect more interesting things later.

YOUR PROGRAMS REQUESTED

THERE is always a paramount interest among producers as to similar work being done in other theatres. It has been ascertained that the weekly production reports have acted as a spur to many, to some an inspiration, but of an informative value to all producers. Detailed information relative to presentations or prologues is always welcomed by this Department and we are grateful for the pledges of cooperation we have received from such men as Herschel Stuart, of the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, Mo., Frank Buhler, of the Stanley Corporation, Philadelphia, and other leaders in the new art and better programs. This cooperation means much to us as it stamps this particular set-up as one of national interest. Again, and again, we say, this Department has been created to help you and inform you.

THE ORCHESTRA PROBLEM

WITH exhibitors making hurried trips to Chicago to see, hear and talk with Paul Ash, the musical director who is consistently breaking records at McVickers, with his excellent programs, and old Broadway and the whole exhibition end of the business looking in on Ben Bernie, who is offering something new and different each week, the question asked today is —what will it all lead to? Will the standard orchestra be rejuvenated? Is the orchestra to dominate the surrounding programs? It is food for thought, and there are many arguments both for and against the new type. What interests us most of all is what the exhibitor and the producer outside of New York and Chicago think of the plan as applied to their houses. Will the new type of programs appeal to the smaller theatres or is it merely a metropolitan complex?

JOHN WENGER'S ART

A BOOK has been published entitled "John Wenger." It was written by Carlo de Fornaro. It is a worthy tribute to Wenger and what he has accomplished in the world of art and the theatre. The narrative anent Wenger is not of great length but concisely tells of the gradual ascendency of this artist to the position he enjoys today as one of the leading colorists and master of theatre decoration. One valuable feature of the book is that it includes many plates showing reproductions of curtains, sets, panels, etc. During the long period that we have kept Wenger's work under observation it has been noted that he possesses a keen sense of the vital elements of a production, whether it is a play, presentation or prologue, and that he has the ability to translate the theme in a highly suggestive manner with his pigments and interpretive designs.

Big First Run Presentations

CRITERION THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Wanderer" (Paramount)

The Prologue

The presentation devised by Hugo Riesenfeld for the special engagement of this picture has been given an effective setting by John Wenger, and is staged by David Bennett. Frank Tours is the musical director. The proscenium and curtains are given a new treatment which in turn becomes a part of the set. A framed grand drapery of Egyptian design representing masonry work with attendant hieroglyphics occupies about one half of the upper part of the opening. This drapery is boxed with two boxed legs in receding sections falling from the border as panels from this drapery. A large shell column of Theban style is placed right and left of the proscenium. Painted drop curtains with a picturesque motif of a shepherd standing on an incline in the foreground and a sapling tree motif, streamer clouds and a blue sky is the treatment of the curtains. At the bottom of the curtains an Egyptian design on a white gilt border. The framed border is toned amber and green. When the curtains are drawn a scrim hung down in one is highlighted green from the sides. Four dancers in Babylonian costumes of red and gold are discovered. The dim outlines of adjacent columns are seen. Down extreme left a figure of the shepherd boy kneels. An amber spot from the bridge at right highlights this character. The entire stage is given an effective haze with blue and greens predominating. As the action progresses the lights are brought up and four large Egyptian columns are seen placed right and left with a long stairway at center leading to a high platform which is surmounted by a flat cutout of an idol. Rose and canary tone the foreground. A canary spot highlights the face of the idol. Two large brazures with silver flowers entwined about the wrought iron work are placed right and left of the idol on the platform and down right and left on the stage. The entire action is one depicting a Babylonian revel. The characters are scantily attired and a bit of pantomime is introduced wherein a shepherd boy is brought in and engages in the wild revel with the many maidens. He is about to leave when a robed woman enters in the character depicting the siren, and at the climax she throws open her robe for a moment revealing her body practically nude. The young man falls before her, and at the same time the figure of a woman with a long-haired wig as her costume appears in center of the idol; the young man falls prostrate at this vision. The action rushes on to a climax as the male characters in the dance bring down a large scarf which completely covers the entire group of dancers in the foreground.

The scarf is thrown high in billowy folds which is highlighted with blues and ambers from the sides, and finally brough down enveloping the entire Ensemble, who kneel as the lights dim out and the opening titles of the picture are brought up.

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Her Sister From Paris" (First National)

Overture

Capitol Grand Orchestra renders "Raymond" (Thomas). David Mendoza conducts.

Divertissements

(A) Liebestraum

This well known composition by Liszt is played by Washa Bunchuk, solo cellist, and the song by Margery Harcum. The setting represents an artist's studio of the attic type; amber foots are brought up about half, casting a subdued tone over the setting. Painted drop is hung in two. A large window at left of the drop is cut on an angle giving the effect of a skylight. The casing of the window is large, the dim outlines of a city skyline are visible through the window. The cellist dressed as an old man is seated right of center on a plain single chair, before him is a music-stand. A fireplace with a glow is placed on an oblique extreme right. Red from right and green from left highlights soloist. In the second movement of the scene the figure of Miss Harcum dressed in white costume is seen up center, through the transparency section of the drop. Light blue from right and left highlight her in a manner to achieve a cameo effect.

(B) The Lace Surf

This is simply one scene, a long shot of a scene on the Oregon coast. It is a Bruce overture scenic. There are about 200 feet of this shot. An orchestra accompaniment adds to the beauty of this scene.

(C) Gallop

A colorful number introducing Mme. Gambarelli and the Capitol Ballet of eight. Gray fabric drop is hung back in three. A small balloon and jewel effects are played upon the open section of this drop from the sides, producing green, blue, amber and red discs in interlacing rings. Canary and white flood the performing area, with red from left and blue from right for the foreground lighting. The ballet dancers are dressed in pink and green costumes patterned in numerous scalloped tiers. Gambarelli enters for the finale in a silver dancing costume with an underlining of green. She works in a white spot.

Capitol Musicale

The numbers offered in this presentation were from Verdi's opera, "Traviata," which is based on Sardou's story of Camille. The scene is an exterior of Florence's home in Paris. A painted drop with a French window and oval top at center compose the setting. A painted balustrade is seen outside the window and a painted landscape drop tinted blue and purple is used to back. The top of the drop is painted maroon, with old gold medallions right and left, and an ornate decorative design in the panels and borders of the wall. A black border and legs hung down in one to mask. Crystal chandelier hangs center, which is highlighted white from the sides. There is a large mahogany table up left with a gold cloth draped at center upon which is a huge fruit cluster in a dish. Candlesticks are placed right and left on the table. Two high-back carved and upholstered chairs are placed right and left of the center of the window and a chair of similar design extreme right. The various characters appear in costumes of the opera and work in a white flood with canary thrown in from the sides to tone. Program follows:

COLONY THEATRE

Overture

Colony Melody Masters, with E. Charles Eggett conducting, present a specially arranged number—Bits of "Scandals." Dr. Edward Kilenyi has a particularly good score for the feature picture. John Priest at the console.

Marion Morgan

An attractive singer in a group of two songs. The scenic background is achieved with fabrics. Silk tapestry art curtains hung in one and drawn half open. A large silk shirred curtain covers a six-foot window opening, a balustrade visible through the lower part of the window. A large draw cord with tassels hangs in center of it. Fabrics mask and carry off right and left. A vase filled with large flowers is placed on the floor right of the window, and a wrought iron urn filled with flowers is left of the window. A carved single chair left of center. Amber foots and red-blue mixture on border tones the curtain in one. The fabrics carrying off from window are toned a rich purple. Amber from right and green from left on singer, who is dressed in a gown of white silk with rhinestones. Blue filters through the cream colored curtain over window at center.

Ruth Granville

Premier Saxophone Virtuoso in a well chosen group of selections. An excellent fabric combination has been made with two units of light colored drapes. With a colorful lighting treatment the set is an artistic creation. Four fabric legs are hung in one. Two legs are used right and left to mask and carry off, and the other two legs are bunched and hung at right and left center. These legs give the effect of large fluted columns. The second unit consists of a fabric drop hung in two, a wide section visible up center and smaller sections seen up right and left center. A batik drape is hung over the center panel of the back drop in a graceful line from left down to right. The lighting treatment consists of red foots and blue first borders up. The fabric legs in one are toned, at right a blue and magenta, at left a magenta. The fabric columns hanging at right center toned green and amber, the one at left center amber and rose. The back drop is given a triple tone. The center section green and the left rose and blue. A chandelier with amber lamp, and draped with batik streamers, hangs from center. The tonal lights on the set are thrown from the side. A canary spot is worked on the instrumentalist, who is dressed in a red gown with gilt lace brocade trimming. Back borders are red and blue mixture.

Dance Divertissement

Ray and Rose Lyte present several original terpsichorean compositions. The setting is another fabric combination suggestive of the carnival spirit. Fabric returns in one. Light colored fabrics hung in three with a slight opening at center, revealing a fabric backing over which gold streamers are hung. Vivid colored balloons in bunches and singly are placed in irregular formation over the back drop. Paper spirals cover the surface—a tangled maze of paper spirals hangs from one as a border. Red foots and blue first border tone the foreground. Magenta and blue from the side tone the back drop. The fabric returns toned amber at right, and red at left. Pink and blue spots on dancers during their routine.

RIALTO THEATRE

Ben Bernie and His Rialto Merrymakers

This week Bernie presents a minstrel program. The orchestra dressed in costumes of black and white, black striped trousers and coats patterned after evening clothes. The band enters from the front of the house, down the aisles and take their places in olio formation on the stage. The setting consists of a back drop of wide black stripes on a white background with gold and silver fabrics as returns right and left. The orchestra is seated on gilt chairs in the circle and the interlocutor's chair at center is of large red upholstered design; stage is flooded in white. The number opens with an orchestral selection and is followed by a program introducing Jerome Mann in some clever imitations of Al Jolson and Pat Rooney. This is followed by a young lady whistler, and a very clever young man who rendered an effective violin number, after which a dance is given by an attractive miss, and Eddie Clark, ukulele artist, closed with several popular numbers. For finale Clark does some Russian steps. The orchestra picks up the accompaniment and four negro boys dressed in white house uniforms enter for a finish; a lobsterscope is used for the closing effect.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Man Who Found Himself"
(Paramount)

Music

One of the famous Music Master Series is introduced in the overture spot; subject is Richard Wagner, with a musical interpretation by the Rivoli orchestra, Ludwig Laurier conducting. The picture proved interesting. This is followed by "A Southern Rhapsody" by Hosmer, and Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz is also added.

An Evening on a Plantation

This number is brimful of atmosphere and was very well done. The entire set depicts a southern exterior. A painted drop is hung back, revealing green tree tops in the foreground and a distant pastoral landscape. A corner section of a southern house is painted on a flat and set on an oblique at right. A one-foot platform is placed in front of it, upon which an arm chair is set at the upstage end. Two steps lead from platform to stage. At extreme left is a small set piece painted to resemble a servants' quarters. Two white flower set trees are placed up right and left of center, with a row of sunflowers extending across stage at back. Various set trees are used to dress at extreme ends and vines are also added in the scheme. August Werner, baritone, dressed as an old southern Colonel, opens the action with a song, which is followed by a dance by Marcella Hardie in an 1850 costume. Off stage can be heard the rhythmic chanting of the workers returning from the field, and the Dixie Jubilee singers, consisting of five men and three women, enter from left carrying baskets and bags of cotton. They render a group of negro Spirituals in a manner which proved most popular with the audience. For a finale Arthur Bryson and Strappie Jones, two clever dancers, enter for finale. The set is toned green and light blue from overheads and also with floods; amber and canary highlight the performing area from the sides; white and amber spots are used during the action.

"IN THE TIME OF PHARAOH"

A prologue originated and presented at the McDonald Theatre, Eugene, Oregon, for the showing of "The Ten Commandments"

The organ opens with four measures of the Grand March from "Aida," improvising a finale ending with full organ, at the height of which close-in curtains part on massive Egyptian arch with huge gates closed. At right a large gong is suspended from a projecting beam end. Set is lighted with orange flood from right.

As organ overture ends, Ethiopian slave, striped to loin cloth and shiny black, enters from right carrying large hammer. Slave walks beneath gong, then, poising, swings hammer with all his might against gong. Organ gives effect of deep gong. Slave repeats three times.

At third swing, two slaves, arms folded, enter from opposite doorways in arch jog, walk to center and strain at gates. Organ swells into Grand March strain as slaves laboriously open gates. Slaves exit through same doorways after opening gates wide.

Gates open, revealing the high, pillared palace of the king, dimly lighted by red second borders and blue third borders. Throne on stepped platform, back center. Stone bench front left. A large warrior (baritone) enters back right between pillars and sings "Celeste Aida."

As solo ends, organ gives trumpet effect, warrior turning and walking back to bench as two small (girl) trumpeters enter with long trumpets and banners, going to opposite ends of steps leading to throne. Two guards, with spears, enter behind trumpeters, halting just inside, each taking side step in opposite direction to permit entrance of King, who marches in to center, mounts steps to throne. Warrior bows as King enters, then sits on stone bench as King, seated on throne, claps hands and commands that they bring forth the most beautiful slave.

Two male slaves enter, right, dragging the slave-girl with chained wrists. Slaves drag girl to front center and throw her on steps at feet of King. Organ picks up introduction of "Egyptian Dance" and girl raises chained hands to King, who raises right hand in command to arise. Girl arises, going into first movement of dance, which is a struggle to free herself from the chains. In a musical climax, girl breaks chains, which she hurls from her, going into joyful dance, ending in whirl and dropping again at feet of King.

A messenger dashes in from right. Dancer arises quickly, as messenger, apparently exhausted, falls in front of steps at foot of throne. Guards quickly step to side of messenger and raise him to his feet. Between gasps for breath, messenger reports that Egypt is invaded by the Ethiopians. Then messenger swoons, is carried out by guards, who return quickly to first positions.

Warrior arises at entrance of messenger,

A Symbolic Creation
"SEVEN AGES"
The Cycle of Life
A "Moving Picture World" Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

THIS presentation offers the producer an opportunity to reflect the newer phase of theatrical art. Symbolism is innately attractive as it holds the interest of the spectator with a series of suggested scenes rather than graphic delineations. In like manner, symbolism can be more accurately expressed wihen the scenic background suggests rather than depicts a distinct character or condition.

Primarily this suggestion is based on Shakespeare's brief of the seven ages of man which he incorporated in his play "As You Like It (Act II, Scene VII). With this excerpt from the play as a base the action is suggested and can be presented in pantomime with a musical interpretation.

ROUTINE

The curtains are opened, slowly, revealing the stage in darkness. The blue foots are brought up to one-quarter, the first border in blue with a red blend brought up two or three points, casting a deep haze over the foreground. The face of a man appears at center of the gauze drapes hung down in one. The light from the foot spot is brought up. The man appears dressed in a hooded cloak. With a subdued musical accompaniment he reads the following lines: "All the world's a stage, and all the men and women merely players: They have their exits and their entrances; and one man in his time plays many parts, his acts being seven ages. At first, the infant, mewling and drooling in the nurse's arms; then, the whining school-boy with his satchel, and shining morning face, creeping like a snail unwillingly to school; and then, the lover, sighing like a furnace, with a woeful ballad made to his mistress' eyebrow; then, a soldier; full of strange oaths, and bearded like a pard; jealous in honor, sudden and quick in quarrel; seeking the bubble reputation even in the cannon's mouth; and then, the justice, in fair round belly, with good capon lined; with eyes severe, and beard of formal cut; full of wise saws and modern instances; and so he plays his part! Behold, the play of Life is on."

The speaker disappears through the opening at center. Off stage some distant chimes are heard. The shafts of dawn are seen flashing on the cyclorama, the faint outlines of the shafts of light growing more distinct through the gauze draperies hung down in one. A figure of a woman, clad in long flowing robes of white, wearing a white veil, comes slowly down the steps up center, carrying a baby in her arms. She comes to a point at dead center which is spotted with canary from the bridge. A song of the birth of a child, the new life, is rendered by the "mother." After the song she exits right. The lights increase in warmth, as a boy dressed in school-day fashion enters from right and meets his "sweetheart." A bit of pantomime follows, featuring a juvenile flirtation and ending with a "kid-fashion" chase, the pair making their exit at left.

The large glistening sun is faintly discerned as the youngsters leave the stage. The fountain up center is gradually brought into play. A young man and woman stroll in from right, the young man making amorous advances to a coquettish maiden. A love ballad may be used to feature this part of the action, ending with a waltz number. The couple exit left.

Dark clouds appear on the cyclorama as the sun changes from an amber to a deep red. A soldier, in field uniform and battle investure, enters from right. He sings a spirited song, with much gusto and bravado, as the clouds deepen, the rumblings of thunder heard, with intermittent flashes of lightning. He makes his exit up the center stairway and storms off towards right as drums and trumpets announce his approach with a fanfare off stage.

As the noise of battle dies away, a comet flashes in the sky. The lighting changes to a subdued tone, as the sun changes in its color from red to a rose-amber and gradually dims. A rainbow is brought into play, with a varicolored treatment visible on the waters of the fountain. The character of middle age appears, dressed in evening clothes, suggesting the "banker type." His entrance is followed with the hilarious entrance of several girls dressed in costumes to represent Gold, Silver, Jewels, Stocks and Bonds, Gambling, and Revelry. Each girl, in her turn, tries to lure the man, and as he stumbles about in a daze, a shower of spirals, white ticker tape, falls, and the characters wind it about him, rushing him off stage at left.

. The speaker appears again. This time, at the head of the stairway up center. The lights are gradually dimmed, the sun becomes a faint outline, the sky is cleared of the clouds and the rainbow. The fountain is highlighted with an afterglow effect of magenta and green-blue. The speaker reads the following lines:

Sixth Age Slips Into Slippered Pantaloon

"The sixth age shifts into the lean and slippered pantaloon; with spectacles on nose, and pouch on side; His youthful hose well saved a world too wide for his shrunk shank; and his big manly voice, turning again toward childish treble, pipes and whistles in its sound: Last scene of all, that ends this strange, eventful history is second childishness, and more oblivion; sans teeth, san eyes, sans, taste, sans everything."

The speaker draws his cloak about him and beckons to an unseen character off left. Presently the character of "Father Time" enters, making wide swaths with a golden scythe which he carries. He reaches center, and pauses as he sees an old man entering from right, tottering along on a cane. He is accompanied by an old woman. The two old people shrink back a trifle when they see the character. They look at him in wonderment, then at each other. The old man glances back towards right. He is about to retrace his steps, when the old lady restrains him. She places her arms about him tenderly, kisses the old worn face, and arm in arm, the two characters proceed up the stairway. They meet the shrouded figure at the top of the steps. He comes between them, then placing his arms about the old man and woman, his black cloak covering them, they exit down the runway left. "Time" follows them up the stairway, making the sweeping gestures with the scythe, as the lights dim down, the stars appear, and a distailed outline of the set.

A gauze curtain with an opening at center is hung on the set of lines directly back of the second unit cross beam.

Platforms extend across the entire stage at center. The major part of the action takes place in this area. A stairway, bounded with a block balustrade on each side, is placed up center adjoining the center platforms. The balustrades have masking pieces right and left which carry off to points right and left center. The stairway at center has a narrow platform at the top with runways leading off right and left.

A fountain with water pan is placed on a standard back of the platform. A sun box is placed back of the blue cyclorama to give the effect of a "rayed" edge. A blue cyclorama is used to back and mask up stage.

SCENIC TREATMENT

The general outline for construction is indicated in Figure 1 and emphasizes the block formations, which are simple to construct and very effective in achieving massive suggestion of areas with limited facilities. The body of the set should be painted in a gray-buff stone color, with the light grays predominating. This will lend itself to an artistic lighting treatment as outline in the routine. A decorative motif can adorn the cross beams, and the pilasters may be given a few decorative lines, if desired.

and now King arises and proclaims that the land and its daughters shall be protected.

King dismounts from throne, as warrior and slaves bow. King exits, between guards, who turn and follow, followed by trumpeters, then dancers and two slaves. Warrior stays behind, again looking for someone. Finally, with indication of sorrow, walks toward right exit, turns to look once again, then walking on as girl (soprano) enters front left, quickly following warrior, who, hearing footsteps, turns. Warrior and girl join hands facing each other, warrior kneels, kisses hand of girl, arises and exits with bowed head. (Organ gives snatch of "Celeste Aida.")

As warrior exits, girl turns back and walks slowly to bench, as organ segues into "My Heart at Thy Sweet Voice," girl turning front and singing it in amber spot. At end of solo, girl, arists and exits with bowed head. Orlights and close-in curtains close in dark as slide announces second scene title:

"The Temple on the Nile"
(Scene Two)

Organ segues into introduction of "Where My Caravan Has Rested" as close-in curtains open on dark stage except for green overhead spot on tinseled idol, back center. (The change in scene was made by closing back drape curtains in front of throne platform, leaving steps exposed and wallboard idol cutouts with metallic sparkles and tinsel, slipped in between curtains and steps. By lighting only idol and steps, from which the top carpet was pulled, giving steps a different appearance, a new scene is quickly made.)

Warrior enters from right, kneeling in front of idol. Girl enters, then, from left, kneeling beside warrior. They arise and sing "Caravan Has Rested" (duet) in canary spot from foots. As song ends organ gives distant trumpet effect, warrior kneels, kisses hand of girl, arises and exits right as effect of chariots, horses, clashing spears, etc., is heard off stage. Girl bows head and kneels again in front of idol as spots dim off and two slaves enter from doorways in front arch jog and laboriously pull gates together as orange flood, right, comes up and shiny black slave walks in beneath gong, right, poising to swing hammer. Two slaves close gates and back off with arms folded, exiting through arch doorways.

On third swing close-in curtains close on scene, then part on title of:

"The Wanderer"

Paramount Offers Spectacular Special With Stupendous Climax Based on Story of Prodigal Son

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Based on the stage play of the same title by Maurice V. Samuels and Schmidtbonn's story, "The Lost Son," Paramount is presenting "The Wanderer," an elaboration of the Biblical parable of the Prodigal Son.

The idea of the parable is retained but the incidents have been built up for dramatic effect. For instance, where the Bible states "He took his journey into a far country and there wasted his substance with riotous living": this has been worked out in detail by the introduction of the character of Tisha, a temptress, a beautiful woman who was the high priestess of a pagan goddess. How she lured him on and, when his wealth was spent, cast him out is pictured. There is also a prophet who forecast the destruction of the pagan city, and the climax presents this destruction during a licentious feast to the goddess. Quite a few changes have been made in the minor incidents surrounding the return of the prodigal, although the episode of the fatted calf is, of course, given prominence.

Offered as a big special, "The Wanderer is one of the most beautiful and elaborately mounted pictures that have yet graced the screen. The earlier scenes laid in the hills, showing the prodigal minding his father's sheep, present some of the most magnificent exterior shots imaginable. Many of them are real artistic gems. The later scenes in the pagan temple and palace are elaborate and of tremendous size. Several of the sets are so gigantic as to dwarf the human figures; they are able to accommodate multitudes and there very stupendousness makes one gasp. We don't believe we have ever seen larger or more impressive sets; they are striking and architecturally beautiful.

The earlier reels deal with the prodigal's unrest, his meeting with the woman and his securing his wealth and journeying to the city, and as the entire parable is less than five hundred words, it is not altogether surprising that in working out the details the action is inclined to lag. The interest, however, is held throughout, and with the prodigal's arrival in the city and the beginning of his affair with the pagan princess, the action is constantly accelerated up to the climax.

Director Walsh has several big productions to his credit, including "The Thief of Bagdad," but it is probable that the climax to this picture eclipses anything he has ever done. The tremendous banquet scene, with its dancing and revelry of hundreds of persons, has been magnificently handled, and there is a terrific punch in the scene where the forces of the elements are unloosed and this enormous building as well as the entire city is destroyed. Huge blocks are shown as actually falling on the multitude and burying them, and you will wonder how it is done.

An exceptional cast interprets the story. William Collier is excellent and a fine selection for the Prodigal and is the centre of the action, but Greta Nissen's performance and especially her beauty make her the centre of interest as the temptress. Ernest Torrence contributes another of his remarkable characterizations as the evil major domo of the priestess. Wallace Beery scores in a bit and the minor characters are all admirably handled.

The sex appeal in this picture is unusually strong; in fact it is the physical appeal of the prodigal and priestess for each other that really motivates the story, and Miss Nissen's costumes are such as to furnish an unusually generous display of her figure. This is also true of the lesser feminine figures who are very scantily clad. The fact that the priestess is a wanton, the mistress of the prodigal is not disguised.

While the story is interesting and the sex attraction strong, the greatest appeal of this picture is to the eye, through its beauty and magnitude, the stupendousness of its sets and the tremendous scenes of destruction that mark the climax. It should prove a big audience attraction.

Based on stage play by Maurice V. Samuels, "The Lost Son," by William Schmidtbonn, and Biblical story of The Prodigal Son.
Scenario by J. T. O'Donohoe.
Directed by Raoul Walsh.
Length, 8,173 feet.

Story

In the days of the Old Testament, Jether, whose duty it was to tend his father's flocks, longed for the city. A caravan passed and a beautiful woman, Tisha, priestess of the pagan goddess, Ishtar, attracted him. Urged by her major domo, Tola, a wicked man, Jether finally persuaded his father to give him his share in gold and he journeyed with the caravan to the city where he bought fine clothes, jewels for Tisha and spent his wealth in gambling and riotous living, although warned by the prophet of destruction to come. Only one thing he would not do, that was to deny God and worship Ishtar. Finally, his money gone, Tisha had him cast out, and during a big banquet to Ishtar the reckoning told by the prophet came and the entire city was destroyed. Jether was saved and when a famine came upon the land he tended swine for a rich man and ate the husks intended for the pigs. At last he arrived at the home of his father, and though at first he was turned away and said he was no more worthy to be called the son of his father, Jether forgave him and ordered the fatted calf killed in celebration of the prodigal who had returned.

"Perils of the Wild"

Universal Releases Highly Promising Serial Based on "Swiss Family Robinson"

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Young and old ought to revel in the thrills and tropical backgrounds provided in Universal's latest serial, "Perils of the Wild," an adaptation of "Swiss Family Robinson." Judging by the first three chapters, just shown, this subject promises to not only please all serial audiences but to make multitudes of new friends for the serial, once in danger of losing popularity and now coming back into its own.

The choice of the famous adventure story by Universal affords the company not merely a distinct advertising adjunct but the use of highly colorful tropic scenes. Director Francis Ford realized this and into the first three episodes he has crowded views of all kinds of animals, from lions to monkeys. Also, he has played up the children and the animals together; scenes in which they figure will make a hit.

The picture starts to move from the beginning with scenes of a picturesque adventurer and his disreputable gang, men such as Robert Louis Stevenson wrote about in "Treasure Island." Follow excellent scenes of a vessel at sea in a storm and a subsequent shipwreck. Then the Family Robinson is shown transporting their donkeys, and chickens and goats from the wrecked vessel to the island, the donkey swimming while buoyed up by barrels on either side. These views are picturesque in the extreme.

The thrilling moments are the shipwreck, a mutiny, a duel with swords and the fall of the loser over a cliff and hundreds of feet down into the sea, meetings with wild animals and what, at the end of the third chapter, appeared to be a conflagration of grass huts.

The conflict in the story is between Frederic Robinson, played by Joe Bonomo, and Sir Charles Leicester, played by Jack Mower, for the love of Emily Montrose, played by Margaret Quimby. Bonomo displays the prodigious feats of the strength for which he is noted, and Mower proves a handsome villain whom, we guess, will undergo reformation before the tenth chapter is closed. Excellent work is done by the rest of the cast.

If "Perils of the Wild" keeps up the pace it sets in the first chapters and continues to present colorful backgrounds, it ought to make a hit. A couple of the feats tax credulity and the meticulous observer will note that Bonomo's natty striped shirt defies dirt and water, but those are minor details.

"California Straight Ahead"

Reginald Denny Scores Again in Thrilling and Comical Universal Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Reginald Denny in "California Straight Ahead" is due to cause explosions of mirth without a single back-fire. Just as the star's racing car speeds true to the mark in the final scenes of the race, so does the comedy from beginning to end register a series of hits. This is another fine Universal-Jewel box office picture, one with pure entertainment as its excuse for being. It will make women forget their aching backs and men their bank balances, while the kids will laugh themselves into hysterics.

Seldom have we seen a picture into which so much diversified comedy has been crowded. Some of it is silly and some of it subtle and some of it rough-and-tumble stuff. There is so much fun-making that everybody will find something at which to roar.

The opening is slow but the picture isn't long in getting under way. Working with Denny in the creation of laughs are Tom Wilson in a Sambo role, and John Steppling and Fred Esmelton, as rival auto manufacturers. Charles Gerrard also has an opportunity for corking comedy as an Englishman interrupted in his bath. Gertrude Olmsted is charming as the heroine.

"California Straight Ahead" is one of those Byron Morgan auto stories made famous by Wallace Reid. The locale is the national highway during a motor trip, with the finish in Los Angeles. A picturesque touch is lent by a sort of huge van in which Denny traverses the deserts and plains of the West, furnishing chicken dinners and radio music to other tourists.

Two incidents in this picture far eclipse the others. The first of these occurs during a storm in the desert when animals escape from a nearby circus and begin occupying the beds of encamped tourists. These scenes become out of the ordinary by reason of the high degree of intelligence of the beasts. For instance, a black bear and a mule actually pursue the hysterical negro and the Englishman, and after Denny has climbed a tree the black bear proceeds to chew the trunk in two. All of these scenes are screams of merriment.

The other incident closes the picture. It has to do with the auto race and presents bona fide scenes of a Los Angeles contest. These scenes are shot from every conceivable angle and furnish thrills galore. Cars upset before your eyes, while others skid dangerously in avoiding the unfortunates. There are all kinds of miraculous escapes.

This part of the picture, however thrilling, still has been given too much footage, because it checks the drama almost to a standstill. The elimination of a couple of hundred feet will improve the action.

"California Straight Ahead," then, ought to please all audiences. It hasn't the dramatic unity of "I'll Show You the Town," Denny's previous feature, but it has snap and dash, is crammed full of good comedy, replete with thrills in the closing scenes and photographed against excellent backgrounds.

Story

Tom Hayden stays so long at the farewell stag party on the eve of his wedding that he arrives late and unconventionally dressed. His family tells him to shift for himself. Sambo, his valet, and he start across the continent in a double-deck auto that was to have been the wedding car de luxe. They pay expenses by supplying chicken dinners and furnishing radio music to tourists en route. Betty Browne, whom Tom was to marry, meets him in the desert with her angry parents. Tom rescues them when a circus breaks loose at night, but eventually leaves the parents behind to elope with Betty. He is arrested on arrival in Los Angeles. Browne and Tom's father have entered cars in the auto race and both seek his services as driver. On promise that he can marry Betty, Tom drives for Browne. He wins after his car takes fire.

"The Isle of Hope"

Richard Talmadge Indulges in Unusually Large Number of Excellent Stunts in This Feature

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Typically a Richard Talmadge vehicle is "The Isle of Hope," the newest F. B. O. production in which this athletic young man is starred. It is a peppy story of adventure aboard ship and on a tropical island.

The star appears in the role of an amateur yachtsman who thirsting for adventure and becoming interested in a girl slips aboard a treasure-hunting ship of which her rough and grouchy uncle is the captain, with a crew composed of a bunch of cut-throats. When discovered and ordered brought before the captain, he leads the whole crew a merry chase, and indulges in about the best athletic stunts of his career. The action here is quite similar to that in one of his former vehicles only very much better. With remarkable ease and agility he performs a rapid-fire succession of stunts, including leaps from one part of the ship to the other, dives through hatchways, clever escapes from a dozen men, and finally a leap or fall from the top of the mast to a sail stretched just above the deck. The way in which he succeeds in conquering and keeping at bay the roughneck crew is highly improbable but it is all good, fast-moving stunt stuff such as his followers revel in.

In the latter half of the picture the pace settles down quite a bit. Talmadge does not have near as many stunts; in fact it is given over more to comedy in which a negro and a Chinese cook figure and which should be good for many laughs. The hero saves the girl when the ship is destroyed by fire. These two parties, as well as several of the crew, land on the island and they all finally land in the dilapidated former home of the pirates and each party thinks the other are spooks. At last after a fight the rascally crew are killed by a storm and Talmadge and the girl find the treasure and are rescued.

Talmadge is thoroughly at home in a vehicle of this sort and Helen Ferguson is excellent as his leading lady. The remainder of the roles are satisfactorily handled. As is the case with the majority of this star's vehicles, plausibility is sacrificed repeatedly for action and opportunities for the star to do his stunts, and as there are an unusually large number of good ones here it should please his followers.

Robert Mackay, amateur yachtman, thirsts for excitement and decides to ship aboard the "Vulture," going on a treasure hunt. He interferes in a quarrel between Captain Duffy and his niece ,Dorothy, and is refused a place in the crew but gets aboard anyway and after a wild chase through the ship is subdued and put to work in the cook's galley. The crew mutinies and throws Duffy overboard. Fire breaks out and Bob saves Dorothy and they land on the treasure island and find a dilapidated castle. They discover that the Chinese and negro cook are also on the island, and finally the rascally mates appear and in a fierce fight Bob is beaten. A hurricane kills the mates and uncovers the treasure and Bob and Dorothy are rescued by friends who have come in a yacht searching for him.

"Peacock Feathers"

Good Acting and Svend Gade's Excellent Direction Makes Good Entertainment of Conventional Story

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

With Jacqueline Logan and Cullen Landis as the stars, "Peacock Feathers," the newest Universal-Jewel production directed by Svend Gade, is the story of a young and beautiful woman reared in luxury who upon finding herself married to a poor man rebelled at first but finally knuckled down and made good as his helpmate.

Due to the good work of the players and the fine direction of Mr. Gade, the story holds the interest and should furnish pleasing entertainment for the majority. He has his players acting as they would in real life rather than in the extremely sentimental manner in which stories of this type are frequently treated.

An effective situation shows the girl's reactions of disgust and adhorence when she discovers that instead of the palatial home she expected, her husband has led her to a farm house which is little better than a hovel, where she has to eat with a slovenly, ill-mannered family. How this grates on her sensibilities is excellently shown and, considering her training, your judgment is somewhat softened when she finally decided to leave with the other fellow. She wins your full sympathy in the end when her husband is injured and she nurses him back to health.

Jacqueline Logan does remarkably good work and Cullen Landis gives a good performance. "Peacock Feathers" does not measure up to the mark set by Svend Gade in "Siege"; at the same time, he did not have as dramatically forceful or unusual a story to work with as in that picture. He has, however, in this production taken a decidedly more conventional type of story and by excellent direction held the interest and made it decidedly entertaining.

Jerry Chandler meets Mimi LeBrun while she is en route to St. Louis and falls in love with her and finally follows her to that city and proposes. She loves him but as she is accustomed to luxury and the family fortune is depleted she turns him down for an oil millionaire, Andy Clark. Jerry's uncle dies and leaves Jerry a ranch, which he has described as a palace. Believing he is wealthy, Jerry and Mimi elope and find the ranch house is an ordinary, somewhat dilapidated affair. Mimi feels she has been tricked but pride will not let her return home and finally she begins to take an interest in things and help Jerry, who is enthusiastic. Christmas approaches and when Jerry goes for a tree Andy appears and finally persuades Mimi to go away with him. Just then she sees a signal fire on the mountain and sensing something has happened to Jerry, she realizes she really loves him and goes to him and finds happiness in taking care of him while he is recovering from an injury to his leg.

"Souls For Sables"

Tiffany Productions Successfully Blends the Sure-Fire Box Office Ingredients

Reviewed by Robert Anthony

Tiffany Productions is doing its share for the independent field. In "Souls for Sables" they showed willingness to spend the money necessary to gather a cast that would do credit to any organization's all-star releases; they went further, and gave to the director with unstinted hand the production and settings of the picture.

The result is a melodrama skilfully blending all the tried and true elements of box office success placed in a setting of beauty and lavishness. A title and cast to sell, a story and suspense to satisfy, and a woman angle that is sure fire.

Claire Windsor and Eugene O'Brien divide the honors, with Eileen Percy, Anders Randolph and Robert Ober contributing capably to the result. Miss Windsor is seen in the role of the innocently suspected wife who has been led into her predicament by an uncontrollable passion for sables and her ignorance of the fact that her means of getting them may be falsely construed. The story runs through familiar channels, but able direction and tempo succeed in giving the situations a full share of suspense.

The settings throughout are on a scale of sumptuousness that will delight women fans, and when the moment of the fur display comes—well, we'll almost wager that there will be women who will return for a second look at the picture just to feast their eyes on those cherished furs. On the other hand, we don't think the men will object to returning when opportunity is given for another glimpse of Claire Windsor under the shower.

Remember "Rich Men's Wives" and the combination of box office essentials it presented? Figure this one the same way—and then add an extra lavishness of staging, plus the irresistible appeal to women in the gowns and furs seen. It can't go wrong; you can't go wrong.

Alice Garlan.....Claire Windsor
Fred Garlan.....Eugene O'Brien
Helen Ralston.....Claire Adams
Mrs. Kendall.....Edith Yorke
Mr. Nelson.....George Fawcett
Esther Hamilton.....Eileen Percy
Harrison Morrill.....Anders Randolf
Jim Hamilton.....Robert Ober

Suggested from "Garlan & Co." by David Graham Phillips.
Directed by James C. McKay.
Under the personal supervision of A. P. Younger.
Length, 7,600 feet.

Story

Fred Garlan is the usual attentive and devout honeymooner, but when he settles down to staid married bliss business claims all his attention and there is little time to shower on his pretty wife. The latter turns elsewhere for amusement and finds it in the fast stepping circle including Esther Hamilton and Harrison Morrill. Alice Garlan envies Esther's magnificent sable coat but doesn't reckon the price she has paid to Harrison Morrill to gain it, nor the life of deception she must lead with her devoted husband, Jim Hamilton. Morrill manoeuvers so that through combined winnings at poker and in speculation Alice secures the price of a sable and he offers to aid her in selecting it. Events work around so that it appears to Fred Garlan that she too has been added to the list of Morrill's conquests and there is a separation, eventually followed by the reunion that brings about a happy ending.

"Wreckage"

Banner Presents Dramatic Production with May Allison and Holmes Herbert

"Wreckage," a Banner-Ben Verschleiser production with May Allison, Holmes Herbert, John Miljan, Rosemary Theby and James Morrison, tells the dramatic story of a man under suspicion of murder who, after much suffering, finally clears his reputation and finds happiness with the girl he loves. The picture is an adaptation of the novel, "Salvage," by Izola Forester. Scott Dunlap has given it smooth, effective production, with the events telescoping into a crescendo of action.

The big scenes are the homicide, a terrific storm at sea and the foundering of the ship, a robbery of pearls while the ship is going down, the rescue of passengers and a battle over the heroine in a lonely hut in the mountains.

The characterization is well taken care of by the players. Holmes Herbert does good work as the gentlemanly physician to whom the stigma of murder attaches, and Miss Allison is charming and sincere as the heroine. John Miljan is a polished villain, and James Morrison satisfactory in a brief juvenile role. Rosemary Theby has a good part as villainess.

Along with the story of reputation wrecking runs one of jewel smuggling that allows for the introduction of more melodrama than the main story provides. These have been carefully welded together by Director Dunlap.

Cast

Rene .....May Allison
Stuart Ames.....Holmes Herbert
Maurice Dysart.....John Miljan
Margot .....Rosemary Theby
Grant Demarest.....James Morrison

From Izola Forester's novel, "Salvage."
Directed by Scott Dunlap.
Length, 5,992 feet.

Story

Circumstances point to Stuart Ames as the murderer of Grant Demarest, but he is cleared by the law. Demarest had been accidentally shot by Margot, an adventuress. Ames sails to forget the stigma attached to his name and on shipboard meets Rene, with whom he falls in love. Maurice Dysart, a gem smuggler, attacks Rene's father to steal a pearl necklace just as the ship founders in a storm. Ames rescues Rene. The two next meet at Margot's home where Dysart appears, posing as a nobleman. To prevent discovery of his real nature he kidnaps Rene to a mountain hut. Ames follows and rescues her, while a shot from Dysart's gun accidentally wounds Margot fatally. She confesses the shooting of Remarest, clearing Ames' reputation, and Ames and Rene marry.

"Her Sister from Paris"

Constance Talmadge Pleases in Sprightly Comedy for First National

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

New York's Capitol Theatre audiences roared with laughter this week throughout "Her Sister from Paris," a sprightly picture starring Constance Talmadge and produced by Joseph M. Schenck for First National. This is listed as a comedy-drama but may be more properly called farce comedy, since great liberties are taken with mentalities of the principal characters and the situations.

Constance plays two very different roles, one as a timid young housewife and the other as a self-possessed, vampish Parisian dancer. The two characters are twin sisters and the plot has its being in the fact that the husband vamps his own wife, thinking her the sister and the dancer. The locale is Vienna but the atmosphere of the picture isn't obtrusively foreign.

With such excellent players to aid him as the star, Ronald Colman, George K. Arthur and Margaret Mann, Director Sidney A. Franklin has turned out a comedy fairly teeming with sophisticated humor. Women particularly will laugh at the spectacle of the husband, torn between duty to wife and love for the supposed dancer; the way in which both women succeed in making a complete ass of him and the ingenuous unsophistication of a youngster also in love with the dancer. The husband, played by Colman, is very much the butt of the comedy and he proves a fine foil to Constance's genius. Arthur also does splendidly as the youngster, and Margaret Mann registers in her few appearances.

Considered from the standpoint of light entertainment, "Her Sister from Paris" ought to go over with a bang before almost any audience. The action never slackens, the acting is perfect, the situations are very funny and some of the subtitles real bits of genius.

The climax in merriment comes when the husband elopes with his wife.

Length, 7,255 feet.

Story

Joseph Weyringer, Viennese author, and his wife, Helen, fight until the latter leaves. She meets her twin sister, La Perry, a dancer, and as the two are alike except for a mole, Helen poses as the dancer and vamps her husband. He is torn between duty to wife and infatuation for the fake sister. Finally the supposed dancer persuades him to elope, and the supposed wife and escort find the couple at a hotel. The trick is disclosed when the husband has suffered enough and husband and wife are reunited.

"The Man Who Found Himself"

Thomas Meighan Produces Another Entertaining Prison Picture for Paramount

Tom Meighan audiences will like the Paramount star in "The Man Who Found Himself," a picture built along lines similar to "The City of Silent Men." Tom takes the blame for the misuse of money by his brother, a bank cashier, and later escapes the prison to return home and spoil the romance of his enemy, who marries his sweetheart, played by Virginia Valli. This crook dies when caught robbing his own bank, and the way is clear for Tom and the girl to marry.

The story follows very conventional lines —such conventional lines, in fact, that each episode of the plot may be forecasted with certainty. It stumbles slightly in places but immediately pulls itself together and again strikes an even pace. The prison scenes are excellently done except that a sort of goody-goody atmosphere threatens to lead one to believe that here indeed is a model prison with model tenants. This atmosphere is partly counteracted when, late in the story, Tom becomes more human by seeking revenge. But, in the end, fate is the real avenger, not he.

The star shows himself still the possessor of a pleasing personality, and Miss Valli is good to look upon and effective as the sweetheart. Frank Morgan has a good part as the villain, and Ralph Morgan is excellent as the weakling. Lynn Fontanne of New York stage fame and Julia Hoyt of society fame make brief appearances. Hugh Cameron and Victor Moore supply conventional but skilful comedy relief.

The picture will please Meighan audiences but they won't remember is as long as some other pictures the star has made.

Length, 7,298 feet.

Story

Edwin Macaulay, Jr., takes $40,000 from his father's bank, in which he is cashier, to buck Wall Street and loses it all. Lon Morris, a rival small-town banker, frames him by tipping off the state banking commission. Tom Macaulay, though in love with Nora Brooks, takes the blame and is sent to prison. She at last marries Morris. Her wedding night, Tom, a trusty, breaks prison and meets her father after she is married. He tells her she has married the betrayer of her family. Later released from prison, Tom robs Morris's bank and puts the money in his home, framing him, and tells Morris of his revenge. Morris himself has misused funds, plans to flee and goes to the bank to clean it out but is shot by a watchman. Tom and Nora are free to marry.

"The Wheel"

Fox Offers Pleasing Human Interest Melodrama Adapted from Successful Stage Production

Reviewed by O. S. Sewell

Under Victor Schertzinger's direction, Winchell Smith's "The Wheel," which scored a success on the stage, has been transferred to the screen with Harrison Ford and Claire Adams in the leading roles.

This picture is a melodrama of modern life. The especial significance of the title seems to lie in the fact that it is through the use of the roulette wheel that the villain plays upon the hero's love for gambling and gets him in his power; one can also find a deeper significance, however, in the strange and ever changing situations brought about by the turns of the wheel of life.

"The Wheel" is the type of picture that should afford satisfactory entertainment for the lovers of melodrama for it is built around a variety of familiar characters including the snobbish parents who disinherit the hero because of his romance with a girl who is not in the wealthy set but who is true blue, the villainous owner of the gambling palace who is the hero's rival, a bright little Irish maid and a jockey who refuses to throw a big race.

The action is built around such sure fire situations as the disinheriting of the son, his elopement with the girl he loves, the scene where the villain traps the hero with a crooked roulette wheel which results in the hero's forging his employer's check, and losing the money, the loving wife's brave attempt to get money to save him, her betting part of it on a horse race and losing, the misunderstanding of the hero when he sees his wife with the villain and shoots at him wounding her, and the final recognition of the wife by the hero's father.

Around such familiar situations there has been built a story that at all times holds the interest due to the work of the players, continuity and good direction by Mr. Schertzinger. The interest is quickened by the fact that the story veers from the beaten path in having the hero a rather week-willed chap who never does anything heroic and finally showing the villain as being a man with a heart after all and having him realize he has been a cad and a rotter and make amends that will save the hero.

There is good comedy relief furnished by a romance between a little Irish girl and a Jewish boy who part of the time is a stock clerk for the heroine and at other times a jockey for the villain. There is good logic and considerable quaint humor that will get the laughs in his observations, in fact he is the most original and interesting character in the picture. Harrison Ford and Mahlon Hamilton are satisfactory as the hero and villain respectively.

A good punch has been given to the racing scene by making it a steeplechase with its extra hazards and having the little Jewish jockey who has your sympathy fall and lose the race just as he gets in the lead and is nearing the home stretch.

"The Wheel" is an all-around good melodrama and although the earlier reels are inclined to lag and could stand trimming to snap them up, it should prove a pleasing attraction for the average patron.

Ted Morton, son of a wealthy banker squanders his money gambling and finally gets mixed in a scandal and his parents urge him to get married and settle down. Ted decides to do this and informs them he is to marry Kate O'Hara a milliner. Ted's father goes to Kate and she tells him she has repeatedly refused Ted. Kate meets Baker who takes her to dinner. Ted follows and tells her Baker is a notorious gambler. They finally come to blows. Ted's father disinherits him and he and Kate elope and he goes into the auto business. Baker, determined to show Ted up and win Kate buys a car from Ted and arranges to have it delivered at the club. Ted's old passion for gambling returns and he forges the check and loses the money. Kate gets hold of part of the debt and is persuaded to bet on a horse which falls when it is in the lead. The jockey, a little friend of Kate's is badly injured and he begs Baker who owns the horse to be a sport and realize he has lost Kate. Baker goes to Kate and acknowledging he has been a rotter, gives her a new check. Ted returns and misunderstanding, shoots at Baker but hits Kate. The wound is only trivial and this trouble brings about the recognition of Kate by Ted's family.

"Felix the Cat Trifles with Time"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Pat Sulivan cartoon heralds its story in the subtitle, "Oh, Father Time, a cat can't live nowadays; turn me back to a better age just for a day." Father Time obligingly does this, and prehistoric monsters render the cat's life miserable until "Time's up." Then pussy concludes, "No more stone age for me. Give me the garbage." The subject is well drawn, generally entertaining, and amusing in spots. —S. S.

"A Runaway Taxi"

(Pathe—"Stereoscopiks"—One Reel)

For a "Stereoscopiks" this Pathe one-reeler, "A Runaway Taxi," does not afford the multiplicity of thrills which some of the other recent offerings in this class possess. It is a fast moving race that the taxi, with the audience as its fare, maintains with traffic cops and other moving things in a congested city thoroughfare.—T. W.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"The Big Game Hunter"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this number of the Van Bibber series, Earle Foxe in the title role wins laurels as a big game hunter. Earle's party visit Africa in search of specimens of butterflies and bugs and he particularly wants to capture a rare bug "The Assassin." It happens that there is a man-eating lion with the same name and a big bet is placed on Van who shows all the confidence in the world that he will capture "The Assasin." There is a good scene where he described how he will do this by chasing his quarry until it is tired, catching it in a net and then chloroforming it. A rabbit scares Van and he runs away. A native chief has a flivver and Van undertakes to run it. It gets out of control and runs through the Jungle and the lion leaps in and gets tangled up in the net. The party is dumbfounded when Van appears with the car and the lion. This number is thoroughly amusing.—C. S. S.

"Soup to Nuts"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Neal Burns, Vera Steadman, William Irving, Gale Henry and others comprise the cast of "Soup to Nuts," an A-1 Educational comedy. There is foolishness galore in this one and it is all put over with that touch of technique which usually insures hilarious amusement for any audience. In-laws and old lovers, a fire, and much stupidity on the part of the characters, furnish the material for "Soup to Nuts." Burns as the butler husband, who hoodoes the evening by cutting up a bar of soap in the soup, is particularly funny. The fire scene, with the amateur smoke eater putting out the flames before the arrival of the paid department, keeps things rolling to a fast termination.—T. W.

"Props and Spirits"

(Educational—Cartoon—One Reel)

"Props and the Spirits," a pen and ink vaudeville, may be generally considered as not up to Cartoonist Earl Hurd's usual standard. It is comprised of a few actions, mostly behind the scenes, and their almost constant repetition is wearisome. The fat tumblers in the earlier part of the reel may afford some amusement.—T. W.

"Barrier Busters"

(Pathe—"Sportlight"—One Reel)

"Barrier Busters" is the title of Grantland Rice's latest "Sportlight." It is a very interesting compilation of the sports now indulged by both sexes. It also goes to prove that the most exhausting games now have worthy woman participants who in many cases are in a class with leading male stars of the athletic field. Tennis, jumping, racing and soccer are some of the comparisons made.—T. W.

"Barnyard Follies"

Cartoonist Paul Terry dusts off one of his old ideas and puts it over with some new angles in "Barnyard Follies." Getting his pen creatures to laugh is one of the new slants, and this in itself should make any audience hilarious.—T. W.

"Stranded"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Edna Marian has the lead in this Century two-reeler, with Hilliard Karr playing opposite. They appear as rival bus drivers for a country hotel that is very short of guests. Considerable ingenuuity is shown in their schemes to get patronage. Finally Edna lands a stranded theatrical troupe. Good slapstick stunts have been introduced in a dining room scene, and Edna pulls some amusing stunts as a scrub-lady who tries to imitate the dancing of the chorus girls while they are rehearsing. The troupe tries to make a getaway without paying, but she chases them and takes all of their baggage. Many of the situations are of a familiar calibre, but the action keeps moving at a good pace. It is well up to the Century average and should please slapstick fans.—C. S. S.

"The Party"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A slight idea but an amusing one furnishes the theme for this number of Universal's "Sweet Sixteen" comedies, starring Arthur Lake. Arthur to get pin money sells vanity cases in a tough neighborhood, and when he prepared to give a party to his swell friends, his mother by mistake sends out the invitations to his customers. As a result they come along bringing their Bowery sweethearts and Bowery manners, and to get rid of them Arthur and Eddie start a fake fight. All join in and soon the entire place is a wreck. All who have enjoyed the previous issues in this series should find this one amusing—C. S. S.

"Dynamite's Daughter"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

In this issue of the Mustang series, starring Josie Sedgwick, she portrays a character known as Lightning, the daughter of Dynamite Jones, and displays all of the qualities expected of such a combination. The plot concerns an attempt of a new mine superintendent to defraud the men of their pay, and it turns out that he is the man for whom she has been looking, who deserted her sister when she was dying. She forgives him because of his little son, but he double-crosses her and in the chase which follows he falls down a mountainside and is killed. There is plenty of typical western action, including a full quota of hard riding. Miss Sedgwick proves equal to the average male star, both when it comes to stunts, riding and work with the rope. It is one of the best of the series.—C. S. S.

"Pleasure Bent"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

In his newest comedy for Universal Charles Puffy is introduced as a prominent figure in a law firm. He appears in regular Fifth Avenue togs but immediately removes them, disclosing a janitor's uniform underneath. A woman wants a divorce and the head of the firm, played by Billy Engle, dresses Puffy up as a lady and has him vamp the husband. They have difficulty in securing a compromising photograph, and Engle lands under water with his camera. The "shot" turns out to be a fish. They decide to go out of the divorce business. It is an average number of the series, with quite a few laughs for the slapstick patron.—C. S. S.

"Ko-Ko Nuts"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Out-of-the-Inkwell cartoon by Max Fleischer deals with an insane asylum. In this the clown and dog entertain themselves by mocking the inmates, and finally set them all loose. The keeper returns to find them sitting on the steps and goes mad himself. In the end a real human guard appears and nabs the artist.—S. S.

Sax Announces Three on Gotham's List of Twelve

WITH the completion of "The Part Time Wife," the fifth of a series of twelve Gotham Productions released through the Lumas Film Corporation, Sam Sax announces the titles and order of the next three, the sixth, seventh and eighth releases.

Number six on the schedule will be "The Shadow on the Wall," from the popular book by J. Breckenbridge Ellis. This is a mystery melodrama with Eileen Percy and Creighton Hale heading a large and well-known film cast. This is now in production and will be ready by September 15th.

The seventh production has been definitely decided upon as "One of the Bravest," an original fire department story by James J. Tynan. Ralph Lewis has been chosen to head the cast. Preliminary production work and casting is now being done and the production will be started before September 1st.

Negotiations are now under way to arrange for the use of a large traveling circus which will be used for the background of the eighth Gotham release which is a circus story entitled "Hearts and Spangles." The casting of the leading feminine role offers great difficulties in this picture as the heroine in the story is a bareback rider. There are lots of bareback riders and lots of screen actresses but to find one who can combine both abilities is not so easy.

With the completion of these releases the Gotham program will be 75 per cent completed and production plans call for the entire schedule to be completed and prints and accessories in the exchanges six months ahead of schedule time.

Last of Kit Carson Western Series Is Completed

Nathan Hirsh, president of Aywon Film Corporation, announces that the last of his series of six western features starring Kit Carson has been completed. It is called "The Pony Express Rider," and tells of one of the old pony express riders. Kit Carson, of course, enacts the leading role. He is supported by Pauline Curley in the leading feminine part and the balance of the cast is composed of Bud Osborne, Hal Ferner, Edith Clifton, Oliver Jones and the two Indian chiefs.

The features already completed in Aywon's Kit Carson series are "His Greatest Battle," "Riding Wild," "Ride 'Em, Cowboy," "The Wallopin' Kid" and "Twin Six O'Brien."

International Given Permission to "Shoot" Versailles Fountain

FOR the first time in history the famous fountains in the garden of Versailles, just outside of Paris, have been photographed at night with gigantic electric lights playing upon them and turning their innumerable tiny streams into a million different waterspouts of dazzling, gorgeous beauty.

Ever since the war the Versailles fountains have played only at intervals because of the water shortage and not since the beginning of hostilities have they been turned on at night.

For two years International Newsreel has been attempting to secure the necessary permission to have the fountains play at night in order that the gorgeous spectacle might be filmed. This permission was finally granted and the motion pictures made exclusively by International Newsreel are being shown in the current issue at leading theatres throughout the country.

The enormous size of the fountains made the lighting of them a difficult task. Trucks with sunlight arc lamps invaded the sacred precincts of the Versailles garden, a privilege that had never previously been granted.

Fairbanks' "Don Q" Enthuses Critics on Big City Papers

'DON Q' has all the elements that make the pulses throb and the blood run faster—love, danger, suspense—magnificentiy done, this triumph," wrote the San Francisco Chronicle, when the new Douglas Fairbanks-United Artists Corporation release opened at the Imperial Theatre, San Francisco. "'Don Q' is good Fairbanks; the best for a long time. It is bound to please his immense following and to bring back those who may have felt he was getting too 'high-brow.'"

"The very quintessence of romance—moonlight and roses, swords and sabers, treachery and intrigue, with love triumphant in the end—gorgeousness, novelty and action," said the San Francisco Call. "The picture is intriguing from beginning to end, and worthy of a niche in screendom's hall of fame. It is a master picture. Ye Gods, it IS a Master Picture!"

"Douglas Fairbanks in 'Don Q' has out-Fairbanked himself," said the San Francisco Examiner. "It is a thoroughly entertaining picture with speed, comic qualities and a sufficiency of carnage. Nobody who likes Fairbanks can be disappointed in this."

"'Don Q' is magnificently staged, counts its thrills by the dozen, furnishes plenty to laugh at and has been an enormous box-office success wherever it has played," said the Chicago Tribune when the Douglas Fairbanks-United Artists Corporation release opened at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, to capacity business.

"'Don Q' is a tricky picture, full of the tricks of story-telling and of romance, and of death and danger. As an entertainment it is of 100 per cent quality," wrote the Chicago Daily News.

"A fine picture is 'Don Q' and as good an entertainment as you can ask for," is the verdict of the Chicago Post. "It is a true melodrama de luxe. It is moviesque, gorgeously so. It is the sort of gay, thrilling spectacular drama which makes one realize how good a photoplay can be when it stays in its own field. Fairbanks is more than ever the acrobat and so graceful that his movements are a joy to watch."

"Put down 'Don Q' as one of the things to see," said the Chicago Evening American. "It is of the fine stock of which that earlier stirring adventure melodrama, 'The Mark of Zorro,' was composed. There is never a let-up in the succession of thrills, moments of humor and other qualities that go to make up an hour of solid entertainment."

"Douglas Fairbanks never was better than in 'Don Q,'" said the Boston Telegram at the opening of the new Fairbanks feature which began a four-weeks run at the Colonial Theatre. "With amazing agility and speed he races through a series of adventures and never once does he lose his pleasing powers. From the opening of the film until the end he sets a pace of thrills which never falters."

"'Don Q' is a swift action melodrama, full of glamor and bravado and heroic deeds calculated to make the blood tingle and the breath come faster," said the Boston Traveler. "The screen's most athletic star is as full of surprising stunts and feats, as resourceful and tireless as can be imagined. And there is as gallant a series of superhuman feats as ever an audience rose and cheered. It is a gorgeous production."

"Douglas Fairbanks has added another to his amazing list," said the Boston Herald. "The action in 'Don Q' is graphic and continuous. Never does it slacken for a moment."

"'Don Q is one continuous, often hilarious romp—sheer essence of Fairbanks, undiluted, self-confessed," said the Boston Transcript.

Rudolph Valentino starts "The Lone Eagle," his first United Artists production. Joseph M. Schenck, the producer, and Douglas Fairbanks, another United Artist, come over to wish him Bon Voyage. The picture was taken on a very hot day, and that's the reason Rudy, encased in the heavy Russian uniform, is carrying the fan. Left to right are Clarence Brown, director; Joseph M. Schenck, Rudolph Valentino and Douglas Fairbanks.

Lew Cody, who has just signed a long-term contract with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. He will be featured, for the most part, in roles of the light comedian type, such as he portrayed with such marked success in "A Slave of Fashion."

Famous Police Dog In U-Jewel Films

Universal has acquired the services of Muro, one of the most celebrated Belgian police dogs in the world. The famous canine, who stands high in police records both in this country and on the Continent, will be featured in a series of Jewel pictures. The dog has been attached to the New York police force. Muro is owned by Henry Chieyssal, trainer of Belgian and Shepherd dogs. On the occasion of signing up with Universal, Chieyssal gave a demonstration of the dog's intelligence and stunts at the Deauville Kennels, Springfield, L. I. The exhibition, arranged by Mrs. Maud Robinson Toombs, of the Universal publicity staff, was witnessed by newspapermen, and filmed by the International Newsreel. The dog now is on the way to Universal City, Cal.

Pathe News Editor Studies Conditions in The Field to Improve Exhibitor Service

EMANUEL COHEN, editor of Pathe News and Pathe Review, has returned to the home-office in New York after a five-weeks tour of the country for the purpose of studying conditions in the field at first hand and perfecting certain plans he has had in mind for some time past for the still further improvement of the Pathe News and Pathe Review service to exhibitors.

The efficient functioning of a worldwide news-gathering agency like Pathe News depends to a large degree, in Mr. Cohen's opinion, on the personal knowledge the head of the system has of his men and the conditions that they work under. The trip just completed was, accordingly, in line with Mr. Cohen's practice of keeping in continuous touch with his field personnel and learning at first hand of the circumstances under which his camermen must operate. His study of local conditions was followed in each instance by conferences with his staff camermen in their respective localities. At these conferences plans were laid for increasing the mobility of the camera units in covering their assignments and for the subsequent speedy transmission of the news pictures secured.

Fourteen key-centers in all were visited by Mr. Cohen during his recent trip, including Chicago, Minneapolis, Butte, Seattle, Portland, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Denver, Oklahoma City, Des Moines, Omaha, Kansas City, St. Louis, and Detroit. While in Los Angeles Mr. Cohen took the occasion of dropping in at the Hal Roach, Mack Sennett and Harold Lloyd studios, and later while in Oklahoma territory called on the Miller Brothers at their famous "101 Ranch" at Ponca City, where the forthcoming Pathe serial, "Wild West," was produced.

"One of the most fruitful features of my recent trip was the opportunity I enjoyed to meet important exhibitors in all sections that I visited. Through the courtesy of the Pathe branch managers at the various cities where I stopped, I was enabled to meet hundreds of important theatre owners and managers and discuss with them at considerable length, audiences' reaction to the various types of subject matter incorporated in our news reel. These conferences yielded some very vital information for future guidance, in assembling and presenting material both for the Pathe News and Pathe Review. Wherever I went exhibitors expressed their appreciation of the high standard of service maintained by both these reels. The Pathe News was especially singled out, and its many scoops and records for service during the past year favorably commented upon. The recent scoop on the Santa Barbara earthquake was an example in point. Theatre owners everywhere remarked on the excellent service they had had on the earthquake pictures, and this sort of thing, of course, builds up a friendship for Pathe News, whose worth can never be estimated. The exhibitors with whom I spoke expressed frequently the opinion that the news reel had become a highly important feature of their programs, and one that they were devoting more and more attention to both from the angle of advertising and exploitation.

"As chief of the Pathe News Reel organization, I find it necessary to make frequent trips into the field so as to be personally cognizant of the conditions and obstacles confronting our cameramen in their arduous and oftentimes dangerous assignments. The matter of distributing news reels is also a work that requires close personal observation and understanding if the news reel is to secure the utmost in efficient service to the thousands of Pathe News customers throughout the country. In fact, I am fully convinced that every producer, irrespective of the field of his operations, should visit branch exchanges and observe their methods at first hand. It would be an invaluable experience for them, because it would inevitably give them assurance that their product is receiving thorough and efficient attention. The thorough grasp the Pathe Branches have on conditions in their territories and their ready analysis of causes that affect the value of the News and Review were indeed very keen.

"It is my firm belief," concluded Mr. Cohen, "that the outlook for Pathe News and Pathe Review for the coming season is the most promising we have ever faced. The degree of enthusiasm for these subjects I found in the branches and among the exhibitors shows that both of them are growing remarkably in popular appeal."

Philadelphia Dailies Give Editorial Praise to "Shorts"

NEWSPAPERS are coming to a realization of the important part that the short-subject really plays in theatre programs and are gradually giving more and more space to reviews of "shorts."

A current example of the recognition of the short-subject as an important part of the theatre program occurred in Philadelphia where the newspapers with one accord gave prominent mention "Mary, Queen of Tots," an "Our Gang" comedy released by Pathe, which provided the comedy portion of a week's bill at the Stanley Theatre in the Quaker City.

Philadelphia Record: "Another feature is the juvenile comedy entitled 'Mary, Queen of Tot,' a clever bit of romanticism, for which the imaginative mind of a child who falls asleep and starts to dream forms a rich field. It winds up as a realistic comedy. The startling vivification of inert dolls and puppets is a most remarkable piece of work turned out from the Hal Roach studios."

Philadelphia Evening Bulletin: "The Stanley has a novel comedy, 'Mary, Queen of Tots,' by 'Our Gang,' in which 'The Rascals,' by trick photoplay, are reduced to Lilliputian proportions."

"Fighting The Flames" Wins Critics; Is a Broadway Hit

THE first New York showing of the big Columbia fire feature, "Fighting the Flames," took place last week at B. S. Moss's Broadway Theatre, and was given strong boosts by all the Metropolitan reviewers.

Louella O. Parsons, of the American, concluded her review with . . . "I am willing to wager nothing short of an earthquake or fire will get you out of your seat before the final reel."

Starring in this drama of fire-fighters are William Haines and Dorothy Devore. Fire officials all over the country have sent letters and telegrams of praise wherever it has been shown, which has added to its exploitation value. The fire scenes and the rescue "shots" are some of the most thrilling ever filmed.

The Broadway Theatre was anticipated in its exploitation by the Commonwealth Film Corporation. This great exchange had and still has a fine wood-cut effect cutout in the lobby of their building of "Fighting the Flames." Thousands of film folk pass through the building every week and the display cannot be missed.

With an impressive lobby and marquee display at the Broadway Theatre, the back of the building, which faces on Seventh Avenue, bears a huge twenty-four sheet in brilliant colors of a starring scene from the production. Showmen agree that this is one of the most effective Columbia posters ever made.

"Fighting the Flames" tells the story of a wild young heir who, by a strange combination of circumstances, becomes a member of that clan of American heroes who are ready at all times to risk their lives in their eternal battle with the hungry flames.

Supporting William Haines and Dorothy Devore is a strong cast of popular favorites, including David Torrence, Sheldon Lewis, Frankie Darrow, Charlie Murray and William Welch, under Reeves Eason's direction.

Next Barrymore Picture

"Don Juan" is Picked by Warners to Be Next for Popular Player

Warner Bros. have selected "Don Juan" from the immortal poem by Lord Byron for John Barrymore's next picture when he completes "The Sea Beast," which was started last week.

This is in keeping with the star's request for "an entirely different role in every picture," which is regarded as a good show angle for the exhibitors. From a hardened old harpooner of a whaling ship in "The Sea Beast," Mr. Barrymore will done period costumes of the eighteenth century, and portray the amorous adventures of the hero of the poem.

"Don Juan" is supposed to be the love affairs of Lord Byron who wrote it, and should make a good box-office picture of considerable drawing power. It lends itself to the same atmosphere as the star's Beau Brummell," but is a story of an entirely different type.

It will be some time before actual work on this new production is started, as Barrymore is due to leave Hollywood soon for the coast of Java to obtain the big thrills for "The Sea Beast."

Books "Parisian Nights"

Pantages, Los Angeles, Plays F. B. O. Film on 25th Anniversary

"Parisian Nights," Gothic F. B. O. Gold Bond production wihch began its career at the Capitol Theatre, New York, was selected by Pantages, Los Angeles, to celebrate the theatre's twenty-fifth anniversary.

When the film, which is a colorful romance of the Paris underworld, in which Elaine Hammerstein and Lou Tellegen are co-starred and which was directed by Al Santell, directorial genius of "Fools in the Dark" played the theatre, the following wire was sent to the home office of F. B. O.:

"We are indeed pleased to state that our selection of your production, "Parisian Nights," for our twenty-fifth anniversary picture has proven that our judgment of this picture was correct: we have played to capacity every day since the opening day. Regards."

Lumas Announces New Picture for "Thunder," the Marvel Dog

Announcement from the Lumas Film Corporation, distributors of Gotham Productions, states that owing to the success of "Thunder," the Marvel Dog, in "His Master's Voice," and the demand for more productions featuring this clever canine, a third "Thunder" feature entitled "The Phantom of the Forest" will be included in this year's schedule of twelve pictures.

The third "dog" picture will be put in the place of the picture previously announced as "The Forest of Destiny" and will be released early in the spring as one of the final pictures of the current program.

Frank Foster Davis, owner and trainer of "Thunder," is now en route East on his way to Germany to secure new pedigreed police dog stock and to exhibit "Thunder" in a special police dog show to be held in Berlin. On his return he will start work in "Thunder's" second picture this year, "The Sign of the Claw," a novelty in dog pictures, being a modern big city detective story with the dog in the leading role. The story was written especially for "Thunder" by L. A. Young, better known to the film world as "Lon" Young.

United Company Buys Factory Site for Shaw Color Pictures

PURCHASE of a plot of ground in New New York City last week by the United Color Pictures, Inc., for the erection of a three-story laboratory and factory building brought to light the fact that a new color process is soon to be offered to the industry on a definite commercial scale.

The new color process is the invention and development of Mr. Joseph Shaw, well known in the industry as a photographic expert, and until recent years, when he started to work on his color plans, associated with the Eastman Company for a period of twelve years. Mr. Shaw is authority for the statement that the new factory will be in operation by the middle of November, and that orders for work are already being taken.

The process sponsored by the newly-organied United Color Pictures, Inc., was originally financed by George J. Gould, the nationally famous railroad man and capitalist. Since his death the interest of the estate has been taken over by the Barnes Finance Corporation, a strong Mid-West organization, which is now associated with Mr. Shaw in the United firm.

Representatives of the Barnes organization interviewed during the week were enthusiastic over the preliminary demand for the process in which they have become interested, and very optimistic regarding the probable market. More business has already been offered by concerns who have seen samples of the work than it will be possible to turn out at the start.

Virtues claimed for the new process include an exceptional range and softness of color; unusually close registering, and the fact that the process aids the blending with the black and white. The inventor, previous to his association with Eastman, was prominent in photographic circles in England and Germany, ano entered motion picture work with a background of firm scientific knowledge.

Concerning his new process, Mr. Shaw was reticent to speak, preferring to allow the many samples of his work that have already been seen by picture experts to do the talking. "It is not for the inventor," he declares, "to proclaim the strong points of his own creation, for the parent is naturally enthusiastic. But practical picture producers who have viewed the United Color Company's work are unanimous in telling me that at last it looks as though the picture industry is getting the color process for which it has been looking. Commercially practicable prices and fineness of quality have been the demands. We will meet the market in price, thus putting natural color within reach of all, and as far as quality is concerned I feel confident that any picture men who view the new process on the screen will agree that we have finally got away from the jarring notes and limitations of color film work of the past."

Buchowetzki Starts Work on Big Universal Feature Picture

WORK has begun at Universal City on one of the biggest spectacles ever contemplated for the screen. It is "The Midnight Sun," and is an epic of Russia in the days of the Czar, and it is expected to be more lavish and spectacular than "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "The Phantom of the Opera." It is being directed by Dimitri Buchowetzki.

The production will be made with an all-star cast. Three principals have been selected, Laura La Plante, Pat O'Malley and George Siegmann. The romantic phases of the story concern the rivalry of the Grand Duke Sergius and Kusmin, the money king of Russia, over the heart of the premiere ballerina of the Imperial Ballet. Miss La Plante has the role of the ballerina. O'Malley that of the Grand Duke and Siegmann that of the banker. It is expected that Raymond Keane will be assigned to the part of Lieutenant Alexis, the real sweetheart of the dancer.

There will be at least a dozen more principals, while hundreds will take part in the crowd scenes, the brilliant court affairs and other such scenes. The story has been adapted and scenarized by A. P. Younger, and will be the first great Russian picture to be made exclusively in this country.

Work is now under way on the construction of a replica of the Imperial Russian Ballet of Petrograd, where many of the colorful scenes will be made.

Off to Australia

Thomas A. Curran, Representing Rayart Pictures, Sails With Mrs. Curran

Thomas A. Curran, special representative of W. Ray Johnston, of Rayart Pictures, sailed last week with Mrs. Curran from San Francisco for a six weeks' visit with his mother and friends in Australia. While in Australia Mr. Curran will visit a number of exchanges who are handling Rayart product.

According to Mr. Johnston, the Rayart output for the first year proved very successful in the Australian territory, and the 1925-26 program of Rayart has already been purchased for that country.

Harold Lloyd is an athletic young "shaver" in "The Freshman," his latest Pathe feature comedy, set for general release September 20. This feature goes into the B. S. Moss Colony Theatre in New York City for an indefinite run beginning this week.

"The Freshman" Press Book Is a Notable Achievement

By CHAS. E. HASTINGS

THE press book for "The Freshman," Harold Lloyd's current release on the Pathe program, is at hand and takes high rank among the best things of its kind to be offered to the showman.

Prepared by the Pathe Exploitation Department, under direction of S. Barret McCormick, Manager of Exploitation, this "promotion plan book" covers every essential detail of advertising, publicity and exploitation that a theatre owner could possibly ask. And a lot of aids hitherto unavailable to the theatre owner.

There are thirty-two pages (12x18¾) to the document, printed on a coated stock, and well printed at that, with an innovation on page 3 that will be welcomed by those handling these larger press books. We refer to an index, arranged in a novel way, which will save the exhibitor much time in finding the material he desires.

The inside front cover contains a lobby display, artistically arranged on a background representing a football, page size. The cast, symbols, highlights and material for programs is found on the third page. There is much general information on this page. Page 5 is devoted to preliminary publicity, and contains announcement stories, college publicity and program copy. Exploitation material for the sixth and fifth days, and the fourth and third days, in advance of the showing, will be found on the sixth, seventh, eighth and ninth pages of the press book, with further exploitation and tie-ups that bring "The Freshman" down through the second day, and right up to the opening, with various contests, teaser and other advertising and publicity matter on the tenth, eleventh, twelfth and thirteenth pages. Following this, two pages are devoted to national tie-ups and co-operative newspaper advertising suggestions.

The press book is so arranged that the showman who likes to make a big splurge on his booking of "The Freshman" will find on the succeeding pages many helpful stories available for publication in the local newspapers for the opening day, and for several days thereafter. The novelties available are exceptionally well chosen, with the football idea featured as a rule. Accessories and posters are described in detail, and cuts and mats are available in many sizes.

The music cues for "The Freshman," arranged in James C. Bradford's happiest mood, accompany the plan book. Orchestrations are available through the Cameo Music Service Corporation, 112-118 West 44th Street, New York City.

From a showman's angle, this press book will bear careful analysis, as many unique details have been incorporated. The suggestion for a presentation in connection with this booking should be welcomed by theatre owners who find presentations essential.

Examined from any angle, the Pathe press-book on "The Freshman" impresses us as an outstanding achievement in a season of many fine specimens of this type. It is one of the best to reach our desk in many a day.

New Jersey Press Acclaims Harold Lloyd's "Freshman"

A WORLD premiere presentation of Harold Lloyd in his newest Pathe production, "The Freshman," took place at the Ocean Grove, N. J., Auditorium, last week. The picture was treated as a road show, with prices ranging from 25 cents for children, and general admission at 50 cents to reserved seat rates at 75 cents, $1 and $1.50. Thousands of summer residents and vacationists took advantage of the opportunity to see Lloyd in what is conceded by critics to be his greatest screen triumph. One performance a day starting at 8:15 p. m. was given.

Following is a review of the show which appeared in the columns of the Asbury Park, N. J., Daily Press on Tuesday, August 18:

LLOYD SCORES BIG SUCCESS

"All roads from far and near seemed to have their journey's end last night at the Ocean Grove Auditorium where the world premier was given 'The Freshman,' the latest triumph of Harold Lloyd, the justly popular screen comedian. They came from all parts of Mammoth County and as far away as Trenton and New Brunswick with a goodly delegation of New Yorkers prominent in the world of motion pictures.

"When words fail just call it a 'wow' and have it all over with in one explosion. That describes 'The Freshman.' It is a truly refreshing comedy full of laughter and thrills. 'The Freshman' is literally crammed with gags—good ones—and Lloyd executes each so well that something whispers that many must have originated in his own head. In the first shot there is a chuckle. This develops into a laugh and the laugh into hilarity. It is by far the finest thing that Lloyd has ever done and it is difficult to imagine his ever doing anything better.

" 'The Freshman' is, course, a college story with Lloyd impersonating a Freshman. It runs the complete gamut of college life with a thrilling football game as the final climax. There are so many heart throbs in the production and so much of human interest that it might well be called a comedy drama. Its appeal is poignant and widespread—greater even than that record breaking comedy classic 'Grandma's Boy.'

"A splendid prologue to the picture was introduced by the Leake and Watts Orphan House Boys' Band of New York. The band was given an ovation at the conclusion of its portion of the program which occupied twenty-five minutes. The boys played 'On The Mall,' 'Campus Memories' and a brand new number, called 'Freshie.' In the last named selection the boys alternately sang and played, to the intense delight of the big audience.

"Stanley W. Rhoades added to his fame on the big organ by playing a medley of the college songs familiar to all who have attended the big football games. The rest of the big program included a pre-release of the Our Gang comedy, 'Mary, Queen of Tots,' and the current release of the Pathe News. The show will be repeated every night this week."

New Casting Director

Fred Datig, "the man who knows fifty thousand faces," assumed the duties of casting director of Paramount's West Coast studio, replacing Tom White, who was given an indefinite leave of absence due to ill health. This announcement was made by Charles Eyton, General Manager of the studio.

Box-Office Titles Feature Fox List Of Short Subject Presentations

FEATURING the recent announcement by Fox Film Corporation giving the release dates for its initial group of one and two-reel films for the 1925-26 season is the real box-office value of every one of the titles of the little feature films.

"The Big Game Hunter," "A Parisian Knight," "Failure," "Cuba Steps Out," "The Sky Tribe," "Toiling for Rest," and "The Peacemakers," are examples of the intriguing and eye-arresting titles selected for the first batch of Fox short subjects.

A Fox official pointed out the pains his company is going to in order to get good box-office titles for every one of the short subject productions.

"The necessity of having box-office titles for the one and two-reel productions is obvious to all who have followed the campaign of short subject producers and distributors to impress exhibitors with the importance of properly exploiting their short reel bookings and giving them a fair amount of attention in all publicity, advertising and lobby display," he said, adding:

"If exhibitors are going to boost our short subject films we must supply them with the material, and the first step in this direction should be good titles with box-office drawing power. For this reason we have a slogan which is always considered when a short subject title is in question and this slogan is:

'TITLES FOR THE MARQUEES.'

Analyze our titles and billings and you will find that any of them, placed in advertisements, publicity or lobby displays, will induce curiosity and make the readers of them wish to go further and see the film.

"An excellent example of this is the Fox two-reeler based on O. Henry's great short story, 'Failure.' Imagine—in light or boldface type and put yourself in the position of Mr. or Mrs. Average Citizen reading it. Their curiosity is naturally aroused as they contemplate the name of America's immortal writer and the title word, the common bugaboo of every normal man or woman. It is in reality an irresistible combination that is bound to have a great effect at the box-office of any theatre.

O. HENRY'S 'FAILURE'

"Consider 'A Parisian Knight.' This title simply exudes color, humor and mystery. Then attach 'from the story by Richard Harding Davis' and you have another combination as intriguing as the first.

"Go further and analyze the title, 'The Peacemakers,' one of the Mabel Herbert Urner series based on her nationally known newspaper stories, 'The Married Life of Helen and Warren.' Every family has its quarrels and the advent of outside peacemakers is as inevitable as a tin can on a picnic ground. Therefore the universal appeal of the title, 'The Peacemakers,' with any catchline suggestive of newlywed quarrel.

"Now take the tiles of the one-reeler Fox Varieties and you will see the same idea of box-office titles is one of their valuable features. For instance, 'Cuba Steps Out.' Is there anyone who cannot visualize 'the Pearl of the Antilles' in all its gay colors, dispensing pleasure and at the same time supplying a needy world with its useful crops of sugar and tobacco; 'The Sky Tribe,' simple as it is, conveys to the mind something mysterious in aborigines, and 'Toiling for Rest' will immediately stir some emotion in any man, woman or child who would flee from the daily grind of school, factory or office.

"The same goes for the remainder of the titles on the first group of short subject releases and those that will follow. Some of the other titles we have selected are: 'The Sky Jumper,' 'The Wrestler,' 'Shoes,' 'Transients in Arcadia,' 'On the Go,' 'Sweet Marie,' 'Love and Lions,' 'The West Wind,' 'In a China Shop,' 'My Own Carolina,' 'With Pencil, Chisel and Brush,' 'White Paper, 'The River Nile,' 'A Business Engagement,' and 'All Abroad.'"

Scenes in the William Fox photoplay, "Kentucky Pride," a John Ford production, with J. Farrell MacDonald, Gertrude Astor and Henry B. Walthall. Many famous race horses will be seen in this feature, including Man o' War, Morvich and Fair Play.

Scenes in "Slick Articles," a two-reel Century Comedy featuring Hilliard Karr and Billy Engel. Al Herman directed this fast Universal release.

Warners Purchased Theatres in Cleveland and Baltimore

PURCHASE of the Metropolitan Theatre in Baltimore and the taking over of the Circle in Cleveland by Warner Bros. is announced this week, and hereafter the firm will have first-run show-places in both the Maryland and Ohio cities. The Warners take possession of both houses at once and will inaugurate the same class of entertainment in the newly acquired theatres as planned for the New York Piccadilly.

The Metropolitan is situated on Pennsylvania Avenue in Baltimore's busiest section, and was built about two and one-half years ago. It seats 1,800 persons.

Warner Bros. not only purchased the theatre, but the building in which it is situated and the ground. Plans for improvements are already under way, and it is intended to put in a new lobby and front, as well as build up the program of the house. Bernard Depkin, the present manager, will remain in charge.

The Circle in Cleveland is a 2,200-seat house situated at 101st Street and Euclid Avenue in a lively neighborhood. Built five years ago, it was recently remodeled and enlarged into an up-to-the-minute house with all the latest improvements for the comfort of its patrons. Martin Printz, the former owner, will remain as resident managed.

George H. Dumond, general manager of all the Warner theatres, stated that it was the intention of the company to put the same class of entertainment in all the Warner first-run houses.

The Metropolitan in Baltimore will be known as the Warner; the Circle in Cleveland will be Warner's Circle Theatre.

To Star Edna Purviance

Edna Purviance, leading woman in many of Charlie Chaplin's earlier comedies, and star of "A Woman of Paris," his first serious dramatic production, arrived in New York last week and left for Europe by the steamship Majestic.

On her return she will be starred in a number of productions to be made at the Chicago studios under supervision of Chaplin himself; the director's name to be announced shortly.

"Fifth Avenue" Soon

To Be First Belasco Productions Film on Producers Distributing Schedule

The first Belasco Productions picture on Producers Distributing Corp. schedule for the coming season, will be "Fifth Avenue," described as an epic of Eastern America, just as "The Covered Wagon" and other recent films have dealt with the spirit of the West. "Fifth Avenue" is a vivid story of the famous street from which it takes its title; the best known and the most romantic thoroughfare in all America.

This story by Arthur Stringer has been accepted for publication by the Saturday Evening Post, which will shortly begin its serial publication.

This will prove to be an innovation in Saturday Evening Post "tie-ups," as the story will be published in installments during the time that the motion picture version is in production; and it is expected that the film will be released at about the time that the last installment appears in print.

New Wanda Wiley Comedy Is Announced by Century

"WON BY LAW," a two-reel Century Comedy starring Wanda Wiley, is announced for release this week as the first Wanda Wiley comedy in the new year's output of the Century Film Corporation.

It is a new style comedy for Miss Wiley, and is noteworthy because of the unusual excellence of the story around which the comedy is constructed.

"Won by Law" was written and directed by Edward I. Luddy, and was produced with an especially strong cast, including Bob Reeves, Lillian Worth and Frank Whitson.

In this comedy, Wanda is a rich girl so bored with life and so lazy she sits down to play tennis. She is kidnapped by a bold, rough western rancher and taken to his cabin, where she is forced to learn to cook and do other work, on pain of not eating. The caveman stuff gets her and she falls in love with him. The two-reeler is filled with funny situations and good gags.

It will go through Universal exchanges.

Scenes in "A Queen of Aces," a Wanda Wiley-Century Comedy now popular in first run houses. It was directed by William Watson and has Al Alt and George Williams in the supporting roles. In it Wanda shows she is proficient in boxing, fencing and other sports.

Fox Has Nineteen Pictures Ready for Next Season

WITH the new season just getting under way, William Fox has already completed nineteen supreme attractions and has several more in the course of production at the West Coast Studios. Five of the nineteen—"The Iron Horse," "As No Man Has Loved," "The Fool," "Lightnin'," and "The Lucky Horseshoe"—have already had successful advance presentations on Broadway and other places.

John Ford heads the list of directors, with five completed productions. "The Iron Horse" is the romantic story of the construction of the first transcontinental railroad: "Lightnin'" is the first of the John Golden plays brought to the screen.

In addition Mr. Ford has completed "Kentucky Pride," a racing drama of the Blue Grass country with Henry B. Walthall, Gertrude Astor and J. Farrell MacDonald; "Thank You," another Golden success, with Alec Francis, George O'Brien and Jacqueline Logan in the principal roles, and "The Fighting Heart," with George O'Brien as the fighting Main Street youth and Billie Dove as his country sweetheart.

Victor Schertzinger has completed "The Wheel," with Harrison Ford, Claire Adams and Mahlon Hamilton. It has more punch and drama than the original John Golden play. Schertzinger has done even better with "Thunder Mountain," taken from another Golden success, "Howdy Folks." Alec Francis, Madge Bellamy and Leslie Fenton are in the cast.

Frank Borzage's first Fox picture, "Lazybones" is a corker, according to reports from the Fox lot. Charles (Buck) Jones does the finest acting of his career in this one. Madge Bellamy, Leslie Fenton, Zasu Pitts and Jane Novak are in the cast. Borzage is getting ready to do "The First Year," one of John Golden's greatest stage hits.

Rowland V. Lee, with "Havoc" and "As No Man Has Loved" to his credit, is at Catalina Island doing location stuff for "The Silver Treasure." George O'Brien, Lou Tellengen and Hedda Hopper are in the cast. This one is adapted from Joseph Conrad's great novel, "Nostromo." It is a colorful, red-blooded South American story. O'Brien is a romantic two-fisted cargodore, and Tellegen is the villain.

John Griffith Wray is cutting "The Winding Stair," from A. E. W. Mason's novel. It is a turbulent, colorful tale of Morocco with Edmund Lowe, Alma Rubens and Mahlon Hamilton doing the honors.

It is the consensus of studio opinion that Emmett Flynn's version of "East Lynne" is the greatest melodrama ever put on the screen. And it should be. Look at this cast —Alma Rubens, Edmund Lowe, Lou Tellegen, Frank Keenan, Belle Bennett, Marjorie Daw and Leslie Fenton.

Reginald Barker has just finished his initial picture for William Fox. It is "When the Door Opened," a thrilling story of the north by James Oliver Curwood. Barker got his reputation making these outdoor pictures. The cast includes Jacqueline Logan, Walter McGrail, Margaret Livingston, Frank Keenan and Robert Cain.

Scenes of startling beauty and remarkable sympolism are being filmed by Henry Otto for the sea fantasy, "The Ancient Mariner," based on Coleridge's poem.

With "The Lucky Horseshoe," his first picture of the season, already on Broadway, Tom Mix has gone to work on the screen version of Katharine Fullerton Gerould's novel, "The Conquistador," in Yellowstone Park. He has also completed "The Everlasting Whisper," based on Jackson Gregory's novel of that name.

Buck Jones has just completed his work in "A Man Four Square," based on William MacLeod Raine's novel. He had previously completed "The Timber Wolf" by Jackson Gregory and "Durand of the Band Lands" by Maibelle Heikes Justice.

Warners to Produce Stage Plays

Warner Brothers are planning to invade the play producing field and with that object in view are buying the dramatic rights to many of the novels and plays now being purchased for next season's schedule.

In fact H. M. Warner is quoted this week as stating that his company's plans for invading Broadway were so far advanced that within the next few weeks he will have engaged a stage director of national prominence, who will begin casting for two plays that will be produced before the holidays.

The first two stories being considered for stage production are "The Woman Tamer" by Stanley Shaw and "The Florentine Dagger," a mystery story by Ben Hecht. "Bitter Apples," a recent novel by Harold McGrath, which has just been bought by the Warners, is another novel being considered for stage purposes.

Toronto "Gold Rush" Premiere Brings Record-Breaking Crowds

IN response to the sensational attraction of Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush," Toronto picture fans completely surrendered their midsummer devotion to outdoor entertainment and stormed the opening of this United Artists Corporation release at the Regent Theatre where it is having an advanced first run concurrently with New York and Chicago.

The Canadian premiere of "The Gold Rush" also marked the re-opening of the Regent for a season of big new pictures, and the Chaplin feature came with an eclat that fully established the pretentious policy of this well-appointed, down-town, advance run theatre.

"The Gold Rush" was a challenge to the outdoor holiday bent public when it opened on the hottest day of a hot week in August, yet the house overflowed capacity both in the afternoon and at night. In the evening ticket sales had to be stopped for lack of room inside. Police had to clear the sidewalks of those that lingered, fascinated by the continuous echoes of laughter coming from an audience that filled the Regent from orchestra to ceiling.

In honor of the occasion Jack Arthur, managing director, and Donald Brown, manager of the Regent, had prepared the house with the most lavishly lighted front that any Toronto theatre had ever shown. Twenty-seven thousand watts in daylight-incandescent lights were used in the letters of the picture title alone, and together with other lights in an animated sign and wall signs, these turned Adelaide street into a semblance of noon-day. The marquis was decorated with a reproduction of the snow-covered "Gold Rush" cabin of many adventures.

"The Gold Rush" is running at the Regent from 12:30 to 11 p. m. continuously daily except Sunday at top prices in Toronto for picture shows. Five shows daily are scheduled, with elaborate presentations at three and nine o'clock. The two daily special performances begin with the magazine reel, switch to a Northern background before which an actor in costume recites Robert Service's "The Spell of the Yukon," moves into an Alaskan scenic, and that in turn introduces a full stage production—"Alaska"—with a magnificent glacier setting, described as a scenic prelude of "The Gold Rush." In the snow-carpeted foreground five "sourdoughs" assemble around a camp-fire and tent and go through a connected program of songs and recitations and dialogue. The climax of the prelude is a tenor solo of Charlie Chaplin's own composition, "Sing a Song," with quartette in the chorus.

The opening day music and applause was relayed to the public in the streets from two stage microphones to a large amplifier in front of the theatre.

The advance campaign for "The Gold Rush" included 200 2-sheet stands, a heavy percentage of them illuminated, 200 street car boards, 500 window cards, a tie-up of cards in taxicabs, song shop windows and Brunswick phonograph windows, as well as Gold Rush Sundae tie-ups. Newspaper space was liberally used by the Regent management, and the Brunswick co-operation included big newspaper space. Down-town jewellers also tied up with Chaplin de luxe photographs, and there was co-operation from fur stores.

Charlie Chaplin is seen here directing a scene in his current United Artists release, "The Gold Rush," now creating records at the New York Mark Strand Theatre.

Rudolph Valentino visits the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot and is piloted about the studio by Fred Niblo, who directed him in "Blood and Sand," one of Valentino's greatest successes.

"Hell's Highroad" Big Success At New York Colony Premiere

THE New York premiere presentation of "Hell's Highroad," the first independent picture from the Cecil B. De Mille studio, at the Colony Theatre this week was a most gratifying success from both the point of public reception and the attitude of the newspaper critics.

"Hell's Highroad" was presented practically "cold." There was no advance ballyhoos and no increase in the newspaper advertising over the usual space taken by the theatre. The first announcement of the "coming" of De Mille's initial offering through Producers Distributing Corporation was made on Thursday preceding the Sunday opening, in the form of a small advertisement in the regular amusement columns of the New York newspapers; yet the production opened to standing room only and with practically every New York critic in early attendance.

A comprehensive estimate of the critical opinions of the newspapers may be gained from the following excerpts:

"Leatrice Joy makes her bow at B. S. Moss' Colony this week in her initial Cecil De Mille starring vehicle, "Hell's Highroad," directed by Rupert Julian from Ernest Pascal's story.

"'Hell's Highroad' is glittering, romantic, entertainment, presented in snappy style, with Leatrice Joy charming as the heroine."—New York Daily Mirror.

"The cast is excellent. Leatrice Joy seems to have acquired a new archness and is a fascinating figure. There are big, big ballrooms, beautiful boudoirs, gorgeous gowns, gaudy girls, insurgent innocents, wealthy widows, recherche rich men, palpitating poor men, a warring wife, a happy husband and a daring denouement.—Herald Tribune.

"Cecil De Mille's pictures are there when it comes to entertainment. Take 'Hell's Highroad,' the film at the Colony, for instance."—New York Journal.

"Pleasing entertainment with original touches that show the unmistakable hand of Cecil B. De Mille. It is well worth a visit to the Colony and is a credit to both Cecil De Mille and Producers Distributing Corporation."—New York American.

Goldwyn's New "Potash" Film With Carr and Sidney Cast

SAMUEL GOLDWYN has signed Alexander Carr and George Sidney to play Perlmutter and Potash, respectively, in his forthcoming production, "Partners Again, with Potash & Perlmutter." Henry King will direct, and United Artists Corporation will release the picture. The scenario will be handled by Frances Marion.

Since Goldwyn let it become known that he planned to make an Abe and Mawruss picture once each year, keen interest was aroused as to the players he would select for these roles. Messrs. Carr and Sidney did so very well with "In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter," the current Montague Glass-Samuel Goldwyn picture, many persons felt that these comedians had earned the right to further essay these roles.

The announcement from Mr. Goldwyn's New York offices, this week, settles all doubtful points, and further indicates the desire of Mr. Goldwyn for "the best, always," as Miss Marion has been selected to prepare the script for Mr. King. Miss Marion is burning the midnight oil (and a lotta 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 o'clock electric lights), to get the directorial working script into Mr. King's hands by the time the latter has completed photographic work and cutting on "Stella Maris," the Goldwyn screen version of the popular novel.

Miss Marion did the scripts for Mr. Goldwyn's "The Dark Angel" and "Stella Dallas," and because she has achieved fame for her work on hundreds of splendid photoplays, and because she stands at the top of the list of those who do these things, why—"Partners Again" will be well done, so far as the working script is concerned.

Dorothy Mackaill Signed

Dorothy Mackaill, noted screen player, has just been placed under contract for five years to play featured roles in forthcoming First National productions, by John E. McCormick, Western general manager of production for the organization. Miss Mackaill has appeared in many First National productions, both in Hollywood and in New York. Her most recent work was in "Shore Leave," supporting Richard Barthelmess and in "Chickie."

New Producing Company

George Blaisdell an Officer in Beacon Films Corporation

George Blaisdell, who until a year ago was the editor of the Exhibitors Trade Review and at one time editor of Moving Picture World, this week announced the incorporation of Beacon Films Corporation, a California corporation, who will produce independent pictures in Hollywood. The company is headed by Robert Anthony Dillon, the author, as president and Mr. Blaisdell as secretary and treasurer.

The first production of the new company is in work and is "The Flame Fighter," a ten-episode serial production starring Herbert Rawlinson. It will be released by Rayart Pictures.

GEORGE SIDNEY AND ALEXANDER CARR

The distinguished Mr. Sidney will be remembered by the fans as the "Abe Potash" of Samuel Goldwyn's "In Hollywood with Potash and Perlmutter," in which the equally distinguished Mr. Carr played "Mawruss Perlmutter." Messrs. Carr and Sidney have now been signed for the third "Potash and Perlmutter" production, "Partners Again," which Henry King will direct for Mr. Goldwyn. This feature will be a United Artists Corporation release.

What's Next in Motion Pictures?

By CECIL B. De MILLE

THE purely mechanical side of motion pictures has about reached its apex. We are near the limit of the great advance in the technical lines of trick photography, strange lighting, unique sets and startling effects.

We still have far to go, however, in the development of deft, new, subtle ways of transferring thought to the screen; of inventing unusual methods of driving home situations and ideas of especial importance.

In the next three or four years there will be registered with more surety and less effort, of screen translation. Every day directors and writers are discovering new points of "technique" whereby a thought or an emotion will be registered with more surety and less effort.

It was only a few years ago that if we wanted to have a man do one bit of action in his home and another at his office downtown we saw him go out of the door, out of the house, enter his car, get off at his office building, enter the elevator, etc. Now we simply go from one scene to another with no tedious, footage-wasting, intermediate steps. And, because of this "tightening up" tendency, our stories will condense in action and increase in interest.

The day of the purely butterscotch girl and peppermint boy love story is gone. The "theme" photoplay that has something to say; something to add for the general good of the world, in addition to its entertainment values, will continue to advance and increase in popularity and importance and as my production of "The Ten Commandments" was decidedly theoretic, so does my present picture, "The Road to Yesterday" search for drama in the great theme that wrong is punished—"even to the third and fourth generation."

I do not think we will have any great revolutionary changes in film, cameras, or in effects, but I do think that all these technical elements will be brought to finer points. That color photography, talking pictures, stereoscopic pictures—all of these will go hand in hand with the developments on the thoughtful side to enable the motion picture to fulfill its destiny.

So far as stars are concerned, we will have them just as long as personalities arise of sufficient strength to hold public interest. Such individuals are rare, however, and always you will find "star" pictures supplemented by productions made by a number of clever players on the merits of the specific story.

"The play's the thing"; and if the star can adequately carry the play, splendid. If not, then we will have the all-star cast. But whether a story have a star or be without a star, the success depends entirely on the strength of the tale.

Completes "Flaming Waters"

Fred Kennedy Myton, west coast scenario editor of F. B. O., has completed the scenario of "Flaming Waters," an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon, which is shortly to be produced by Associated Arts Corp. for F. B. O. It is a melodrama of the oil fields.

Henry Victor, an English actor, recently signed to appear in forthcoming Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer productions, has arrived in Culver City.

"Madame Lucy" an American Farce by Christie Scenarists

ALTHOUGH "Madame Lucy" was adapted from a French farce by Jean Arlette, it should be stated that in its transition to the sensitized celluloid it has undergone a process of "naturalization" which makes it as American in spirit as the N. Y. Giants or the subway crush at supper time.

In filming this piece of comedy material, the Christie organization's primary object was to make a funny picture, and secondly, to present players of recognized box-office draw, such as Julian Eltinge and Ann Pennington. Then with a plausible enough background for the basis of the plat, the "gag" men were allowed to go to practically any length with sequences of funny business.

As reason is not essential in farce comedy, and the public and even the high-brow critics will laugh heartily and excuse lapses into "slapstick" situations, such situations all purely American have been employed to cause a hilarious reaction in the laughing glands.

For instance when Eltinge, in skirts, having just retrieved his wig from where he flung it in the corner of the room, believing himself free at last from the pursuit by John Law, a moment later at the sudden entrance of the policeman, giddily indulges in a game of leap-frog with the servant, Tom Wilson, supposed to be his husband. This strange indoor pastime is certainly a peculiar way for normal American folks to take their exercise but it is very funny and comes in the category of laugh-provoking oddities conceived in the gag man's brain.

This is only one of many ways in which "Madame Lucy" has been Americanized in its screenings. "Hokum" in this case is especially applicable and of great value in making this production, a sister to "Charley's Aunt."

A BATTERY OF FOUR BIG GUNS

"Wedding Song" Formula

Ingredients Given for Making Exciting Screen Material

In answer to a request for a description of "The Wedding Song," the De Mille studio wired the publicity department of Producers Distributing Corp. as follows:

"Take half a dozen metropolitan crooks and one unsophisticated boy in his early twenties, possessing fabulous wealth in pearls. Mix thoroughly on an uncharted island where law is an unknown quantity, season well with romance and comedy, and stir in plenty of action. The result is Leatice Joy's second starring picture, "The Wedding Song."

Such active ingredients should ferment into some real exciting screen material; and the manner in which they have been mixed by Scenarists Douglas Doty and Charles Whittaker has enthused Cecil B. De Mille to the point of surrounding Miss Joy with an exceptionally capable supporting cast that so far includes Robert Ames, Ethel Wales, Rosa Rudami, Charles Gerard and Gladden James.

Bessie Love and Warner Baxter in Paramount's "A Son of His Father."

Blaney's "Unnamed Woman," On Arrow List, Has Four Stars

THE announcement sent out by W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Pictures Corporation, of the completion of "The Unnamed Woman," an Arthur F. Beck production, included in the list of the twenty-four features of the Golden Arrow Pictures, to be released this season, brings to light some interesting information concerning Charles E. Blaney, author of this story.

Mr. Blaney stands unrivaled, having written more plays than any other author in the history of the world. The records of the Registrar of Copyrights in the Library of Congress discloses that one hundred and fourteen of his plays are registered in the Copyright Office in Washington, D. C. It is conservatively estimated that twenty-five million people have paid money at the box office to see his plays, "Across the Pacific," "Baggage Check," "Boy Detective," "Boys in New York," "Curse of Drink," "Female Drummer," "Girl Raffles," "Her False Step," "His Terrible Secret," "King of the Highway," "McFadden's Flats," "Man Who Dared," "Mormon Wife," "Queen of the Highways," "Run on the Bank" and "War on Women," not to mention scores of others that made a fortune for Blaney as well as the theatres in which they were presented.

There will be no difficulty for the local theatre owners in playing "The Unnamed Woman" to find in the "morgues" of the local newspapers an unlimited amount of copy on Blaney and his activities, to bring to the attention of the movie fans that "The Unnamed Woman," a Blaney play, is coming to town.

Four stars are included in the cast of "The Unnamed Woman"—four artists, who have helped to make motion picture history. They include Katherine McDonald, Herbert Rawlinson, Leah Baird and Wanda Hawley, not forgetting Mike Donlin, the famous baseball star whose prowess as a batter when with the New York Giants, years ago, made him the idol of every kid whose dreams were that some day they would take their place, like Mike Donlin, among the "Kings of Swat."

Warner Bros. Announces Four Releases for Month of Sept.

WARNER BROS. have set the first four of the special productions comprising their 1925-26 schedule for national release in September. The September offerings cover a wide range, with dramas, melodramas and comedies in the list.

"The Limited Mail," starring Monte Blue, is set for release September 5. This Elmer E. Vance story is a thrilling tale in which a realistic train wreck is one of the high lights. Vera Reynolds, Williard Louis, John Roche, Eddie Gribbon, Tom Gallery and Otis Harlan have prominent roles. George Hill directed.

Gertie De Wentworth James's "The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted," a domestic drama with political intrigue, is to be released September 12. Irene Rich is starred, playing the role of a woman who turns against her husband for love of her son. James Flood was the director and in the supporting cast are Huntly Gordon, John Harron, June Marlowe, Gayne Whitman, Elinor Faire and Don Alvarado.

"His Majesty Bunker Bean," Harry Leon Wilson's howling comedy, starring Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, is the September 19 release. As in some of his greatest successes in the past, Moore appears as a backward young man, who, however, asserts himself in startling fashion when led to believe that he is the reincarnation of Napoleon. Louis Fazenda, Willard Louis and John Patrick have big roles. Harry Beaumont directed.

A swiftly moving Rin-Tin-Tin story, "Below the Line," by Charles A. Logue, is to be released September 26. The wonder dog, falling into the hands of a brutal master, is believed to be worthless as a leader of a criminal hunting pack until the life of a young man who has befriended him is imperilled. Then he proves himself a veritable terror. Among the players in the cast are John Harron, June Marlowe, Pat Hartigan and Charles "Heinie" Conklin. Herman Raymaker was the director.

Added to Cast

Two new players have been added to the cast supporting Mae Murray in her new starring vehicle, "The Masked Bride," for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Chester Conklin, noted comedian, and Fred Warren, well known character man, are the two new members.

Columbia's "Money Pictures"

Bobby North, of the Apollo Exchange, reports that the bookings which his organization has already made on the first of this season's Columbia product far exceed his fondest hopes. "Such big pictures as 'The Danger Signal' and 'The Unwritten Law,' as well as the Waldorf and Perfection series," he explained, "have caused a goodly number of exchangemen to book the entire Columbia product, realizing as they do that this product will make money for them this season."

Vilma Banky, Rudolph Valentino's leading woman in "The Lone Eagle," his first United Artists production, does a little broadcasting for the Greater Movie Season. Miss Banky addressed the workers at the United Studios through a giant megaphone. Miss Banky arrived here from Budapest only three months ago. She is learning English rapidly, but still speaks with a decided accent, which adds to her great charm.

Goldwyn's "Stella Dallas" to United Artists Corporation

IN the screen version of Olive Higgins Prouty's novel, "Stella Dallas," now being directed by Henry King, and soon to be released through United Artists, Samuel Goldwyn, the producer, anticipates the happy realization of many ideals he has carefully nurtured for years, viz., a perfect story for motion picture presentation, moulded by a perfect director, interpreted by a perfect cast, and with a perfect medium of distribution.

"To my mind," said Mr. Goldwyn, "no story has ever come to the screen with fewer faults to hinder its perfect interpretation, and the perfect scenarist, Frances Marion, prepared an equally faultless script.

"Henry King," he continued, "is one of the few directors who nearest approaches the ideal. My opinion of him is borne out by the imposing list of tremendous successes he has given to the screen, only two outstanding examples of which are 'The White Sister' and the gold medal photoplay 'Tol'able David.'

"If in the casting of this story we have blundered in the least, we have not discovered the spot, and surely a cast including such artists as Ronald Colman as Stephen Dallas; Belle Bennett in the title role; Alice Joyce as Helen Morrison; Lois Moran as Laurel; Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., as young Grosvenor and Jean Hersholt as Ed Munn, could not be bettered. Even in the selection of the minor players we were singularly fortunate in being able to secure the identical persons who seemed to best fill the bill.

"And to make the circle complete, I do not feel that a picture upon which we have exerted so much effort and which promises so much, could have been marketed so advantageously by any other organization than United Artists, with whom I have just affiliated."

"Make haste slowly" was the motto employed in the preparation of "Stella Dallas" for the screen, from the time, a year and a half ago, when Samuel Goldwyn secured the motion picture rights to this realistic story of a modern American woman.

This period of time was consumed in the selection of an actress to play the title role—one of the greatest plums ever awarded to a motion picture player. After scores of tests had been made—73, to be exact—in Hollywood and New York, Belle Bennett was selected as the perfect "Stella Dallas," and placed under a long term contract. Her performance, it has been predicted by disinterested observers, will be a startling revelation to picture-goers.

"Stella Dallas" has been in actual production about two months and Henry King is proceeding according to no breakneck schedule, devoting the time necessary to each sequence in order to secure results commensurate with the effort expended upon the production before actual "shooting" was started.

"Stella Dallas" is scheduled for early autumn release by United Artists, marking Samuel Goldwyn's first contribution to this organization.

Big Campaign Started

Unusual Publicity for Hunt Stromberg's "Last Frontier"

The opening guns of an advance publicity and exploitation campaign of unusual scope for Hunt Stromberg's western spectacle, "The Last Frontier," was fired this week with the publication of two special newspaper features designed to focus nation-wide attention on the coming Producers Distributing Corporation release.

The first feature story was an interview with Hunt Stromberg by Russell J. Birdwell, special writer, which set forth reasons why Stromberg was selected to film this epic drama which Thomas H. Ince planned to make his greatest picture. This article, accompanied by a cut of Stromberg, was syndicated by the N. E. A. to 694 newspapers in the United States and Canada.

In this interview, Birdwell writes: "Stromberg is Ince's nearest successor."

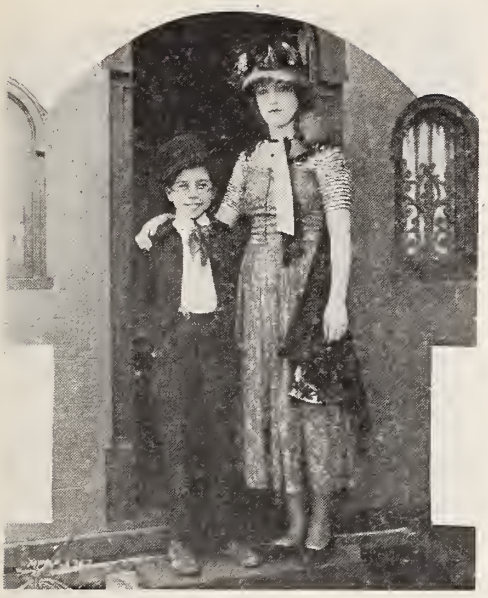
PARAMOUNT PLAYERS AND FLOATS IN GREATER MOVIE SEASON PARADE

Bebe Daniels (center) arrived in Los Angeles from New York City just in time to take part in the annual parade at the opening of the "Greater Movie Season" in the Film Capital. Bebe was given a wild demonstration throughout the line of march. Upper left: "Paramount presents" a float representing a Venetian gondola with five pretty Paramount girls. Upper right, is Paramount's "Flower of the Night" float. Lower left: Douglas Fairbanks, Jr. Lower right: Raymond Hatton, Paramount featured player, with Mrs. Frances Hatton. Mr. Hatton's whiskers indicate that shaving soap advertisements go right over his head, but Mrs. Hatton smiles indulgently—which is more than most wives would do outside of the Movie Capital.



Young Buck Black, age 12, picked from all filmdom as the youngster most nearly resembling Teddy Roosevelt at his age, and Marion Davies, starring in "Lights of Old Broadway," the Lawrence Eyre stage success adapted to the screen by Carey Wilson. Monta Bell is directing this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

Charlie Chase Comedy Heads Pathe Schedule for Sept. 6

HIGHLIGHTS of the Pathe release program of short subject entertainment for the week of September 6 are "No Father to Guide Him," a comedy with Charley Chase; "Barrier Busters," a Grantland Rice "Sportlight"; and "A Runaway Taxi," a novelty "Stereoscopik." Other releases of the week include a chapter of the Pathe serial "Play Ball," "Topics of the Day," "Aesop's Film Fables," a Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

"No Father to Guide Him" is a two-reel comedy from the Hal Roach studios with Charlie Chase as the father whose estranged wife will not allow him to see their son. Katherine Grant plays the role of the willful wife and Mickey Bennett plays the son. The various schemes and ruses practiced by the father to see his boy supply a thoroughly hilarious two-reeler. Josephine Crowell and Duke Kahanamoku are in the cast. Leo McCarey directed under the supervision of F. Richard Jones.

"Barrier Busters," the latest Grantland Rice "Sportlight," gives ample evidence that the so-called "weaker sex" is forging ahead in the world of sports. In the course of the reel, running, tennis, swimming, and numerous other everyday sports are shown to have their woman champions who have broken the barriers formerly held exclusively by men.

"A Runaway Taxi" is one of the most entertaining and thrilling of the Ives-Leventhal "Stereoscopiks." After a passenger enters the tax shown in this film, the spectator sees the wild ride through the passenger's eyes. The adventures of the speeding car carry one through crowded streets amid mazes of traffic and even over skyscrapers, affording enough thrills to please the most jaded theatregoer.

"Double Peril" is the title of the eighth chapter of the Pathe serial "Play Ball," written by Manager McGraw of the N. Y. Giants and adapted for the screen by Frank Leon Smith. As the title suggests, the hero and heroine participate in a series of events which lead them into perilous paths and adventurous situations. Allene Ray and Walter Miller are featured in the cast which includes Harry Semels, Mary Milnor, J. Barney Sherry, Franklyn Hanna, Wally Oettel and J. Tanner. Spencer Bennet directed this serial.

Pathe Reiew No. 36 offers the following entertaining subjects: "Understudying Ulm," the great German cathedral shown in miniature; "The Lost City," scenes of an ancient Moorish metropolivs in Pathecolor. "Barnyard Follies" is the title of Paul Terry's latest of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series. Completing the September 6 Pathe scredule are "Topics of the Day," and two issues of Pathe News.

Fecke Covers New England With a "Western" Broadside

EXHIBITORS in the New England territory have received a smashing broadside from the Motion Picture Corporation, at 28 Piedmont street, Boston, of which George M. A. Fecke is the head, calling attention to the series of forty-two "Western Winners" which "the House of Fecke" has contracted to handle in that section for Artclass Pictures Corporation, of which Louis Weiss is the Managing Director, with offices in the Loew State Theatre Building in New York City.

The Fecke standard of advertising, known throughout New England for nearly two decades, is reflected in the current broadside devoted to Buffalo Bill, Jr., Wally Wales, Buddy Roosevelt and Leo Maloney. The printing is in black, on a yellow background, 12 x 18 inches, and the broadside is the first of a series to be devoted to the features and Westerns which Motion Picture Corporation will handle during the 1925-26 season.

Forthcoming broadsides will be devoted to the "Fecke features," which will include the best of the independent productions available during the next twelve months. This feature list is now being prepared, and an announcement of the pictures listed will be made shortly.

There will be ten Buddy Roosevelt rough riding romances; eight Wally Wales rapid-fire stunt dramas; sixteen Buffalo Bill, Jr., thunderbolt thrillers and eight Leo Maloney epics of the golden West. The first four pictures from each of these Western stars, ready for booking through the Fecke organization, are:

Buddy Roosevelt—"Reckless Courage," "Galloping Jinx," "Action Galore" and "Thundering Through."

Wally Wales—"Tearin' Loose," "The Hurricane Horseman," "Gallopin' On" and "The Roarin' Rider."

Buffalo Bill, Jr.—"Quicker'n Lightnin'," "The Desert Demon," "The Saddle Cyclone" and "A Streak of Luck."

Leo Maloney—"Win, Lose or Draw," "Luck and Sand," "The Blind Trail" and "Never Say Quit."

"Ko-Ko" Feature Is A Hit at Eastman

Victor Wagner, musical director of the famous Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., was so elated with the success of "Daisy Bell" (otherwise known as "On a Bicycle Built for Two"), one of the Ko-Ko Song Car-tunes released by Red Seal, that he sent the following wire to Edwin Miles Fadman and Max Fleischer:

"You would get a real thrill if you could see the reception 'Daisy Bell' is getting here each performance."

The Ko-Ko Song Car-tunes are released by Red Seal with specially prepared 18-piece orchestrations accompanying every reel. This novelty series seems to be proving the most popular of the new season's short product.

First Doodle Cartoon

The first of the new Dinky Doodle subjects to be made exclusively for F. B. O. release will be titled "The Bad Man."

Critics Enthuse Over "Sun-Up;" Call it "One of Best of Year"

"POIGNANTLY ABSORBING," a powerful picture," "rating extremely high," "one of the finest offerings of the year"—these are some of the phrases elicited from the New York critics by Edmund Goulding's "Sun-Up" on opening at the Capitol Theatre in New York. Conrad Nagel, George K. Arthur, Lucille LaVerne and Pauline Starke are the featured players in this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the Lula Vollmer stage success.

"'Sun-Up' is a poignantly absorbing story of the hill people in South Carolina," writes Dorothy Day in the New York Telegraph. "While this play achieved success on the stage, it was rather difficult to conceive it as a picture, but Edmund Goulding has done a wonderful job and he should be very proud of himself. Here is a picture simple in design, but dealing with the biggest emotions, namely, hate, love, vengeance. Mr. Goulding has taken those ingredients, so often misused in pictures, and made what is one of the finest offerings of the year."

"Having conquered several other branches of the motion picture industry," remarks George Gerhard in the New York Evening World, "Edmund Goulding has now tried his hand at direction. The result, a picture called 'Sun-Up,' is a living, breathing proof that this interloper has leaped right into the front rank of directors. For 'Sun-Up' rates extremely high."

"'Sun-Up' is predestined for popularity," observes the New York Telegram. "It passes the supreme test where movie votaries are concerned. It brings the handkerchiefs out and that hint of moisture in the manly eye. And that's that. Conrad Nagel gives a convincing impersonation of the boy who goes out to fight 'some enemy of the gov-ment called Huns.' But the histrionic palm undoubtedly goes to Lucille LaVerne, who duplicates in the movie the role she made popular on Broadway last year."

"Director Goulding has turned out a powerful picture," declares Dorothy Herzog in the New York Daily Mirror. "With a heavy revenge story of ignorant backwoodsmen to deal with, Goulding has injected flashes of humor and developed his character with rare deftness. Pauline Starke gives a beautiful performance as Emmy Todd. Lucille LaVerne does gripping work as the Widow Cagle. Throughout it all, Dorothy Goulding gives us superb phtography, each closeup a picture, many of the scenes lovely."

Michael Arlen Coming

Michael Arlen, one of the most talked of young novelists of the day, will arrive in Hollywood, Cal., October 15, to personally aid in the screen adaptation of "Crossroads of the World," his original story for Pola Negri. Announcement to this effect was made by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in charge of production, following receipt of a cablegram from the brilliant English author. "Crossroads of the World" is Arlen's first original story for the screen. Miss Negri at present is engaged in making "Flower of Night," written especially for her by Joseph Hergesheimer.

Edwin Carewe, the noted First National director, has given his lovely daughter, Yvonne, eighteen years old, his permission to play in motion pictures, on her promise to abstain from smoking cigarettes and all "night life" diversifications.

Leading House in Havana Is Cinema; Books First Nat'l

IN an anouncement of an agreement between First National Pictures of Cuba and Fernando Poli, prominent exhibitor of Havana, it is made known that the Teatro Nacional, under the direction of Mr. Poli, will be converted into a first run motion picture theatre, and will open its doors for the first time as a cinema on August 29 with "The Sea Hawk."

The inauguration of The Nacional as a picture house marks an epoch in the development of the motion picture business in Cuba, and means that for the first time in that territory films will have a proper presentation.

The Nacional was erected in 1911, and, taking the place of the Teatro Tacon, constructed originally in 1837, is the foremost theatre in all Cuba. During the past decade the Nacional housed the annual presentation of Opera in Cuba, and many of the famous operatic stars, including Caruso, Tetrazzini and Bonci, were presented to the Cuban public in this theatre.

The Nacional is possessed of one of the finest Italian marble lobbies of any theatre in the world, which is being turned into a Sala de Espera, or large vestibule capable of seating from 500 to 600 people. One of its main features will be orchestra and radio concerts during the afternoon, offered aside from the regular performance, in the auditorium.

Mr. Poli, in addition to the Nacional, is the owner of the Strand, Florencina, Palico Gris and the Campoamor, all of Havana, the Nacional being the largest, with a seating capacity of 2,200. In addition to other improvements for the opening of the Nacional as a picture house, Mr. Poli will install a huge ventilating system at the cost of approximately $25,000.

According to the present agreement, the Nacional will use First National pictures as the basis of its program.

Scenes in "Borrowed Finery," a Tiffany production, from the story by George Bronson-Howard, in which Gertrude Astor, Ward Crane, Hedda Hopper, Louise Lorraine, Taylor Holmes, Trixie Friganza and Lou Tellegen appear.

Larry Kent has been chosen for leading man opposite Alberta Vaughn in her "Mazie" series for F. B. O. release.

F. B. O. Building Up New Stars and Directors

AS the nucleus of what promises to be one of the largest film groups of new faces for the screen and new talent behind the megaphone, five stars and directors hitherto unknown in the capacities in which they are now engaged have been added to the personnel of the F. B. O. studios during the past few weeks.

General Manager B. P. Fineman believes in developing screen ability and directorial skill. It is his claim that the public has long wanted new personalities to entertain it, and that the best way in which to get something different in treatment is to break in as directors men who have shown a grasp of drama and a freshness of viewpoint in other lines of the picture industry.

"It is a sort of financial cowardice that has prevented the inculcation of new ideas and new blood to any appreciable extent heretofore," says Mr. Fineman. "It is natural enough, in a way, but it is unfortunate. Producers have been afraid to "gamble" with untried talent in almost any line, and have waited for talent to prove itself before accepting it as such. With no chance to prove itself, the situation has resolved into a "vicious circle"; men with ambition waiting to try and break in and show what they can do, while the producer says 'show me what you can do before I sign you.' I believe personally that the time for that sort of business conversation is at an end. It is as archaic as Sanskrit. And I think, furthermore, that it is no 'gamble' to utilize more or less unknown talent provided the men themselves are known and studied as individuals."

Accordingly, Mr. Fineman now has one company in which both the star and the co-directors are new men, and another in which a consulting director is engaged, working with a man who has already proved his mettle. Tom Tyler, new to stardom, is being guided by James Gruen, former Los Angeles newspaperman, and Robert De Lacey, who was for many years a star cutter. They are now filming "Let's Go, Gallagher," a western picture. In the supporting role for Alberta Vaughn, who is engaged on "The Adventures of Mazie," is Larry Kent, a young juvenile with only small experience before the camera. James Wilkinson, formerly head cutter for F. B. O., is working with Director Ralph Ceder on the same series, and will probably be given his own unit in the near future.

Sixteen Companies Working at Full Speed at F. B. O. Studios

SIX F. B. O. companies and ten independents are at work on the F. B. O. lot, keeping up the brisk production pace in Hollywood during the past several months.

With sixteen units clicking at top speed, the big plant at Melrose and Gower Street is one of the busiest in the Film Capital. Three more companies start work within a week, so it looks as if there would be no slackening of speed in the making of agitated tintypes for some time to come. Electrical and mechanical departments are at peak production, carrying all the load that wires and brains will stand.

Among the more important F. B. O. pictures now in the course of completion are "The Last Edition," Emory Johnson's big newspaper melodrama; "Three Wise Crooks," Evelyn Brent's new vehicle; "Heads Up," the latest Lefty Flynn opus being produced and directed by Harry Garson; "Ridin The Wind," the most recent Fred Thomson picture under the co-direction of Del Andrews and Al Werker; Dick Talmadge's "Dr. Jim": "Let's Go Gallagher," featuring Tom Tyler, the new star, which is being co-directed by James Gruen and Robert De Lacey, and "The Adventures of Mazie," Alberta Vaughn's series.

Douglas McLean is one of the outside companies which has just started work at this studio, beginning "Seven Keys To Baldpate," the famous old George M. Cohan mystery written by Earl Derr Biggers. Other independents who are busy include the Hoffman company, the Sanford Productions, Howard Esterbrook Productions, Spitzer-Jones Pictures and Larry Semon.

"Just Spooks" Completed

Walter Lantz has just completed production on the 13th Dinky Doodle subject titled "Just Spooks." This subject is a departure from previous Dinky Doodle subjects inasmuch as it is not a Burlesque on a Fairy Tale. Playing on the vogue for mystery dramas, the story makes Dinky Doodle and his companion the pup, "Weakheart" decide they will play a joke on the artist and Walter Lantz gets the scare of his life in this subject when the boy and the dog, masquerading as a ghost, cause him to go through a number of thrilling adventures in order to escape the clutching hand of the ever pursuing spook. F. B. O. will release this subject September 15.

"The Shadow on the Wall" Is Sixth Gotham Release

SAM SAX announces that the sixth of this season's twelve Gotham Productions will be "The Shadow on The Wall" instead of "Racing Blood," originally listed for release number six.

Mr. Sax said: "The change in the original release schedule placing 'The Shadow On The Wall' in the position announced for 'Racing Blood,' is merely a matter of production expediency. 'Racing Blood' calls for a very difficult and unusual sequence of scenes on a race track which require more time for production than we had originally figured on. 'Racing Blood' will have it's regular place on the program. The change will entail no inconveniences on the part of anyone as we are now three months ahead on our production and release schedule."

"The Shadow On The Wall" is a mystery melodrama which follows very closely the popular book by J. Breckenridge Ellis. It is one of the few books which can be made into a picture exactly as written. The continuity for "The Shadow on the Wall" has been prepared by Elsie Werner.

Reeves Eason, known as "Breezy" Eason, will direct the production which is scheduled to go into work immediately. The complete cast of players will be announced next week.

Some novel effects are promised in "The Shadow On The Wall" as some of the sequences are portrayed entirely by shadows without a person appearing on the screen. Special lighting and camera equipment has been installed in the Hollywood Studios for this purpose.

"Evolution" Highly Praised By New Jersey Newspapers

"EVOLUTION," the Red Seal feature that has won country-wide praise, added to its laurels last week when the New Jersey reviewers had a chance to see it at the Branford Theatre in Newark and the Stacy in Trenton.

"There is not one dull moment to the picture," said the Newark Call, "and to miss seeing it, in the opinion of this reporter, constitutes culpable negligence of the mind."

"Its graphic illustrations and succinct explanations will enable one to grasp the scientist's story of evolution in one hour," said the Newark Star.

"Interesting throughout," was the verdict of the Evening News.

"Noteworthy in its presentation of a great subject," commented the Newark Morning Ledger.

"Especially well received," said the Trenton Gazette.

The Trenton Times said: "It provides in an interesting manner the full story of the growth of mankind. Any audience will enjoy it irrespective of its pros and cons on the subject."

This comment is typical of the enthusiastic way the film has been received in New York, Los Angeles, Pittsburgh, Baltimore and the other cities where it has been pre-released.

Bennett Enlarging Studio

Glendale Plant Will Also Have New Electrical Equipment

Whitman Bennett, after acquiring his Glendale Studio, gave it a preliminary four weeks' tryout in order to familiarize himself with its capacity and the possible needs of a new and more modern equipment and appliances. He will now close down for two weeks, in order to install a 3,000-ampere electrical layout representing the last word in modern studio necessities. During the time necessary to install the new lighting machinery and lamps the area of the studio will be increased in order to permit two more units to work at the same time.

Major Campbell's production of "Wandering Fires" will have been finished. Immediately on the resumption of activities, Campbell will begin directing a Jane Novak feature. This popular star will have Reginald Wright Kauffman's story, "Share and Share Alike." Simultaneously, Mr. Bennett will direct "The Cleaner Flame," an original story and scenario by Clara Beranger and Forrest Halsey. Both of these productions will be released by Arrow Pictures Corporation.

On the West Coast, Dallas Fitzgerald has just completed "Tessie," in which May McAvoy is the principal player. This is also an Arrow release.

"Who's Asking for Joe Brandt?"

Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, touring New England and Southeastern Canada, is perfecting his golf technique on a fair number of links along the way. "The best way to properly stretch one's legs after a few hundred miles of automobile riding is to do your stuff over a new golf course," the film executive writes to Jack Cohn, who is at the home office at present.

Editing "The Last Edition"

Emory Johnson is personally editing the cutting of his newspaper melodrama "The Last Edition" starring Ralph Lewis, the final scenes of which were filmed last week in the press room of the San Francisco Chronicle. Mr. Johnson says his production will be a "tribute to the profession of journalism."

"The Perfect Clown"

Larry Semon Completes Work on New Comedy for Chadwick

It is anounced from California that Larry Semon and his director, Fred Newmeyer, have now completed the titling and editing of "The Perfect Clown."

Fred Newmeyer made several of Harold Lloyd's most successful comedies and in some of the best directors of this type of entertainment in the motion picture industry. A splendid cast was assembled in Semon's support with Dorothy Dwan, as his leading lady; Stuart Holmes, Kate Price, Otis Harlan, Oliver Hardy, Alice Fletcher, Sam Allen and G. Howe Black, the Negro comedian, also winning wide popularity in Semon's "The Wizard."

Leon Abrams to Direct

Leon Abrams, author of "The Masked Bride," Mae Murray's new starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, and former director in France, has signed a long term contract with the Culver City studios to direct films.

"The Masked Bride" is being directed for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by Christy Cabanne, with Francis Bushman in the leading male role opposite the star. Roy D'Arcy has an important role in the picture, and the cast includes also Lawford Davidson, Pauline Neff, Andre Cheron, Chester Conklin and Fred Warren.

International Beauties

With the addition this week of Marian Andre, born in St. Petersburg of Russian-French parentage, to the Christie Comedy stock company, the group of Al Christie's international beauties continues to grow. Miss Andre is a striking natural blonde who came to Los Angeles recently with "The Passing Show" company and deserted the footlights for motion picture work.

Her first appearance will be in a Bobby Vernon Comedy now being filmed for distribution by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Busy on "Ancient Mariner"

H ary Otto, of "Dante's Inferno" fame, is busy shooting scenes on the fantasy sequence of the "Ancient Mariner" which will be produced in conjunction with a modern sequence much after the fashion employed in "Dante's Inferno."

Mr. Otto is producing the actual scenes described in the poem and present plans provide for an expenditure of a goodly percentage of a million for the fantasy side of the picture.

Robert Ellis Signed

One of filmland's best known leading men, Robert Ellis, has been selected by Production Manager Harry Cohn to play opposite Elaine Hammerstein, who is to be starred in "Ladies of Leisure," a Columbia special which Tom Buckingham will direct.

Ford Sterling Featured

Ford Sterling, featured in the third of this season's Columbia feature releases, "Steppin' Out," which Frank Strayer directed, is to be signed for another big production by Columbia, according to the latest word from Columbia's Hollywood studio.

Marie Prevost and Monte Blue in a scene in the former's starring vehicle, "The Easiest Road," a Warner Brothers picture.

"Borrowed Finery" in Works

Third of the Tiffany Big Twelve in Production—Oscar Apfel Directing

The third of the Tiffany Big Twelve, "Borrowed Finery," by George Bronson Howard, is now in the course of filming under the direction of Oscar Apfel.

In "Borrowed Finery," the author delves into a theme that has the master touches of a craftsman who knows the underworld and the frailties and foibles of the classes who seek amusement at a price that does not reckon the cost.

A great cast has been assembled for the principal roles, the players including: Hedda Hopper, Louise Lorraine, Ward Crane, Lou Tellegen, Trixie Friganza, Gertrude Astor, Taylor Holmes, Barbara Tennant and Otto Lederer.

Paramount Signs Shirley Mason

Shirley Mason was signed to play leading feminine role in Joseph Conrad's "Lord Jim," it was announced from the office of Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Rayart Units at Work

Three Productions Under Way for 1925-26 Program

Harry J. Brown Productions of Hollywood this week completed work on "The Patent Leather Pug," a five-reel prize-fight story starring Billy Sullivan, and will start work next week on "The Windjammer," featuring the same star.

The Brown company also have in work "The Danger Quest," a South African story featuring Reed Howes, with a cast which includes Ethel Shannon, J. P. McGowan and Billy Franey.

Contracts for Warners

Howard Fleishman, who controls the Hawthorne and Home Theatres, is an exhibitor who knows good pictures when he sees them, in the opinion of Warner Bros. at least. Also, he has learned from experience what class of attractions are box office winners.

Mr. Fleishman has just closed a big contract with the Warner Portland exchange, booking the month of September almost solidly with Warner attractions in both of his houses, besides dates in August and October.

Riza Royce in First Film

Riza Royce, former New York stage star who scored in "Dancing Mothers," began her first screen role this week in the Preferred Picture, "The Other Woman's Story" as her initial appearance under her recently signed contract with B. P. Schulberg Productions. In this story by Peggy Gaddis which Gasnier is transferring to the screen, Miss Royce is playing in support of Alice Calhoun, Robert Frazer, Helen Lee Worthing, Mahlon Hamilton and other long established favorites.

"Three Wise Goofs" Completed

Joe Rock, who is producing thirteen Standard comedies for F. B. O. release announces the completion of the second of these subjects titled "Three Wise Goofs." "A Ton of Fun" who appear in this production are the three funny fat men of the screen—"Fatty" Alexander, "Tiny" Carr and "Kewpie" Ross. The leading feminine role is portrayed by the dainty comedienne, Miss Billy Rhodes. This subject is scheduled to be released early in October by F. B. O.

New York Premiere of "Siegfried"

The New York City premiere of "Siegfried," the Fritz Lang screen version of excerpts from the Nordic Sagas employed by Wagner for several of his operas, and notably "Siegfried," took place Sunday evening, August 22, at the Century Theatre.

Representatives of the musical art, as well as the stage and screen, thronged the large theatre. Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, Managing Director of Paramount Theatres in New York City, arranged the music score, and, viewed from any angle, it will seem that this score is final. Music (following the picture) has been chosen from "Siegfried," "Rheingold" and "Gotterdaemmerung" with excellent results, and Dr. Riesenfeld is entitled to congratulations for his meritorious efforts.

The Metropolitan Opera House orchestra, under the direction of Josiah Zuro, played the Riesenfeld score. The enthusiastic audience applauded the picture, the plays and the musicians.

Frederick Wynne-Jones, American representative of Ufa (Universum-Film Aktiengesellschaft), of Berlin, greeted the famous folks in the foyer of the Century, on Sunday evening, and was, in turn, congratulated when the showing was over.

Charlie Chaplin, Georgie Hale and Mack Swain in scenes in "The Gold Rush," Chaplin's super-comedy drama which is now "packing 'em in" in the New York Mark Strand Theatre. "The Gold Rush" now goes into its third week in this house. The United Artists Corporation, releasing this long feature comedy, will exploit it heavily throughout the United States.

Chicago Critics Give High Praise to Chaplin's Latest

"CHARLIE CHAPLIN is still the world's greatest—an artist, a comedian, an entertainer finer than any one else alive today," said Polly Wood in the Chicago Herald when "The Gold Rush," the new Chaplin-United Artists Corporation release opened at the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago. "And his 'The Gold Rush' proves again that fact. A fine picture, I think, a picture taking Chaplin closer to the serious ambition that evolved 'A Woman of Paris' but not a step away from hilarious buffoonery. 'The Gold Rush' is a marvelous entertainment. It is far more elaborate than previous Chaplin productions and behind its laughs are tears. Just try to get into the Orpheum. I'll be happy to wager that 'The Gold Rush' will run there until Christmas."

"Ten reels of Charlie Chaplin as you like him," said Mae Tinae of the Chicago Tribune. "Ten reels sounds like a heap, and it would be if 'The Gold Rush' weren't 'The Gold Rush.' The Lone Prospector gives you lots of original and fascinating comedy. And always there is the note of sadness. He's so lonesome and so game and so darned unlucky. 'The Gold Rush' really is a dandy, and you'd just better see Charlie's latest if you know what's good to see and what's good for you."

"He's the same old Charlie," said Rob Reel in the Chicago Evening American. "Years may have grayed his hair and swelled his pocket book, but in his screen characterizations he is still the same lovable vagabond you've laughed at and nearly cried over since Keystone Comedy days. All in all, he is just as funny as ever he was. Go and see him, listen to the laughter of yourself and those around him, and see if you don't think so."

"Charlie Chaplin of the derby, cane, baggy trousers, funny mustache and wabbly walk, who has made the whole world laugh more than any other comedian, has built into 'The Gold Rush' a structure of fun and laughter," said Carl Sandburg of the Chicago Daily News. "He has built what many say is the funniest and most hilarious comedy of his career. Pathos and suffering are converted into comedy and laughter—there is a laugh in every one of the 8,000 or so feet."

"There are many new things in Charlie Chaplin's new film," said Eugene Stinston in the Chicago Journal. "It has a plot. It has dramatic tensity. It has laughs of an order even Chaplin himself has never aroused before. Not content with making the whole world laugh, he now asks it to drop a trickling tear, in a film that marks a new epoch in the account of Chicago movies."

"It is hard to imagine anybody being disappointed in the treasure of comedy this newest Charlie Chaplin film, 'The Gold Rush' contains," said Genevieve Harris in the Chicago Post. "It's pure gold from the first flicker to the end. The amusing twists and the humorous surprises spring naturally from the story itself and from the characters. 'The Gold Rush' is gay and pathetic, fantastic and human, and one of the most wholly charming and entertaining pictures ever made."

Third Standard Comedy in Work

Joe Rocks' trio of heavyweight comedians, "Fatty" Alexander, "Tiny" Carr and "Kewpie" Ross or "A Ton of Fun" as they are collectively better known, are starting production on their third comedy. While this subject is as yet untitled, the action takes place in a Beauty Parlor where the trio will have every opportunity to upset and create gales of laughs. When completed this subject will be the November F. B. O. Standard Comedy release.

Scenes in "Wild Beasts of Borneo," an Educational Pictures special, a thrilling picture of adventure in two reels that shows the high lights of a two years' expedition into the darkest jungles under the leadership of Mr. and Mrs. Lou C. Hutt, of San Francisco (shown in center panel).

Al Christie and his newly-signed comedy star, Billy Dooley, who will appear in Educational-Christie Comedies next season.

Director Green Signed

Alfred E. Green, eminent motion picture director, has signed a long-term contract with John E. McCormick, Western general manager of production for First National, and will begin work under his new agreement when he puts into production "Spanish Sunlight," in which Barbara La Marr and Lewis Stone are co-featured.

Artclass Explains

The recent announcement of the opening of an Artclass exchange in New England seems to have caused some confusion in the industry. This exchange was opened by Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures Corporation in affiliation with George M. A. Fecke and the Motion Pictures Corporation at 28 Piedmont street, Boston, Mass.

A separate sales force will operate under the direction of Mr. Fecke and it will handle only the Artclass product. The salesmen will work out of the offices of the Motion Pictures Corporation, in which the Artclass exchange office is located. All physical distribution will also be handled by the Motion Pictures Corporation under the direction of Mr. Fecke.

The necessity for a separate and distinct sales force will be readily understood when it is considered that they will offer a program of forty-two five-reel features, besides a series of six single-reel novelties.

This program and sales force is not to be confused with the operations of the Motion Pictures Corporation, which has a program of its own, with its own sales force and personnel.

"The Gold Rush" Sets New Records in New York and Chicago

"THE GOLD RUSH," Charlie Chaplin's United Artists Corporation release, has broken all records for New York City and the world in its first week's business at the Mark Strand Theatre; and also has broken all records of seventeen years of the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, in its first week's run there.

At the Strand, New York, the week's net gross totalled $72,577.15, according to a letter to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, from Joseph Plunkett, managing director.

At the Orpheum, Chicago, seating a little less than 800, "The Gold Rush" grossed $19,829.08; more than $5,000 in excess of the previous house record, which was made by a picture two reels shorter than the Chaplin film, and breaking all records since the Orpheum was opened seventeen years ago.

"The Gold Rush" also broke all records for the Strand Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., when it opened there concurrently with the opening in New York and Chicago, and drew business of a similar record-breaking nature at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, in its Canadian premiere.

F. B. O. Short Subject Units Are Working at Full Speed

THE arrival of vice-president J. I. Schnitzer and East Coast Scenario Editor John Brownell at the Coast studios of F. B. O. last week found the production forces at the very peak of activity, with special attention given to the production of the short subjects on the 1925-26 program.

The four comedy units at the F.B.O. studios are functioning at full speed, while Walter Lantz of the Bray Studios in New York is turning out two series of animated cartoons for the distributing company.

Ralph Ceder has just returned from a short vacation at La Jolla, and has reassembled his forces, and with Alberta Vaughn, Larry Kent, Kit Guard and Al Cooke, will start work tomorrow on the third episode of "The Adventures of Mazie" series titled "—Or What Have You?" "The Adventures of Mazie" consist of twelve episodes, and ran as short stories in Top Notch Magazine. Nell Martin, author of the stories, and Doris Anderson, continuitist, are working with Mr. Ceder on the adaptations.

Work on "Fighting Hearts," another series, will be started next week, Mr. Schnitzer announces. "Fighting Hearts" is being written expressly for F. B. O. by Sam Hellman, well known humorist. Larry Kent, the young juvenile who was recently signed to a five year contract by the company, and who is supporting Miss Vaughn in the "Mazie" series will play the lead in the new comedies. It is probable that Al Cooke and Kit Guard will again contribute of their inimitable laugh-provoking talents. The director's name, a man long and prominently identified with the production of comedy subjects, is being temporarily withheld.

The Joe Rock units, who are producing two series of 26 comedies for the distributing company, are also bee-hive of activity. The first two of the Standard Fat Men series, called "Tailoring" and "Three Wise Goofs" are already completed. Fat Karr, Tiny Alexander and Kewpie Ross, the three fatest men on the screen, whose total weight approximates a ton, are featured in the Standard Fat Men comedies. The catchline, "A Ton of Fun" is being used in the publicity, advertising and exploitation of these subjects.

The first of the Blue Ribbon comedies, "Lame Brains," another Joe Rock contribution, featuring Alice Ardell, a young Parisian girl who it is prophecied will be one of the screen sensations of the year, has also been completed.

Walter Lantz of the Bray Studios, who acts in conjunction with the cartoon characters he creates, has finished two of the 26 cartoons he is scheduled to produce for the distributing company The first of these, a Dinky Doodle cartoon, called "The Bad Man" is a burlesque on the vogue for wild and wooly westerns, while the second is an Unnatural History cartoon called "How the Elephant Got His Trunk."

FILM AGENCY FOR GERMANY

Hamburg Agent wishes to represent first-class Film Company in Germany.

LUDWIG BERWIN

WOLDSENWEG 7 HAMBURG

"The Two Soldiers"

Paramount Purchases a Hugh Wiley Story for Mildred Davis

Mildred Davis (Mrs. Harold Lloyd) will make her return to the screen in "The Two Soldiers," a Saturday Evening Post story by Hugh Wiley which appeared under the title, "The Spoils of War," it was announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

This was the result of a conference held between the author, Hector Turnbull, supervisor of production; Victor Fleming, who will direct the production, and Garnett Weston, who will act as supervising editor.

Hugh Wiley is now in seclusion in his San Francisco home, preparing the treatment. Production will not begin for some time as Victor Fleming is now completely absorbed in making "Lord Jim."

New Cameo Comedies

Two companies started production last week on the new series of twenty-four Cameo Comedies to be released through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc.

Cliff Bowes, who has been so popular in these single reelers, will be starred in one company under the direction of Charles Lamont. Jules White, brother of Jack White, will direct the other company, with Phil Dunham, Jimmy Hertz and Helen Marlowe in leading roles.

Change Title of Griffith Film

The title of Raymond Griffith's latest production for Paramount, "On Dress Parade," which is nearing completion, has been changed to "He's a Prince!" Official announcement of this change in title came from Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production. Mary Brian has the feminine lead. The other players, featured on the billing, in support of Raymond Griffith, are Tyrone Power, Nigel de Bruliere and Edgar Norton.

Thurston Accepts Challenge

Thurston, the magician, has accepted the challenge of Universal to produce a phantom during the prologue of "The Phantom of the Opera," which opens at the Astor Theatre, September 6. Universal has agreed to pay one thousand dollars to anyone who will successfully negotiate this test. Their challenge was broadcast throughout the country six months ago.

Starts "Prince of Broadway"

George Walsh, the athletic Chadwick Star, has started work on "The Prince of Broadway," which will be released as the second of his series of modern action romances for Chadwick Pictures Corporation. "The Prince of Broadway" is an adaptation of the well known play of the same name and is said to provide an unusual oportunity for the star to display his aptitude for daring stunts.

Suits Moore and Devore

Theatregoers remember "The Honeymoon Express," the hilarious comedy drama for which the troubles of newlywed life provided the material. It is a story well suited to the drollery of Matt Moore and the charms of Dorothy Devore, who are to star in Warner Bros.' production. Erle Kenton has been engaged to direct the production

NORMA SHEARER

The beautiful Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star in a scene in "A Slave of Fashion," her current success.

Fields in New Production

W. C. Fields, Follies comedian, whose screen acting in D. W. Griffith's recently exhibited "Sally of the Sawdust," evoked fresh enthusiasm on the part of critics and audiences, has been signed for a prominent part in the director's newest picture, "That Royal Girl," it is announced by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in charge of production.

Miniature Models of M.-G.-M.-Players

The newest thing in dolls is a bisque or plaster figure modeled from real life and reproduced exactly half the size of the person after whom it is modeled.

The first of these lifelike dolls to be made in California is to be a likeness of Claire Windsor, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer actress, who is posing for L. P. Prescott, sculptor and disabled war veteran.

Prescott, who recently joined the studio art department, modeling plaster figures for certain "Ben Hur" sets, has arranged with the California Hut of Disabled Veterans to place on the market dolls which he will model from the "Ben Hur" cast. These will include one-half lifesize reproductions of Ramon Novarro, May McAvoy, Kathleen Key, Frank Currier, Carmel Myers and Francis X. Bushman.

Prescott studied sculpturing for two and a half years at the Beaux Arts Institute, New York, and since leaving the school has had practical experience with such sculptors as Borglum, Aikens and Neihaus. For three years he worked under the direction of Messeti, enlarging historical monuments, especially war figures.

"Don Juan" Comes Later

"Don Juan," which will be John Barrymore's next picture for Warner Bros., is not to be released on this year's program, according to an announcement from the Warner office this week, but will be made into a big special and put out on the 1926-27 schedule.

Following "The Sea Beast," which is also to be one of the biggest productions of the year, the Warners decided they had to follow it, and surpass, if possible, with another picture just as big as the present Barrymore production. The entire 1925-26 schedule had been laid out, so there is no room for another picture of the magnitude expected of "Don Juan."

It was decided to make the picture before Barrymore returns to the East, and hold it for next season's release.

Editing "New Champion"

The third of the Perfection series of rapid action features, "The New Champion," which are distributed by Columbia Pictures, featuring William Fairbanks with Edith Roberts and Lloyd Whitlock, has been cut and titled and passed on for prints by production manager Harry Cohn. "Prints of this picture will soon be in all of our exchanges," President Joe Brandt also announced, "and this will mean that our production plans and promises which we made before the season had opened have been carried through so far in perfect shape."

New Title for Kyne Film

Peter B. Kyne's first picture for Fox will be titled "The Golden Strain," instead of "Thoroughbred," as first announced.

The spirit of Kyne's gripping tale of coward or hero in the wide open spaces will be quickened in the film production under the direction of Victor Schortzinger. George O'Brien, the William Fox star, who plays the leading part, fits into the role of the hero like a glove. Like the author, he is a product of the open spaces himself.

Leaves for Coast

Riza Royce, a new player who comes to the screen following a long engagement in the stage play "Dancing Mothers," left for Hollywood yesterday to fulfill the long term contract which she recently signed with B. P. Schulberg Productions. Her first Preferred Picture is to be "Lew Tyler's Wives" by Wallace Irwin which Marcel De Sano is preparing to direct.

Newman Books Red Seal

Frank Newman, managing director of the Rialto Theatre, Los Angeles, reports a capacity attendance this week with an all Red Seal Program. His feature picture for the week is Red Seal's "Evolution," the Kineto-Urban production, edited by Max Fleischer. The surrounding program consists of a "Gem of the Screen," a "Ko-Ko Song Car-tune," and an "Out-of-the-Inkwell," all Red Seal product.

Frank Newmeyer Chosen

Douglas MacLean has selected Frank Newmeyer, veteran comedy director, to direct "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the famous George M. Cohan stage success, the comedy star's first production for Paramount release.

Ernest Corts With Bray

Ernest Corts, naturalist and photographer, has joined the production staff of Bray Studios. He will assist Walter Lantz in the production of the new series of Unnatural History comedy cartoons, for F. B. O. release.

Fay Livingston, a younger sister of Margaret Livingston, popular leading woman and screen vamp, will be seen as "Min," opposite Joe Murphy, in a new "Andy Gump" series for Universal.

Renown's Beautiful Panels

Displays Illustrate Tiffany's "Big Twelve"—Titles in Bas Relief With Colors

No exhibitor should fail to visit the exchange of the Renown Pictures, Inc., at No. 729 Seventh Avenue, New York, and feast his eyes on one of the most artistic and unique exploitation displays ever attempted by executives of an exchange, who are aware of the value of showmanship in placing their program before the buyer.

Panels illustrating the Tiffany Big Twelve, which are released by Renown in New York, Buffalo and Northern New Jersey territory, including "The Sporting Chance," "Souls for Sables," featuring Claire Windsor and Eugene O'Brien; "Borrowed Finery," by George Bronson Howard; "Morals for Men," "Lightning," "The Lodge in the Wilderness," "Morganson's Finish," "The Travis Cup," "Tale of a Vanishing People," "The Dumb Head," "The Wrong Coat" and "The Life of a Woman," are artistically scattered about the reception room of the suite of offices.

All of the titles of the "Big Twelve" are illustrated in bas relief effect with colors that are attractive to the eye. The subject of the picture is the motif of the panel which is approximately framed and hung in conspicuous places in the mahogany panels that line the walls.

Adolphe Menjou Comes East

Adolphe Menjou arrived at the Paramount Long Island Studio last Thursday from the West Coast for the filming of "The King on Main Street," which will begin soon. He conferred upon the details of the picture with Monta Bell, who will direct it. This is Mr. Menjou's first visit East since the production of "The Swan." He had an extremely busy sojourn in the West, making "The Grand Duchess" and "Lost—A Wife."

Schable to Return to Screen

Robert Schable has resigned his position of business manager of the Samuel Goldwyn-George Fitzmaurice Productions, one which he has occupied for the past two years, and will return to the screen where he was formerly very successful.

"The Iron Horse" Scores Big Hit in Portland and Seattle

SCORE two more smashing triumphs for "The Iron Horse," Fox Film Corporation epic romance of the building of the first transcontinental railroad. Seattle, Wash., and Portland, Ore., away up in the northwest corner of the country, are the latest cities to capitulate to the great John Ford production and line up with New York, Los Angeles, Cleveland and Montreal in admitting that this epochal film is one of the motion picture masterpieces of all time.

At both these northwestern cities "The Iron Horse" is now in the midst of sensational runs that developed without any unusual amount of ballyhooing and which promise to attain record-breaking proportions before they are over.

"The Horse," as this Ford production is familiarly called in the trade, started its "smashing through the Northwest" at the Majestic Theatre in Portland on August 1, and a week later, on August 8, at Jensen & Von Herberg's Liberty Theatre in Seattle. At both places it was figured to mop up for a week and then move on to other conquests.

It is motion picture history that the feature films that are held over a week in either of these cities are few and far between and then only after very substantial sums have been spent on all sorts of advertising and exploitation stunts. Statistics have it that less than a half dozen motion pictures have played over two weeks at the Liberty Theatre in Seattle, while more specific figures regarding runs in Portland show that since the dawn of motion pictures only six productions have impressed the population of the Oregon city enough to warrant the exhibitor's holding them for more than a fortnight.

At the present writing "The Iron Horse" is in its third capacity week at the Majestic in Portland and in its fourth at the Liberty in Seattle, with bright prospects of additional holdovers in both places.

"He's a Prince"

Raymond Griffith Completes First Starring Vehicle for Paramount

Raymond Griffith's first starring picture for Paramount, "He's a Prince," is finished, and the photoplay is now being edited. The screen play was by Keene Thompson from a story by Reginald Morris and Joseph Mitchell.

Mary Brian plays the leading feminine role. Others featured are Tyrone Power, Nigel de Bruilicre and Edgar Norton. Prominent roles are played by Gustav Von Seyfertitz, Michael Dark, Carl Stockdale and Kathleen Kirkham.

"Buddy," the canine actor, seen in many pictures with Griffith, is also decidedly in the cast. Edward Sutherland directed.

PROMINENT PERSONAGES BEHIND THE PATHESERIAL, "PLAY BALL"

Cast Complete for Lloyd's First Paramount Picture

HAROLD LLOYD is going in for some rough work in his first picture for Paramount release. Production Manager John L. Murphy, yesterday signed two of the screen's "strongest" men for important roles in the newest Harold Lloyd production.

Noah Young, for six years associated with Lloyd in "heavy" characterizations, returns to the comedian's fold, after an absence of two years. Young has been engaged for the principal "heavy" part of the new Lloyd yarn, laid largely in the slums of a big American city.

Constantine Romanoff, one of America's greatest wrestlers, has also been engaged for a "strong man" part. Romanoff boasts of a pair of cauliflower adornments that will make Bull Montana look to his beauty laurels and will be seen in the "mission" scenes of the newest Lloyd opus.

With the engaging of Paul Weigel, a veteran character actor, for the role of the faithful missionary of the slums, production manager Murphy announces the completion of the cast.

Jobyna Ralston, recently signed again as leading lady for Mr. Lloyd, has been cast as the missionary's daughter, a part that will afford her the same scope as "Girl Shy" or "The Freshman."

Sam Taylor is directing, the scenario work being handled by Ted Wilde, Tim Whelan, John Grey and Clyde Bruckman.

Lloyd hopes to have two pictures completed by next May so that he can take a long delayed European trip with Mrs. Lloyd, and perhaps Mildred Gloria.

Tiffany's "Souls for Sables" Completed; Print on Way East

"SOULS FOR SABLES," the second of the Tiffany "Big Twelve" suggested by "Garlan & Co.," by David Graham Phillips, has been completed and the first print has been shipped from the Hollywod studios to New York.

At a showing for the officials of the Tiffany Company the picture was acclaimed as one of the best that this company has made this year. It compares more than favorably with the productions of the leading film producing units and is destined to make film history insofar as Independent productions are concerned.

The continuity was written by A. P. Younger, who also supervised the direction by James C. McKay. The featured players in "Souls for Sables" are Claire Windsor and Eugene O'Brien, supported by such a well known cast of players as Claire Adams, Eileen Percy, Anders Randolf, Robert Ober, George Fawcett and Edith Yorke.

In line with the announcements made by M. H. Hoffman, general manager, at the beginning of the year that the pictures to be turned out by Tiffany will be of the highest quality and entertainment value, "Souls for Sables" in every way bears out this policy, according to the officials of the company.

"Nightie Night, Nurse"

Syd Chaplin's next picture for Warner Bros. will be called "Nightie Night Nurse," from the story by Robert W. Sherwood and Bertram Bloch.

Tiffany's Fourth

"Morals For Men," suggested by "The Love Serum" by Gouverneur Morris, will be the fourth of the Tiffany Productions "Big Twelve."

Mada Gann and Laty Florens, stars of the Imperial Theatre of Moscow, and the latter a noted Continental director, have signed to appear in B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Pictures. Later, Florenz may direct.

Goldwyn Signs King

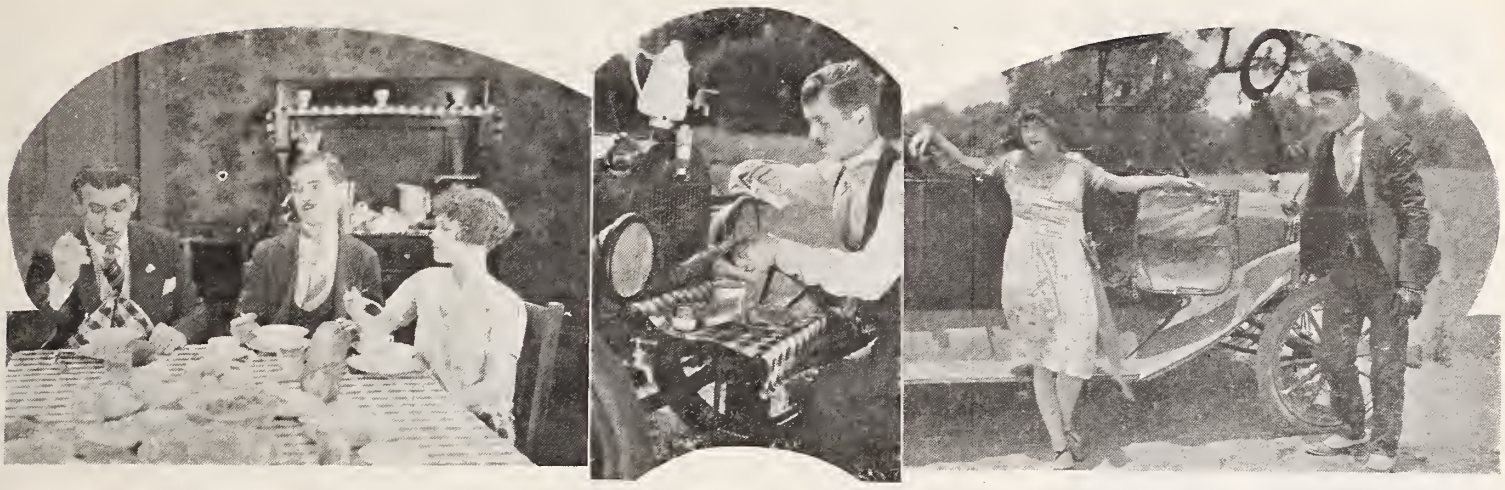
Samuel Goldwyn, motion picture producer, announces the signing of a contract whereby Henry King, director, will become associated with him in the making of a series of de luxe productions covering a period of several years.

King has a long list of notable successes to his credit, including "The White Sister" and "Tol'able David." He is at present filming Samuel Goldwyn's screen version of "Stella Dallas," with an all-star cast including Ronald Colman, Belle Bennett, Alice Joyce, Lola Moran, Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., and Jean Hersholt. "Stella Dallas" is Samuel Goldwyn's first offering to United Artists since his recent affiliation with that organization.

Elinor Glyn Signed by M-G-M

Elinor Glyn, who has been supervising the making of her own productions but not actually directing them, has been signed by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer to direct her next picture, "The Only Thing," from an original story written by her: This tale has an imaginary kingdom for a background, and is now being adapted to the screen. Pending completion of the adaptation, Mme. Glyn is selecting members of the cast.

Scenes and players in the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer feature, "The Unholy Three," one of the most compelling narratives ever produced in motion pictures. Among the players, instantly recognized here, are: Mae Busch, Lon Chaney, Victor McLaglen and Matt Moore. Tod Browning directed.



Scenes from "The Tourist," first of the 1925-26 series of Educational-Tuxedo Comedies featuring Jimmy Arthur.

Educational to Have Six Series of Two-Reel Comedies in Work by September

SIX different series of two-reel comedies on the Educational Pictures program for 1925-26 will be under way by the end of September, with one or more subjects in each group released All the single-reel series will have had their start. In the three remaining groups of two-reel comedies—Hamilton Comedies, Lupino Lane Comedies and Juvenile Comedies—the first subject will have appeared in pre-release showings, although set on the release schedule for October.

Educational's 1925-26 product began to make its appearance late in August with the releasing of a two-reel Special, "Wild Beasts of Borneo," a single-reel animated cartoon, "Felix the Cat rifles With Time," and a two-reel Christie Comedy, "Soup to Nuts," featuring Neal Burns.

Close-ups of wild beasts secured by Mr. and Mrs. Lou C. Hutt, who spent two years in the jungles of Borneo, are the remarkably thrilling features of "Wild Beasts of Borneo." These two extraordinary reels are made up of the "high spots" selected from the many thousands of feet of film made by the Hutts on their long and perilous expedition. "Felix the Cat Trifles With Time" is an animated cartoon from the versatile pen of Pat Sullivan, the originator of the famous "Felix."

The first Christie Comedy is more lavishly presented than its predecessors, and marks a new era in the "dressing up" of a two-reeler. Vera Steadman, Gale Henry, Natalie Joyce and William Irving all contribute in no small degree to furnishing the star, Neal Burns, with material for a continuous round of laughable situations.

The first week of September a Bobby Vernon Comedy, "Watch Out," will be released, and Bobby's legion of fun followers will not be disappointed with the opening comedy of the 1925-26 series of their favorite. Jack Duffy and Frances Lee lead able support to the star. "Pleasure Bound," a Mermaid Comedy, with a cast headed by Lige Conley, is another two-reeler on this week's schedule and one that abounds with original novelties and bits. A telescopic flivver's antics and a fast motorboat race furnished many laughs and thrills in the first of this new series of Jack White Productions. Included in the releases for the week is another "Felix the Cat" cartoon, "Felix Busts Into Business."

The week of September 13 is to have for its outstanding release, "Off His Beat," starring Walter Hiers. The popular rotund comedian for the first time takes the part of a traffic cop, a part which allows for many novel gags and situations. A Cameo one-reel subject, "In Deep," with Cliff Bowes and Helen Foster, completes the schedule for this week.

Critics have pronounced "The Tourist" one of the outstanding comedies of the year. It is a two-reel Tuxedo Comedy, being released the week of September 20. Johnny Arthur and Helen Foster as leading lady, furnish rapid-fire merriment in a very pleasing story about a flivver tourist. "The Tourist" is Arthur's first picture since he was signed up as the star of Tuxedo Comedies. Two novelty releases, a "Felix the Cat"' cartoon, and Lyman H. Howe's Hodge-Podge "The Story Teller," are the single-reel offerings of the week.

The first Jimmie Adams Comedy, "Be Careful," makes its appearance the week of September 27. Long a favorite in Christie Comedies, this is Adams's first appearance in a production unit of his own. Judging from the strides he shows in this one, the series promises to be most successful. Another Mermaid Comedy is contributed this week in Al St. John offering an enjoyable assortment of acrobatics and comedy combined in a picture called "Fair Warning." A one-reel Cameo Comedy, "Who's Which," with Cliff Bowes and Phil Dunham, completes the comedy schedule.

In addition to the above, two releases of Kinograms, Educational's News Reel, will be issued each week.

Scenes in "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," a Preferred Picture by B. P. Schulberg, with a cast that includes Lionel Barrymore, Henry B. Walthall, Marguerite de la Motte and Lilyan Tashman.

Live Wire Independent Takes Twelve Gotham Pictures

Another important Independent distribution deal was closed this week when Sam Sax closed the deal for the distribution of twelve Gotham productions in the Southwestern States of Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas with Jack K. Adams of the Home State Film Co., Inc., with offices in Dallas, Little Rock and Oklahoma City.

The contract was made during Mr. Adams' visit to New York and immediately following he left for Dallas to inaugurate a special advertising and exploitation campaign for the Gotham pictures.

Mr. Adams took with him to Texas prints of the first three releases, "The Overland Limited," "The Police Patrol" and "A Little Girl in a Big City." He intends to release these immediately and to follow them up at the rate of one or more a month for the remaining nine.

Special Campaign Sheet

Lon Young has prepared an exceptionally complete and compact campaign sheet for the Gotham Production, "A Little Girl in a Big City," and the exhibitor who follows along the lines laid out for him on this picture is assured of results, as every line of the campaign sheet is based on hard practical experience.

"Drusilla With a Million" Receives Plaudits of Critics

THAT "Drusilla With a Million," the Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond production is meeting with the enthusiastic endorsement of the newspaper critics in every city in which it plays, is evidenced by the plaudits tendered the picture upon its opening in various key cities throughout the United States.

At the picture's premiere at the Garden Theatre, Milwaukee, the Sentinel waxed unusually enthusiastic, and said:

"What makes 'Drusilla With a Million' stand above the average picture where the plot follows a sentimental groove is that the director by means of a cast of talented players has managed to impart a really beautiful lesson in the principles of unselfishness and devotion to the common good without using the too obvious varieties of hokum."

The News of Milwaukee commented: "It is a picture that will appeal to most every movie fan. Rich in laughs, tears and gripping moments, it is in every way decidedly worth seeing."

At the opening at the Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C. the reviews give every indication that the picture pleased conservative Washington.

The Post says: "The story vividly portrays the naive and ingenuous methods adopted by the delightful little old lady who, being forced to work for her keep in a charity home, is suddenly left a million dollars."

The Times of Washington enthused: "It tells a powerful and appending story and is rich in character study. Mary Carr as the worn-out old servant, who suddenly inherits a million dollars and turns her beautiful home into a nursery for unfortunate children, gives a performance that dwarfs all her previous efforts."

"False Pride," Second Macfadden Production, Has Been Completed

"FALSE PRIDE," the second Macfadden Made Movie of the True Story Film Company, was completed this week at the Pathe studio in the Bronx. Owen Moore heads the cast, supported by Faire Binney, Ruth Stonehouse, Bradley Barker and Jane Jennings. Hugh Dierker, who directed the first True Story production, "The Wrongdoers," also directed "False Pride." All of the eight True Story productions are to be distributed by Astor Distributing Corporation.

An intensive exploitation campaign already has been mapped out on "False Pride." The story from which the production was made will be published in five installments, the first of which will appear in the November issue of "True Romances" Magazine. The cover of the magazine will carry at the top the line "False Pride." The magazine story will be illustrated with "still" photographs of the production.

Placards will be distributed by the Macfadden circulation department to news dealers throughout the country, the placard to tie-up the magazine story and the forthcoming production. After the story has had a month's run in "True Romances" Magazine, the first installment will be available for newspaper publication without charge where exchanges can place the story. In New York, "False Pride" will be printed in the Macfadden tabloid newspaper, the Graphic.

Full page advertising is being carried in nine of the Macfadden publications.

Title Changed

The title of the Richard Talmadge production, now under way, has been changed to "The Prince of Pep," instead of "Dr. Jim," as was first announced. This new Richard Talmadge production is by James Bell Smith and will be a stunt melodrama that will eclipse all others of this versatile star's film vehicles.

Josie Sedgwick's Next

Josie Sedgwick, the screen's most famous cowgirl, will be starred by Universal in "Outlaw Love," a thrilling Western melodramatic picture. The supporting cast includes Earl Metcalfe, Joseph Rickson, John Elliott, "Curly" Baldwin and Floyd Shackelford. John B. O'Brien will direct.

Scenes in "The Trouble With Wives," produced for Paramount by Mal St. Clair, with Florence Vidor, Tom Moore, Ford Sterling and Esther Ralston featured.

How to Use This Chart

First—Bookings! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play Date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over- and under-length programs.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Valuable Data

Arthur H. Gray, Chief Projectionist Lancaster Theatre, Boston, Massachusetts, who has shown himself to be, beyond question, one of the leading projectionists of the country, whom I personally know has recently refused an offer to become Supervisor of Projection for a chain of theatres in the middle west at a salary of something like eight thousand dollars a year, in order that he might continue his work in developing projection under the excellent conditions afforded him in his present position, unhampered by the additional duties and responsibilities an executive position would involve, hands me a sample of film, together with an argument which ought to be read carefully —I came near saying prayerfully—by all film men.

Gray says:

Our current program, a Pathe feature, titled "Introduce Me," is 6,424 feet in length. The result of an examination of this film at the rewind table was such as to warrant our expecting an excellent screen appearance from it. The splices were well made and not excessive in number. The sprocket holes were neither cracked or broken out. The surface of the film was almost entirely free from rain or scratches.

Interesting Condition

A very interesting condition developed, however, as soon as projection was begun. It was accompanied by a continuous and very pronounced singing and rattling sound, very similar to the noise emanating from the projector when unsteady on the screen. True there was no bad jump, but the picture was nevertheless unsteady. The noise and unsteadiness continued consistently throughout the run of projectors No. 1 and No. 2. It started out the same on projector No. 3, but suddenly, at a point I afterward found to be 1,420 feet from the end of the production, the noise ceased, while the picture at the same time became perfectly steady on the screen. This condition continued clear through to the end of the production.

This had me guessing. In the first place the noise and jump was occurring when we were using film that had every appearance of providing normal projection. In the second place, or as the good pastor would say, secondly, because the noise and jump ceased so suddenly, and the film acted so very differently from that point on to its end.

When projection of the entire production was finished I checked back and located the point at which the change in the projection characteristics occurred. It was at a splice, and I am sending you the splice, with several frames on either side attached, which same I removed from the production for the purpose—a thing I was fully justified in doing, I think, under the circumstances. These frames tell the story as well as though you had the entire print at hand for examination. Very clearly it appears that it is a matter of the shape of the sprocket holes.

Different Holes

The film had square corner sprocket holes from the title up to this point—a distance of 5,004 feet. From that point to the end of the production the perforations had rounded corners. Notice carefully the relative condition of the sprocket holes on each side of the central splice in the sample. You will note that the rounded corner holes have not been damaged in any visible degre. On the other hand you will notice that the holes having square corners show a slight check, or tear in one corner of nearly all sprocket holes on one side of the film.

The difference in projection characteristics between the two assemblies was very pronounced, apparently indicating that the shape of the holes is a matter that warrants careful consideration by film manufacturers, producers and exchange men.

Of course in this case there was no way of determining the amount of abuse the film had been subjected to in previous projection, or the conditions under which the corners of the square holes had been strained and torn, but it seems to me the big point is that both kinds of holes must have been subjected to exactly the same kind and amount of any abuse there may have been, and the round corner holes stood up perfectly under it, whereas the square cornered ones did not.

Taking this particular film as an example, here seems to be what the whole thing means to the producer and the exchangeman, to the owner of the films. This print will, in a comparatively few more runs, have 5,004 feet of its length to all intents and purposes ruined, while 1,420 feet which will still be in first rate projecting condition, all apparently because of the difference in shape of perforations.

If the laboratory folks are aware of the difference in projecting characteristics as between the film perforated with the two kinds of holes, then by what ledgerdemain of reasoning do they justify the continuation of the inferior shape of sprocket hole? If they are not aware that a difference of such importance does exist, and are perhaps in doubt as to the facts in the matter, then is there no one in charge of this phase of their work who is sufficiently interested in the subject to construct two similar length bands of film, one perforated with holes of one kind and one with holes of the other, subjecting them to continuous projection, under identical conditions, to determine the relative performance of the two shapes of perforation.

It seems to me that the owners of the film ought to have the greatest interest of any one in this matter, though the projectionist and exhibitor is deeply interested too, the one because excellence of perforation and perforations in first class condition are absolutely vital to high grade projection, the other because he is vitally interested in high grade screen results from the box office viewpoint. However, the fact that film perforated with square cornered sprocket holes will deteriorate very much more rapidly that will film perforated with round cornered sprocket holes seems to be the one BIG point, and a point in which the owners of the film ought to be greatly concerned.

I would again, in conclusion, direct your attention to the fact that these few frames of film must not be considered as an isolated group in the production from which they were taken. They are, as a matter of fact, true samples of the two assemblies on either side of the joining splice, and any characteristics noted in these samples would hold entirely true for all the rest of their respective assemblies, the term "assemblies" meaning the film making up the 5,004 feet, and the 1,420 feet before named.

Good Stuff

This is my idea of really good department matter. It really would seem that at least a thousand of our readers would have enterprise enough and enough love for and respect for your profession, or whatever they have a mind to call it, to help in such matters as this by relating your experiences in such things as this.

I am showing you only a few of the holes of each sample, enlarged exactly two times —or at least I am asking that the enlargement be just that.

I am not entirely certain that all the trouble is due to the square corners. I have no means available for making accurate

Bluebook School

Question No. 358—(Practical question submitted by C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa.) Presuming the current supply to be alternating and that when you took charge of a new theatre and proceeded to install the machines, you found the A. C. circuit wires to be No. 4 from main house switchboard to projection room; the length of the circuit is 71 feet; the circuit is a 3-wire and each wire is well incased in standard conduit, the three pipes side by side and well fastened, would you accept the circuit as satisfactory?

Look out. Watch your step! —Ed.

Question No. 359—Set forth, briefly, the principal difference as between R. C. and other insulations.

Question No. 360—Is it necessary that conduit be grounded? Why?

Question No. 361—Explain the insulation of a rheostat. By this is meant the insulation incorporated in the construction of the rheostat itself.

Question No. 362—When using rheostats would you insulate the whole instrument or ground its frame? Give reasons for your answer.

measurements, but have a suspicion that the square corner holes are a bit the larger of the two. Probably I am in error in that, but the engineers can determine that matter

Gray is entitled to the thanks of the entire profession for making such an excellent report on this matter. I think it is beyond question that the round corner perforations are the stronger of the two. That has been more than amply proven. I also believe the noise may be caused by the square cornered holes, but that part of it remains to be proven. I would appreciate a report of the engineers as to their finding in this matter. Also cannot some of you projectionists help in this matter?

Commutator Trouble

George L. Branscome, Colorado Springs, Colorado, is having trouble with a motor generator set. He says:

I have an old type motor generator set. It is about seven or eight years old and has not given trouble until lately. The commutator now sparks incessantly, and gets so hot after an hour's run that it is uncomfortable to the hand. It was turned up a while ago and the trouble became worse afterward, though the machinist seems to have done a good job. I have examined the insulation between the bars with a magnifying glass, and cannot find anything wrong. Will you be good enough to advise me.

Perhaps I had better tell you that the commutator runs pretty warm for a long while before it was turned up, but is much worse since then. It was pretty badly cut down by the brushes.

Another thing: Will you be good enough to explain to me how I can determine the speed of the projector intermittent movement, or can I do it at all? One projectionist I asked said that had to be done by the manufacturer. Another asked what business it was of mine what the speed was, and than asked me what I meant by speed of the intermittent anyhow.

Simple

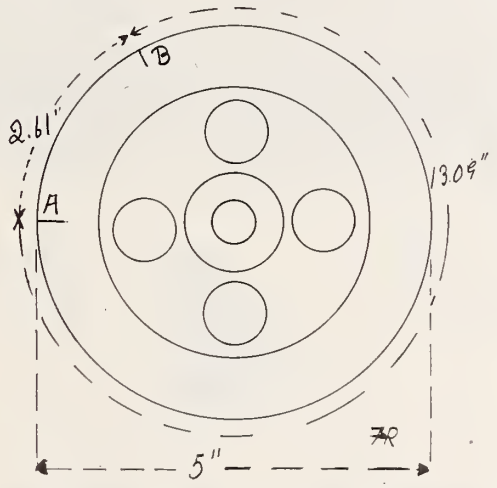
Your generator trouble seems to be very simple. Everything you have said points to the fact that the commutator is just plain worn out. If the facts were known, I think you would find the commutator has been turned down more than once probably three or four times. The bars are probably getting very thin—so thin that they won't carry the current without heating. You should have told me the make of machine it is, but anyhow you may bank on thin commutator bars being the answer to your trouble. You can have the commutator renewed, but if the set is that old I suggest that the installation of a new set would be the logical thing to do.

As to measuring the intermittent speed, it is simple, and once you understand what it is you are trying to do, it is not difficult. What you propose to measure is just this: the time the film stands still and is projected, with relation to the time it is in motion, with the light cut off the screen by the master blade of the shutter. In other words, you are measuring the percentage of time the film stands as compared with the percentage of time it is in motion, and the man who says that that is of no importance to the projectionist is not himself a motion picture projectionist, though he may be a very poor specimen of a machine operator.

How It Is Done

The method of measuring most available to the projectionist is as follows: The flywheel makes one complete revolution for each frame of picture. Get that fact firmly fixed in your mind. The flywheel revolves exactly once to each frame of picture, hence one revolution of the flywheel represents one picture cycle, or frame.

Now use your reasoning powers a little. If you, having first set up the intermittent to eliminate all lost motion, set the flywheel where the intermittent sprocket is just ready to move, make a scratch mark on some fixed object near same, and a scratch mark on the face of the flywheel exactly opposite to it and you then turn the flywheel in the direction it normally turns until the intermittent sprocket just stops, and make another mark on its face exactly opposite the mark first made on a fixed object, you will have what you want, because the distance between the two marks you have made and the distance between them measured around the face of the wheel in the other direction, will be the relation of the movement and rest time of the film.



Remember one thing. When the intermittent starts and stops is NOT "nearly" or "pretty near" or "almost." For accurate work—and anything except accurate work in such a thing is entirely useless—you must use your ingenuity to find a way to determine EXACTLY when the sprocket starts, and EXACTLY when it comes to rest.

First, using a reliable steel tape, measure the circumference of the wheel, or with a steel scale (ruler) measure its EXACT diameter, and multiply that measurement by 3.1416. The result will be the circumference of the wheel.

Let us assume the wheel to be exactly five inches in diameter. 3.1416 X 5 = 15.7080 inches, which then, is the circumference of the wheel. Now set the wheel where the sprocket is just ready to move, and make a scratch mark on the frame of the projector or some fixed object as near as possible to the rim of the wheel, and exactly opposite it make a mark on the wheel which we will call A in the drawing.

Next turn the wheel very, very slowly until the sprocket just barely stops, and make another mark, which is B on the drawing.

Next measure the EXACT distance between marks A and B around the face of the wheel, using a steel tape or a bit of tough paper stretched around the curve of the wheel, which may be measured by a steel scale afterward, when laying flat. REMEMBER THAT SLOPPY MEASUREMENTS WON'T DO. This is work where accuracy is demanded.

Instructions

Let us assume the measurement to be 2.61798 inches, which in the drawing I have chopped of at 2.61, though in the actual work I would do nothing of the sort. Subtracting this measurement from the total circumference (15.70788) we find the result to be 13.08990 inches.

Hence, the ratio of movement to rest is as 2.61798 is to 13.08990. But that is not in good form. There are 360 degrees in every circle, and in a circle 15.708 inches in circumference, one degree would equal one three hundred and sixtieth of that figure, or .043633 of an inch, and there would be as many degrees in 2.61 inches (distance between A and B) as .043633 is contained times into 2.61, which is within a very small fraction of sixty degrees, so that we have what is called a "sixty degree" movement.

In other words the film is in motion during sixty degrees of the rotation of the flywheel and shutter, and at rest 360 — 60 = 300 degrees Put in another form, if we divide the revolution of the flywheel, or the time that revolution represents, into six equal portions, then the film is in movement during one of those portions, and at rest during the other five. It is a "one to five" or a "one in six" movement.

Accuracy Essential

Given this information, by using great care to be ABSOLUTELY ACCURATE, any projectionist may measure any intermittent movement, and thus be able to make intelligent comparison as between the movements of various projectors.

Warning: You CAN'T do this sort of thing successfully with a ten cent cotton tape line or a wooden ruler, though by careful work you can, as I have intimated, measure around the face of the wheel between marks with pieces of tough paper, cutting them to accurate length and measuring them when laid flat with any reasonably accurate scale.

There, friend Branscome, that's the best I can do for you. I've tried to make it clear. Have I succeeded? As to the motor generator, I repeat: the best thing to do will be to get a new one. By that I mean that it will be the cheapest in the long run.

Ice Broken

C. O. Henning, Projectionist Pastime Theatre, Iowa City, Iowa, sends in replies 316—320 of Bluebook School question, a glance at which conveys the impression that they are excellent. He says:

Dear Friend Richardson: The "Bluebook" sure is a friend of mine, so that of course includes its author. Mine is one of the first hundred copies, so you see I am not so slow in all things as I have been in getting started in the "school."

Attached find my answers to questions 316-320 which I trust will serve to admit me to the school. I hope to be able to continue in it, now that the ice is broken and I have made a start. My failure to "enter" sooner was my own loss, as I can see very plainly now.

This letter is signed "Your Friend and Pupil," which that was well meant, but I don't like the "pupil" part of it. Brother Henning, next time you write, sign it "Your friend." It is NOT teacher and pupil, but two men working TOGETHER. Probably I do know more about technical projection than do you. My opportunities for the acquisition of knowledge along those lines has been enormous during the past fifteen years or more; also I have put in ALL my time studying one thing, and that thing is the technical matters relating to motion picture projection.

It is a fact, however, that right now you doubtless could yourself teach me quite a lot about practical things in projection. We then are, brother Henning, working TOGETHER, in the Bluebook School and in all other things. We try to help each other, and in so doing help the PROFESSION each of us are interested in because it is our life work.

Why Profession?

Why do I say it is a profession, do you ask?

A fair question, friend o' mine, which I will try to answer. I hold motion picture projection to be decidedly above the thing we call a "trade," because such a very wide and accurate knowledge of many things is required before a man can honestly declare himself a proficient, competent motion picture projectionist.

A man who lays brick has to know how to lay joints of even thickness; how to lay the wall up plumb, and a comparatively FEW other things about wall building. The very best of them must know something about arches, pilasters, etc., but after all relatively is is not very much.

The man who starts out to be a plumber must know how to "wipe a joint" and how to run lines of pipe, but practically all he has to know is just "pipe."

The painter must know how to spread paint well, and how to mix it, but it is all just paint. And thus it is with trades. They require accurate knowledge as a rule, along just one line.

Is that true of motion picture projection? Stop and think a moment? You surely well know it is NOT TRUE. The motion picture projectionist handles a mechanism which must, in its integral parts (which work at high speed, and which are therefore under heavy stress) be accurate in their functioning down to as fine a measurement as one ten thousands of an inch. CERTAINLY NO ONE WILL DENY THAT A MAN MUST BE A FAIRLY GOOD MECHANIC IN ORDER TO HANDLE SUCH A MECHANISM INTELLIGENTLY, GET THE BEST THERE IS IN IT OUT IN THE WAY OF PERFORMANCE, AND CAUSE IT TO GIVE ACCURATE FUNCTIONING OVER ANY EXTENDED PERIOD OF TIME. You will then surely grant that the motion picture projectionist must, for best results, be a fairly good mechanic. Surely not even the greatest "nothing-to-it" declaimer of them all will dispute that proposition.

The motion picture projectionist, competent or otherwise, handles an optical system, upon the proper functioning of which depends, in very large degree, whether there will be placed before the audience a sharply defined screen image, or a fuzzy, more or less blurred and unbeautiful image of the original photograph. Upon the correct functioning of this lens system, too, must the infinite variety of photographic shadings depend for correct reproduction upon the screen.

Not only are these things dependent upon the lens system working as it should work, but also it is imperatively necessary that the said system be correctly selected, and that each of its elements be correctly placed with relation to its other elements, else there will be injury to the screen image, waste in light (which also means wasted electric energy) and a probably added tendency to flicker on the screen.

This lens system consists of two distinct and entirely separate lens systems, which must join their functioning, and do it through a very small aperture. ANY MAN WHO BELIEVES THIS PRESENTS A SIMPLE PROBLEM, OR ONE WHICH IT IS EASY TO SOLVE IN THE BEST POSSIBLE WAY, EVEN WITH THE AID OF LENS CHARTS AND UP-TO-DATE DATA, CERTAINLY KNOWS VERY LITTLE INDEED ABOUT MOTION PICTURE PROBLEMS.

THE REALLY COMPETENT MOTION PICTURE PROJECTIONIST MUST HAVE A PRETTY GOOD GROUNDING IN OPTICS, AND THE FUNCTIONING OF LENSES AS APPLIES TO MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION. To dispute that would be equivalent to disputing the fact that three and two make five. You may dispute it until you are black in the face, but two plus three make five just the same.

It is so well recognized, even by those who insist that "op'ratin' a machine" is all there is to motion picture projection, that the projectionist must have a good working knowledge of electricity that I think we may pass that by with the remark that the man who handles relatively large motor generators, mercury arc rectifiers, etcetra, and gets efficient results from them, plus maximum length of efficient service, has quite a bunch of knowledge stored in his head, even though he had nothing else there.

In addition to all this the COMPETENT motion picture projectionist MUST understand screen surfaces, screen surroundings and colorings, auditorium lighting insofar as it affects projection, the differences in screen illumination necessary under various auditorium illumination conditions and MUST understand action and able to judge when a moving object is moving unnaturally fast or slow.

I have by no manner of means dealt with all it is necessary for the competent motion picture projectionist to know to give consistent high class service—to get the best possible out of his equipment and the "show" handed him by the theatre management.

CAN ANY MAN JACK OF YOU ALL DENY, DISPUTE, OR EVEN QUESTION THE PROPOSITION THAT UNLESS THE PROJECTIONIST DOES KNOW ALL THE THINGS I HAVE NAMED, AND KNOW THEM WELL, HE IS TO THAT EXTENT LACKING IN COMPETENCY?

If any one does dispute, or even question, let him stand forth and be heard, together with reasons for disputing or questioning.

If you agree that what I have said is essentially correct, then DON'T YOU THINK A THING DEMANDING SUCH A WIDE RANGE OF ACCURATE KNOWLEDGE, AND SUCH HIGH GRADE SKILL, IS SOMETHING MORE THAN A MERE TRADE???? DON'T YOU THINK IT AT LEAST IS PRETTY CLOSE TO BEING IN THE NATURE OF A PROFESSION?? Can you not name professions which demand no greater range of knowledge, or even not so great a range?

Those, gentlemen, are my reasons for declaring motion picture projection as in the nature of a PROFESSION. Not such a very crazy idea after all, it it?

High Intensity-Series Generator

David Drew, Projectionist Columbia Theatre, Longview, Washington, desires information, as follows:

Dear Richardson: This Theatre, the Columbia, of which I am projectionist, opened about April 4, this year. Have been making a study of the high intensity arc, insofar as I am able to by the help of the Bluebook, some manufacturers, phamphlets and the projection department.

We have a $250,000 house, and the last word in Power projectors. It is a 2-projector installation, put in by the Theatre Equipment Company, of Seattle. Take juice through a 75-75 ampere Westinghouse series type generator, which is a fine machine.

High intensities were tried at the opening, but due, I think, to a faulty hook-up in the generator circuit, which we later found and corrected, they were discarded, and the Type E lamps installed.

I was informed by the installers that the high intensity would not be used with a series type generator, even though the machine functioned properly. How about it? I am unable to see any reason why this should be. My generator delivers 75 amperes at 61 to 63 volts, and is beautifully steady. Am anxious to get the absolute low down on this, as the "powers that be" favor a very brilliant picture—and so do I. If the high intensity lamps can be successfully operated in series and at 75 amperes, I will probably get them.

I fully realize that they are apt to require special care in order to achieve results, but we must have more light than I can get from an ordinary arc at 75 amperes, and the reflector lamp is out of the question, as we use a 75 ampere spot and a fifty ampere Brinkert flood and effect machine.

Do you know of any high intensity lamps being used with series type generator?

I know of no good reason why two 75 ampere high intensity lamps cannot be used with a series type generator. For a house such as you have, if I may judge by its cost, I most emphatically would NOT recommend a 75 ampere high intensity arc. I would recommend a 120 ampere high intensity. Up to now I have not myself been very enthusiastic about the 75 ampere high intensity arc. The usable light all comes from the mass of vapor in the crater, and not from the crater floor, as with the ordinary arc.

There is a large difference as between the light from the vapor, or "gas ball" as it is termed, and the light which comes from the wall of the crater. The light from the vapor is brilliant—very much so. By comparison with it the light emitted from the carbon itself is orange color.

Whether or not it is humanly possible to keep the entire crater (which is deep, with thin walls, if it be properly formed) filled with gas vapor) or no I cannot yet say. I do not believe it is, and if it is, it certainly would require very careful work to do it.

What I am getting at is this: it is necessary that the "gas ball" or mass of vapor (I don't like the term 'ball,' which I think is not correct) be magnified sufficiently to cover the entire aperture. Unless it is, there will be a brilliant screen center, with darker edges and corners.

My reason for not favoring the 75 ampere high intensity in a large, costly theatre is because in it we may assume that any not-too-large added expense which improves results on the screen will be returned many fold at the box office, and as the 120 ampere crater is naturally much larger, and its vapor mass has much greater area, there is much more leeway in its handling, and far more certainty of constant, brilliant screen illumination.

With the 120 ampere high intensity arc, intelligently handled, the screen illumination should be absolutely constant, insofar as visible variations are concerned, and very brilliant. With the 75 ampere high intensity there is, in the very nature of things, more uncertainty.

As to the 75-75 ampere series type motor generator, I believe some makes of these machines do, to a certain extent, produce a fluctuating current, when used with high intensities, but I have yet to see one which was bad enough to be visible on the screen. The ammeter needle swung, but the light, insofar as the eye could see, was constant. Of course it was really not constant, but we are mainly interested in what we can see.

My advice would be this: If you wish to try out high intensities with your present set—75 ampere arcs—I would put it up to the lamp people. I would say to them: "I have a 75-75 ampere Westinghouse motor generator, series arc type. I will buy two 75 ampere arcs, provided you guarantee them to perform to my satisfaction, taking current from my machine. If they refuse to give that guarantee I would be fairly certain that they at least fear the thing would not work out, for they are constantly installing lamps all over the country, and are in the absolute know as to just what complaints reach them from installations of various sorts.

What I would recommend is this: Install a complete outfit consisting of a motor generator of suitable capacity, and two 120 ampere high intensity arcs.

Cost? Yes, but after all what does that amount to when you stack it up against the income from $250,000, which must depend largely upon the excellence of the results these very things will give. With them there will be no guesswork. You will have an evently, brilliant illuminated screen ALL the time. I would make the sellers of the goods agree to have an expert high intensity man remain with me for one week AFTER the installation, and teach me all there is to teach about their handling.

The National Carbon Company has had wide experience with high intensity. I am going to send this to you through them—a carbon copy I mean. I shall ask them to amend my advice if they think it needs it. I shall ask them to contradict it if they think it needs it, and I will hold this until I receive a copy of what they may say to you, and unless they object, I shall publish it together with this. Naturally I yield to them in such matters as this, and want to know what their engineers think of such a problem as you present. If I am wrong I want to know it.

De Luxe (????) Film

From Charles L. Epler, Jr., Projectionist Lyric Theatre, Hamburg, Pa., comes several samples of film splices and this letter.

Dear Mr. Richardson: This is my first letter to the department, though I wish to say it WILL NOT be my last. I am a regular and interested reader of it, but sometimes wonder if it is really worth while to study and try to improve when one gets such JUNK as inclosed samples indicate.

They were amputated from "Charles Hutchisons' "Poison," which it was my duty to—I don't know what to call it. Surely one cannot say "project." Perhaps working with such JUNK is where the "Moving Picture Operator" comes from. One may "operate the projector," and get some sort of a picture always provided the film manages to get through and the image don't jump clear off the screen.

This sample of "De Luxe?" reached us from the "De Luxe Film Company." Of course we small towners don't matter much to the big exchange. I will leave the matter of commenting upon this OUTRAGE in your capable hands.

All right, brother. I'll do my best to make good, though if I really spoke my mind, the Moving Picture World might catch fire in the mails, and the De Luxe Film Company would doubtless bring suit against me for arson, slander, bigamy, and telling-the-truth-when-the-truth-is-not-welcome.

The samples consist of, Item 1: one splice two-and-a-half holes wide, with holes on one side one thirty-second of an inch out of match. Splice only partly scraped and partly cemented. Quite stiff. Item 2: See item 1, only a bit wider. Otherwise exactly the same. Item 3: The same, only very stiff, badly buckled and both sides mis-matched. Item 4: Ditto item No. 3. Item 4: Three sprocket holes torn entirely out by the roots on one side, all sprocket holes in five inches of film badly checked, one sprocket hole, opposite the one gone on other side, gone, and three other badly dilapidated.

The last item is dangerous. The authorities ought to penalize any exchange by cancellation of its license for a week, or by a good stiff fine, which endangers audiences and property by sending a thing of that sort out. Suppose the projectionist had not, for any one of a dozen possible reasons, including non receipt of the films in time, have examined them before projection, and when the point where those missing holes was reached the film stopped over the aperture. The projectionist, we will assume, obeying orders from the management, or compelled by circumstances of his work, was away from the projector. The fire got into the magazine, and—well, you all know the possibilities in that particular situation.

I might also remark that, since the projectionist has the RIGHT to except the film to be in projectable condition, he might, with a perfectly clear conscience, project it without examination. Remember that THE THEATRE, BE IT LITTLE OR BIG TOWN, PAYS FOR A "SHOW," AND FILM IN NON PROJECTABLE CONDITION IS NOT A SHOW.

THE SMALL TOWN THEATRE HAS AN ABSOLUTE RIGHT TO EXPECT TO RECEIVE FILM IN GOOD MECHANICAL CONDITION. There may be sections of it missing. There may be rain, and it may be dirty, but no exchange has any right whatsoever to send out film, no matter how low the rental price, which contains stiff, wide splices, ripped sprocket holes or other mechanical imperfections which might be discovered by an inspection.

All honor to the exchange which respects their name, inspects and repairs film thoroughly and sends out shows in the condition they are presumed to be sent out. I will back them up in soaking theatres for every bit of damage done to film through carelessness on the part of the projectionist, or because of projectors in poor condition. They have the RIGHT to do that, and they certainly ought to do it too.

One Thing More

In your modern motion picture house every detail of projection, decoration, ventilation, temperature, seating, has been carefully worked out to make the theatre attractive and comfortable.

But there's one thing more you can do—and it's a real factor from the box office point of view: make sure the picture is printed on Eastman Positive Film, the film that safeguards for the screen the quality of the negative so your public may enjoy it.

Eastman film is identified in the margin by the black-lettered words "Eastman" and "Kodak"

Bluebook School—Answers 331 to 335

(Note: I don't know whether or not this set proved too strenuous, but only a comparative few have placed replies before me. I would call especial attention to the answer of Brother Budge to question 331. Budge MADE A SINCERE, HONEST EFFORT, and when he failed, with him failed some of the "big Broadway men." He is not at all ashamed to confess that this particular bit of information is above his head.

Well, gentlemen, it was "above my head" too, so Budge is in good (?) company. The (?) is inserted for the benefit of my amusing opposition—my enemies. By this I mean that I was not certain about it, the way Doe worded his question, so I wrote the induction motor department of the Ft. Wayne branch of the General Electric Company. I shall publish their reply.)

Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, B. C., sent replies to the last two sets of questions, but they came altogether too late for consideration.

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; W. C. Budge, Garden City, Long Island; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois and C. H. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa, (who says it is above his head at present), are the only ones who even made a stab at 331, which reads: "Practical Question submitted by G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois. If you have a 220 volt induction motor, is it possible to get satisfactory service from it by changing its connections, using 110 volt alternating current, either single phase, two-phase and three-phase.

(Note: Through error I wrote "Cycle" for "Phase," but the error was so very obvious that I think you all understood it was merely a blunder.)

Budge says:

Having made an honest effort to have this matter explained to me, I am forced to admit it's over my head. I was unable to find any one, even among the big Broadway theatre projectionists, who could or would give me an answer. Some of them said NO. It could not be done. You would have to place resistance in series with the field coils to equal the power desired.

Which "guess" does not speak so well for the electrical knowledge of the one or ones who made it. Using a 220 volt motor on 110 with resistance in series with the field coils. Well, anyhow that's some stunt all right.—Ed.)

Thoreau and Clark say:

If the word "phase" were used instead of "cycle" in the question I would answer thus: If the motor is single phase, and of the true induction squirrel cage type, it can be used on 110 volt single phase current. For 220 volts you have four wires, and the connections are in series. For 110 volt current the connections are in parallel.

An induction motor should be run as nearly as possible at its normal voltage, as the output and torque are in exact proportion to the square of the primary pressure. The trouble would be encountered if the motor were starting under heavy torque (Heavy load.—Ed.), as induction motors have the lowest torque at starting. It would be very slow in picking up at starting if the load were connected immediately, or until the induced currents in the armature were sufficient to carry the load.

Not a very complete answer but seems to be a very good stagger anyhow. The Ft. Wayne Engineering Department of the General Electric Company, by R. Fowler, says:

If I were doing it, I would rule out Mr. Doe's question entirely as not being practical as worded. "110 volts single, two or three cycle current" is not a practical electrical condition for any circuit, and I doubt if there is one in existence in the world.

I believe the question Mr. Doe intends to ask is "if you have a 220 volt induction motor, is it possible to get satisfactory service from it, by changing connection, on 110 volts, single, two or three phase current." The answer to this question would be split up somewhat as follows:

A 220 volt, 3 phase induction motor may often be reconnected to run satisfactory on 110 volts 3 phase circuit.

A 220 volt 2 phase induction motor may often be reconnected to run satisfactory on 110 volt 2 phase circuit.

A 220 volt 3 phase motor cannot ordinarily be reconnected to 110 volt 2 phase nor can a 220 volt 2 phase motor be reconnected to 110 volt 3 phase.

A 220 volt single phase motor ordinarily may not be reconnected into a 3 phase or 2 phase motor and run satisfactorily.

Probably in about half the cases a 220 volt single phase motor may be reconnected into a 110 volt single phase motor.

As you see, this question is rather complicated to answer. Many motors cannot be reconnected at all, and give satisfactory results, while many motors, especially in the larger sizes, are reconnectable only between 220 and 440 volts, and not reconnectable to 110 volts. The majority of our motors are probably of that type. There is no rule that can be given as to what motors can, and what motors cannot be reconnected, except to say that to reconnect from 220 to 110 volts the circuits in the motor must be split so as to be parallel and not in series.

Only an examination of the winding of the motor by an experienced winder can determine whether the circuits can be split, unless the design of the motor is known. If Mr. Doe could particularize more as to size and type of motor a much better answer could be given.

Doe says:

If I were within distance of you I'd throw a dornic at you and—run. Whatda y' mean by turning my "phases" into "cycles?" It doesn't look good, and is not being done in the best succles!

Answering my own question as best I may—I asked it because I have had an argument on this same question—I hold that it may be done in some cases, but would depend upon the motor itself. I believe that if a single phase 220 volt motor had its circuits reconnected so that hey would be in multiple, or "parrallel," instead of in series, as they are for 220, it would work all right, and efficiently, on single phase 110 volt supply, but even this might in some cases depend upon the characteristics of the individual motor, or the make of the motor, rather.

I do not believe it is possible to successfully change a 220 volt induction motor to operate on any phase current other than that it is designed to operate on.

Which, you will observe, is pretty close to correct, as per friend Fowler's statement.

Hanover says:

I am not very well acquainted with this proposition, nor have I been able to dig out the dope, though I have tried. I will say, however, that a single two or three phase 220-volt motor may be made to operate on 110 volt current of like phase, merely by paralleling the connections, which at 220-volts are in series, or at least so I understand.

Well, anyhow this is the first question asked that I did not feel competent to pass judgment on. My ideas were very nearly correct, but I was not sure about the phase end of it.

Question No. 332—Explain commutation. How is D. C. obtained from alternating current armature?

Thoreau and Clark answered as follows:

Direct current is obtained from an alternating current dynamo armature by means of what is known as a commutator. The commutator consists of copper bars so shaped and arranged that a cylinder is formed. Each commutator bar is insulated from the adjoining bars on either side, and from the armature shaft, by means of thin mica insulating material. The commutator as a whole is attached to the armature shaft, and rotates with it and the armature coils. The armature coils are so connected with the aforesaid commutator bars that the current received by the outside circuit through the collecting brushes is of constant direction—is direct current.

Put in another way, the commutator is for the purpose of changing the connection between the armature wires and the outside circuit at the proper instant of time and in such manner that the outside circuit will receive current flowing constantly in one direction.

Hanover says:

Commutation is the changing of the connection between the armature of the generator and the outside circuit by means of a "Commutator," which really is a form of automatic switch so arranged that it reverses the connections with the outside circuit wires at the same instant the current reverse in the armature. The commutator consists of copper bars, insulated from each other, attached to the armature shaft and revolving therewith. The ends of the armature coils are attached to these bars; also they are interconnected in such manner that the individual commutator bar comes under the positive brush at the instant of time when the current in its connecting coils is reversed.

To make a complete, thoroughly understandable explanation of commutation would take several illustrations, and a great deal of space. I think, Brother Richardson, you erred in asking this question in just this way, for that reason. It is a subject very diffiicult to explain or understand.

Which I agree with. If any one can give a really lucid, understandable explanation of commutation without illustrations and very extended explanations, I would like to see it. I agree with Hanover that the subject is too big for this school to handle, unless it be done piecemeal, which possibility I shall look into.

However, I will add this, by Henning:

Commutation is the transferring of the electrical energy from the armature of a dynamo to the external field through the brushes in the form of direct current, that is to say a current that flows in one direction only from one of the poles of dynamo (positive) through the external circuit and returns to the other pole (negative). In the commutator type machines there is a segment on the commutator for every coil in the armature winding, and the coils are in pairs, one opposite each other, to keep the current flow evenly balanced at all times. The inter-connection between the coils of the armature are made through the segments of the commutator.

Question No. 333—Are all dynamo armature coils interconnected?

Henning says:

All armature coils are interconnected. It is only by this means that an armature can be balanced and can carry a sufficient number of coils to produce the current necessary for practical work.

Thoreau and Clark say:

All armature coils are inter-connected, except in the wave winding, and they really are too, because the brush covers two bars, and in so doing forms what really is an interconnection. In the old days there were generators which had armature coils which were not inter-connected, but they had to use an air blast to blow out the sparks at the brushes.

A Sound Investment that pays a two-way profit

That is how one theatre owner expressed his opinion six months after he had installed a new Simplex Projector.

As this exhibitor pointed out, the manner in which pictures are presented on the screen is a feature of every program. Week in and week out it is an ever-present factor that is working for or against the success of the theatre.

Successful exhibitors know that projection is of foremost importance because it affects the whole quality of the theatre's entertainment. While good projection will effectively overcome many possible shortages of quality in pictures, poor projection will just as surely ruin the very best of pictures.

There is no greater guarantee of perfect projection than to have a Simplex Projector.

The Simplex Projector

The Simplex Projector is built according to the designs and specifications of engineers whose many years of experience have given them a thorough knowledge of projection requirements.

The selection of material, the making of each part, and the construction of the whole machine is attended by the most diligent care and precise workmanship.

The good will the Simplex has created in all parts of the world is evidence of its consistently good performance and is tangible proof of the sincerity of our efforts to produce only the best.

A Profitable Investment

To buy a Simplex Projector is to make a sound investment that will pay you a double profit.

By providing perfect projection it will attract more patronage to your theatre. Many exhibitors have in one year paid the entire cost of a new machine out of the increased earnings of their theatres. Buying a Simplex is simply reinvesting part of your earnings back into your business in order to draw a bigger dividend from your whole business investment.

Not only will a Simplex increase your earnings, but it will cut down your operating expenses. A poorly designed or worn-out projector is continually in need of repairs. The total annual repair bills for machine, films, etc., would go a long way toward the cost of a new machine. Saving your money on repairs is another way a Simplex will add to your profits.

THE BEST TIME TO BUY A SIMPLEX

Now is the time to equip your theatre with perfect projection. The fall season is near at hand. Get your theatre established early as a source of quality entertainment. You will find that patronage will continue to grow as the season progresses.

There is a Simplex Service Man in your district who will gladly discuss your requirements with you. Or mail the attached coupon and full description, prices, terms, etc., will be sent you without obligation.

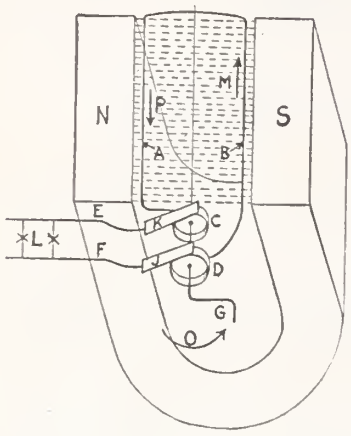
Question No. 334—Describe an ordinary elementary generator, such as is shown in accompanying drawing.



Doe says:

Presumably what you meant to ask was for a description of the action of such a generator. If merely the description of its mechanics and parts is what is wanted, then A B represents a single armature coil, N and S the north and south poles, respectively, of the field magnet, with magnetic lines of force between the poles represented by the dotted lines. C D are collector rings, E F the brushes, E F the external circuit and L the lamps thereon.

The action is as follows: The current will always flow in the direction indicated by arrows P M. When the armature coil represented by A B is in the position shown and is rotated in the direction shown, it is readily understood that the wire composing same will cut a maximum number of lines of magnetic force, but that as the sides of the coil advance the wires will more and more nearly travel in the same direction as the lines of force, hence it follows that less lines will be cut, and that both the E. M. F. generated and the current flow will become less, until the sides of the coil are standing vertical, when they will cut no lines of force at all, hence no current or E M F will be generated. But the current will, as I have said, flow continuously in the direction indicated by arrows P M, hence when coil side A is directly over coil side B, and starts to descend on the other side, it is seen that, while the direction of current movement with relation to the pole pieces is not altered, its direction in the armature coil is nevertheless reversed, and since there is no commutator, but merely collector rings, it follows that the current in the entire external circuit will also be reversed. Of course when coil side A has passed over the top and started down, it will cut an increasing number of lines of force, as it progresses and the E M F and current will be increased until it has reached the position now occupied by coil side B, when both E M F and current flow will have reached maximum, and will then again start or recede, which cycle of operations will continue as long as the armature wire A B is rotated in the magnetic field as indicated. I have spoken only of wire A as generating E M F. This was to avoid confusion. Both wires A and B act precisely the same.

An excellent description, friend Doe. You are offering proof that Chicago and Local 110 has some men who are very well posted on the technical side of motion picture projection, which I of course very well knew all along.

Question No. 335—Upon what will the voltage of the generator illustrated depend?

Thoreau and Clark say:

The voltage will depend upon the rate at which the lines of force are cut by armature wires A B and the strength of the magnet. which is correct, but not well worded. Henning puts it in better form by saying: "The voltage generated by this elementary dynamo will depend upon the density of the magnetic field and the speed with which the armature wire travels within the magnetic field."

That last is correct, but don't quite tell the entire story.

Doe says:

The voltage will depend upon (A) The density of the magnetic field, (B) The area of the magnetic field, (C) The diameter and length of the "armature" and (D) the speed of rotation.

Hanover covers the whole question thus:

The voltage will depend upon the number of lines of magnetic force cut per second by armature wires A B.

New Principles Used in Foreign Invention for Talking Pictures

THE production of "talking motion pictures" has long been the goal of a number of inventors and there are already machines on the market which produce this result. The newest device along this line is the result of seven years' work on the part of J. Masselle, H. Vogt and Dr. J. Angl, who have formed the Tri-Ergon Company, Ltd., of Zurich, Switzerland, and is known as the accoustic triergon film.

It is announced that the distinguishing point of this system is that it does away with the use of a graphaphone or similar device. Overcoming tremendous technical difficulties, a system was finally evolved by which sound waves are transformed into electrical impulses and then into light waves and photographed on the same film with the picture. In reproducing on the screen an analogous proceeding is carried out in the reverse direction.

None of the existing electrical apparatus was sufficient to produce the desired result. First, a microphone called the Kathodophone was designed, employing neither membranes, carbon granules or mechanically moved parts but using an entirely new principle by which the sound exercises a direct influence on the electric current, being conveyed by an iron path which is switched into the electric circuit.

The next task was to create an electrical amplifier of the same quality capable of amplifying equably sound frequencies a hundred thousand fold, with the 5,000 to 20,000 frequencies a second needed by the human ear.

The third stage was the production of the so-called ultra-frequency lamp, a recording lamp sensitive to sound, which transforms the vibrating electric current in the sound-waves into a trembling luminous patch which illuminates the film.

Cut shows the tri-ergon apparatus attached to an ordinary projection machine which runs both the talking and ordinary film. Another invention, the hornless loud speaker, the Statophone, is placed near or behind the screen.

It is announced that, using a complete program exceeding six thousand feet, this apparatus was demonstrated with complete success for a number of days in twelve motion picture theatres in Cologne, Duisberg, Dusseldorf and other German towns, and that demonstrations will be made in this country in the early autumn.

Big Picture Theatre To Be Built in Winona

Work has been started on the erection of a $100,000 theatre in Winona, Minn. The house will seat 1,375 and is expected to be open about November 1.

The structure is being built by Beyerstedt Brothers & Hodge Company, Inc., a corporation of which Harry Beyerstedt is president, Bert Beyerstedt vice-president and J. R. Hodge, treasurer.

The theatre will be 60 feet wide and 140 feet long, a large stage fully equipped with all appurtenances of lighting, scenery, dressing rooms, etc. to accommodate road shows and vaudeville. The house will be devoted to picture attractions, however.

MOVING PICTURE PROJECTIONIST now working desires change. Prefer position in New York or Jersey. Ten years' experience. A-1 references. Can operate any equipment. Edward Wright, 311 16th Ave., Astoria, L. I. Phone, Astoria 8752.

ERIE, PA., HOUSE RE-BUILT

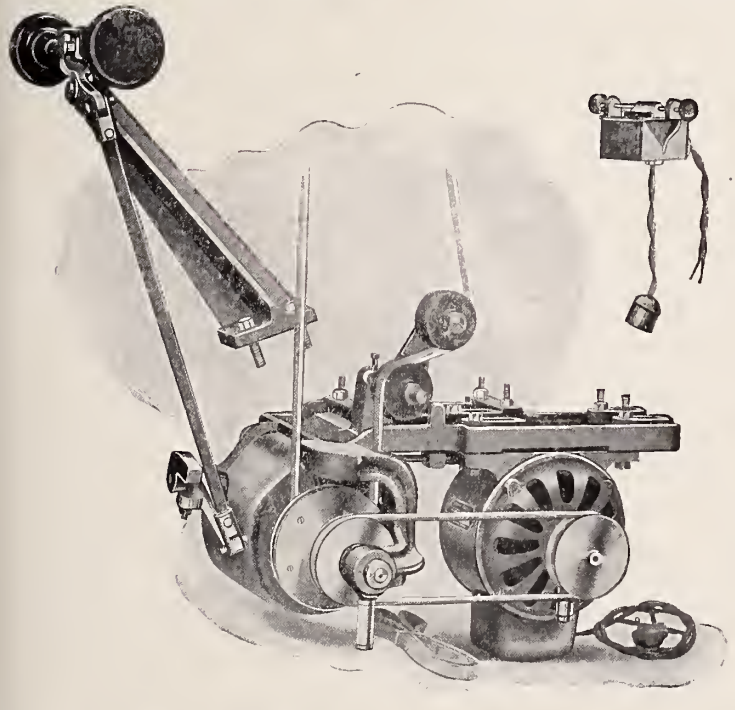
Practically rebuilt, with the exception of its four outside walls, the Columbia Theatre, Erie, expects to re-open its doors early in September, for the first time since fire destroyed the interior of the theatre and its equipment on April 18. The theatre is owned of the Columbia Amusement Company, and the cost of reconstruction will probably exceed $100,000.

Two sources of music will be available for the entertainment of the patrons. One of these will be an electrically operated organ, hand played, however. This organ, when ready for use, will represent an investment of between $27,000 and $28,000. The original Columbia Theatre orchestra will also play daily.

Perfect Control and Exact Regulation Are Secured Through the Use of

POWER'S

GOVERNOR TYPE MECHANICAL SPEED CONTROL AND POWER'S SPEED INDICATORS



By setting the lever of Power's Governor Type Mechanical Speed Control and then simply throwing in the motor switch, the projector will at once reach the exact speed for which the control is adjusted.

All moving parts revolve upon one common shaft which in turn is free to rotate in its bearings so that the least possible amount of friction is present in any part of the apparatus. Another important feature of this control will prove of great value to communities troubled with fluctuating voltage as a drop of line voltage will not affect the speed of the mechanism even though the motor should slow down considerably.

Thousands in Use Without a Complaint or Criticism

If Power's Speed Indicator is used in connection with the Power's Governor Type Mechanical Speed Control, all difficulty regarding the proper timing of the picture is eliminated.

By referring to the dial of the Indicator and making the necessary adjustment to the regulator of the control, the picture may be projected at so many feet per minute or take a given number of minutes per thousand feet.

Indicators may be placed at any number of points desired, and the musical director and projectionist will have no trouble in closely following the program and time schedule.

HOW TO REACH "The COAST OF FOLLY"
Turn left at Lovers' Lane and leave the straight and narrow path. Speed up into Romance via Wealth and Luxury. After passing through Romance, try not to cross the boundaries of Scandal. For once in Scandal, it is very difficult to get out again. Take smooth boulevard to the right for Temptation. Midway between Romance and Temptation you will reach The Coast of Folly. Stop and enjoy the time of your life.

THAT ROYLE GIRL Says

"A girl can be annoyed by men or not—just as she pleases."

"I'm just a lot of goods which is trying to get together. You've got to give me a chance."

"I hate a man who thinks the country is going to the dogs because it's running out of ready-mades like himself."

"When a man comes from God knows where and has got his name in electric lights at twenty-four—I'm for him."

"Sure I like him He had his pick of a flock of chickens—but he had to have me."

"You'll have Joan Daisy Royle against you in this trial, Mr. District Attorney. And that's something for which Harvard Law School gives you no preparation a-tall."

"That's what trouble's for—to make real men and women out of us."

"How can I, with a home like mine, dream lovely things about anybody or get an ambition for something big? Well—I'll show you!"

HIGHLY EXCELLENT. TELLS A POIGnantly engrossing tale. There isn't a doubt that in it Alice Joyce and Clive Brook reveal characterizations which are the best they have ever done. Billy Kent Schaeffer does one of the best things this reviewer has ever seen—and how he can act!

—Geo. Gerhard, N. Y. Eve. World

A SUCCESS. UNIVERSAL COMPANY scores with best domestic drama ever produced.

Another success is registered this week at the Colony.

Baggot's direction is an achievement.

The cast is without a flaw! Clive Brook offers as touching and sincere a portrait as the screen has seen. Miss Joyce makes of the wife a wholly convincing figure! This Billy Kent Schaeffer is an amazing youngster.

Canfield's MAKER and CLIVE BROOK

Presented by CARL LAEMMLE

"THE HOME MAKER" IS A STUDY IN realism not often seen on the screen. It is a picture for those who like something beyond the usual movie hokum. Clive Brook does much to make Knapp's character stand out. Alice Joyce, it seems to me, cannot be improved upon. Billy Kent Schaeffer reaches a state of perfection not always found in a juvenile performance. Universal might have moralized the "papa loves mama" element and made it ridiculous, but thanks to the direction of King Baggot, there is no such catastrophe.

EXCELLENT PICTURE! A WISTFUL, human fragment from life!

—N. Y. Daily Mirror

CLIVE BROOK DOES HANDSOMELY. George Fawcett does his share of the good work.

—N. Y. Times

REGISTERS HIT! CAREFULLY DIRECTed! Efficiently acted! Baggot has created a real living family on the screen. Billy Kent Schaeffer gives every appearance of being the most talented child actor to appear on the screen since Jackie Coogan.

Christie Comedies

The name Christie Comedy is a never-failing guarantee of real comedy—of a picture sparkling with the pep of youth, a production of true feature quality, full of funny gags and hilarious laughs, but all built around a fine story that leaves your patrons something to laugh about for days.

Popular favorites and bright new personalities in the casts—Billy Dooley, Neal Burns, Vera Steadman, Natalie Joyce, Jack Duffy, William Irving, Jean Lorraine and many others in a company of Youth, Brains, and Beauty.

The new series begins with

"Soup to Nuts"

with

Dear Mr. Abrams,

I am happy to advise you that Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush" has just finished the greatest week ever played in any theatre in the world insofar as gross receipts and attendance are concerned. The week's gross was $72,577.15. I am sure this establishes a record for the world. Our second Sunday receipts were as big as on the first Sunday. You must remember this business was done in very,very hot weather,which makes it all the more remarkable;also when you consider that we have no ice plant. With kindest regards,

The
WORLD

Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

WHAT is the Play Date Bureau? What isn't the Play Date Bureau? Who, which, what, when? The air has been full of questions, but clear of definite, concrete information.

Moving Picture World answers the questions in a story appearing on another page of this issue. The story deserves particular mention here because no one discussing current motion picture problems should attempt to do so without a knowledge of the facts contained in this exclusive article.

Because so many questions could be asked, and so few answered, many in the industry have come to the opinion that the Play Date Bureau was a high sounding phrase and little more. We feel a bit differently about it after reading Sydney Cohen's frank and full statement of the Bureau's organization, intentions, and actions. We are additionally impressed by his air of faith and confidence in the existence of the Play Date Bureau as a permanent institution—and not merely a 1925 idea to pass into the discard with the turning of the calendar.

No matter what your side of the industry's politics, no matter what your personal prejudices, be sure to read this informative discussion of the Play Date Bureau.

THE Connecticut situation is not encouraging. Principally because no student of Sanskrit has yet come forth with an interpretation of the law that really interprets. Secondly because ill-advised statements have given the reel tax publicity that is certain to encourage similar tendencies in many other States of the Union.

Connecticut, as we see it, is an opportunity for less talk, more deliberate thought, and a ceasing of windmill action.

There is little hope of successful moves towards upsetting the tax law in the courts. The truth may as well be admitted, even if it hurts. Censorship has been fought clear up to the Supreme Court and sustained. Similar taxes have been levied on other industries—gasoline is a particular example—and sustained.

So the situation comes around to one that must be decided by the people of Connecticut for and by themselves. They are going to pay the bill. If they are willing to pay it, the law stands. If they are unwilling, it falls.

Public opinion can unmake a law that a Supreme Court would sustain. Let the industry present its case to the people of Connecticut in the open—and rest its case on their decision. And the industry will get a lot further than wire pulling and hectic whispering can ever get it.

WE haven't said anything editorially about the candidacy of our own "Jimmie" Walker for Democratic nomination for Mayor of New York—chiefly because we realize that nominations are decided by enrolled voters and not by good wishes.

But while elections are won in the polling booths—band wagons serve their purpose. And there is danger that the band wagon may be going too fast for us to climb aboard if we don't do it soon. So a few words must be said for the record.

The picture industry knows Jimmie Walker, knows him as a man, as a friend, and as an executive of unusual ability. And the picture industry can do no less than to tell anyone anywhere that if they knew Jimmie Walker as we know him his election would be by unanimous vote.

We could use two thousand words and say no more. It is one of those difficult things to write about. It is the job of painting the lily. To us of the picture industry Jimmie Walker is so obvious, right and true that words seem unnecessary to emphasize the fact.

Cohen Bares Facts About Playdate Bureau

By Tom Waller

WHYS and wherefores have been for the past few months and still are the arrows being shot from many intelligent quarters in this industry at a target called the Playdate Bureau. How did it come into existence? Was it a political move of the leaders of the M. P. T. O. A.? What has it accomplished, if anything? What is it doing now? Is it still functioning? Is it a part of the M. P. T. O. A.? Who is its head, if any? Who manages it? Where does it get its money? How does it spend the money? What is it all about? These are only a few of the questions that have been asked the writer both in the mail, on the street and at lunch.

With the desire to enlighten the many interrogators and those in the industry who may not be familiar with the details concerning what is acknowledged to be the most important achievement of America's exhibitors at their last national convention, Moving Picture World collected the arrows in a sheaf and fired them consecutively at the man who was for four years their commander-in-chief and is now chairman of the national directorate.

Bureau Independent Unit

First of all, the Playdate Bureau is an integral and most important subdivision of the Board of Trade and Commerce. The Board is not, contrary to many opinions, a direct part of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. It is an individual unit, unincorporated, governed jointly by a committe of independent producers and distributors and a committe of M. P. T. O. A. directors.

No money in the Board, or its unit, the Playdate Bureau, can be expended without the authorization of a representative of the independent producers. The Board has its own bank account totaling today about $42,000 in round numbers. Its highest savings reached $48,000, the sum of $6,000 having been spent since its organization in Milwaukee.

The budget for the Board of Trade and Commerce was originally fixed at $350,000, such amount having been the summary of pledges made at the time, as will be explained later in this story.

Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, a national director of the M. P. T. O. A., and Louis Sagal, treasurer of the M. P. T. O. A., are chairman and treasurer, respectively, of the Board of Trade and Commerce.

The motive of the Playdate Bureau has been to get independents acquainted with Independents and to keep independence for independents. This is another subject on which every detail has been secured later in this story.

The above constitute a scant resume of Sydney Cohen's replies to some of the leading questions, all of which he gave answers to Moving Picture World.

Cohen is so confident that the Board of Trade and Commerce will stand out as the stellar accomplishment of American exhibitor organization history before the close of November that he says the budget of the Board for 1926 will be no less than $500,000. The maturity it has acquired in 1925 will then make possible some of the things that through youth and lack of confidence were not realized this year. The high powered "field marshal" will come into being and with him under the Board of Trade and Commerce banner will also come thirty deputies and forty assistants who will be stationed at every exchange center in the United States. The Board will also employ eminent counsel to represent Independent producer, distributor and exhibitor. He will watch all activities, particularly those at Washington, D. C.

"Independents Win Fight!"

Why is Cohen so confident that the Board will achieve all of these things, particularly the $500,000 budget in 1926, when only $48,000 of the approximate $350,000 pledged in 1925 has yet made its appearance in cold cash?

"Because our fight for Independence, waged through the Playdate Bureau, has just been won!" Cohen declares.

This is the first time that actual claim of victory in the battle for independence has been made.

The Playdate Bureau in its weekly message circulated among the 15,000 American exhibitors had for its underlying theme "Hold Your Playdates." Through this medium it became so poularized that "Hold Your Playdates" during July was the subject and motto of practically every exhibitor gathering. But in its issue of August 1 the headline on the Playdate booklet changed to "Use Your Playdates." The result already, Cohen says, causes him to announce victory for the Independents.

As a single instance of what "Use Your Playdates" has done for the cause, Cohen states, Harry Thomas, one of the directors of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, announces that Merit Pictures Corporation, of which he is the vice-president, and I. E. Chadwick, president of the independent association, is the head, has in the last three weeks done more business than in any four months in the history of its existence.

1,500 Fill Pledge Cards

Another outstanding point upon which Cohen lays claim for the independent coupe this year is the fact, made known for the first time, that of the 15,000 pledge cards sent out by the Playdate Bureau exactly 1,500 were filled 100 per cent. for independent product. Thousands of letters from exhibitors who received the remaining 13,500 cards explained that many of the writers were wholly in support of the movement, but that they wanted to select their own films, believing, Cohen says, that if they signed the pledges they would subject themselves to independent producers designating the programs of their theatres.

Credits Independent Victory to Bureau

Cohen says that he, personally, is giving the independents $100,000 in booking in his five theatres in New York.

In order to understand the workings, motives and accomplishments of the Board of Trade and Commerce and its better known child, the Playdate Bureau, the writer has to go back to a period very early last spring and antedating even the inception of the Board.

Playdate Bureau's Inception

"Early selling and publicity campaigns on the part of some of the bigger producers, with the additional stimulant of threatening to build theatres next to them or withhold product unless they booked immediately, had resulted in the independent picture being regarded just as a 'filler-in' and thousands of independent exhibitors being signed up for the bigger producer blocks year in and year out. The result was that most of these independent theatre owners were all booked, and many overbooked by June of each year. This action, induced also by a shortage of worthy product propaganda, terminated in independent producers sustaining losses on meritorious product which was gradually nearing the death-dealing stage."

This is Sydney Cohen's reason for being inspired, through the desperation of his cause, to determine this year the actual number of features scheduled for the 1925-26 market. He did this by submitting a questionnaire to every known producer in the industry. The returns compiled from the answers indicated there are over 1,000 features for 1925-26.

"Big Boys" at First Conclave

To impress upon the exhibitor the enormity of such a market and the importance of independents supporting independents that independence might survive, the directorate of the M. P. T. O. A. conferred on April 8 with producers who then expressed interest in the situation and evinced a desire to co-operate in this movement. The producers present at this first conference included W. R Sheehan, vice-president and general manager of Fox; H M. Warner and Sam Morris, president and general manager, respectively, of Warner Brothers; the late Harry Berman, vice-president of Film Booking Offices; Alfred E. Smith and John B. Rock, president and vice-president, respectively, of the old Vitagraph company; R. H. Cochrane and E. H. Goldstein, vice-president and treasurer, respectively, of Universal.

Cohen, who now makes known the attendance of the above producers and executives for the first time, says that it was the concurrence of opinions rendered at that conference that immediate action must be taken. The Board of Trade and Commerce, to minister to the needs of this emergency and to serve primarily as an advisory agent to the independent exhibitor in acquainting him with the fact that independent product was not a mere "filler" and that the market for 1925-26 was crowded with plenty of good material, then realized its inception.

Cohen says that at this April 8 meeting the producers and their executives present heartily endorsed and offered their financial and moral support toward the establishment of such a Board. A committe of three, comprising Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, L. M. Sagal of New Haven and Sydney S. Cohen of New York was then appointed to make definite arrangements with these companies to bring this about.

On April 20 a conference was held with John C. Flinn of Producers Distributing Corporation, Cohen states, at which he was advised of the conferences with the other film companies and the plans and purposes of the Board of Trade and Commerce. This resulted in another get-together on April 22 with Carl Laemmle, R. H. Cochrane of Universal, Abe Warner, Sheehan and Flinn when, Cohen asserts, an agreement was reached by all of these companies for the support of the Board.

Called It "Unstrategic"

These companies then agreed, Cohen maintains, to underwrite $150,000 as the initial payment for the support of the Board, with the understanding that additional moneys would be forthcoming to include the promotion of the work of the Board in all of its phases.

On April 23 one of these companies notified the M. P. T. O. A. committee that it considered it "unstrategic" for that company to go ahead with the plan agreed upon. Two of the other companies then said, according to Cohen, that unless the producer sentiment was unanimous they would also have to withdraw. However, Carl Laemmle felt differently, as was evidenced by his whole-hearted support of the Board subsequently at the Milwaukee convention.

Prior to the Milwaukee convention, the M. P. T. O. A committee met with independent producers and distributors at the Hotel Astor, New York. There, Cohen says, the national organization was urged to foster the Board. These independents were so enthusiastic that they arranged to have their association convene at Milwaukee at the same time the exhibitors were in session, Cohen states. Referring to the early New York meeting and the shaping of the Board of Trade and Commerce for later official endorsement at Milwaukee, Cohen says:

Unanimously Endorsed at Milwaukee

"At this meeting the plans that had been formulated of co-operation with the Board of Trade and Commerce were approved and ratified and a committee of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors was designated.

"At Milwaukee I. E. Chadwick, W. E. Shallenberger, A. Carlos, M. H. Hoffman, Jack Cohn and Dr. Golden met with a committee of the M. P. T. O. A., including Harry Davis, L. M. Sagal, A. Julian Brylawski, Sydney S. Cohen, Nathan Yamins and Dave Bershon. Subsequently there were added to the latter committes J. C. Ritter and W. A. Steffes.

"After several meetings it was agreed that financial support of a very substantial nature would be given this Board of Trade and Commerce for the purpose of having paid representatives in each film center throughout the United States and Canada to be the point of contact in the field between the theatre owners and the independent producers and distributors. The committee met with other producers and distributors, including Mr. Laemmle, Mr. Cochrane, of Universal and Mr. Joseph Schnitzer of Film Booking offices, who agreed to co-operate also and render their financial support in our plans."

At the Milwaukee convention the Board of Trade and Commerce was recommended to the delegates. They endorsed it after it had received the unanimous endorsement of the national directorate.

Pledges Totaled $350,000

The independent producers and distributors, according to Cohen, pledged for the support of the Board the immediate payment of $25,000 cash, $25,000 at a later date and $150,000 during the remainder of the year. These moneys, Cohen says, the independent men planned to raise from a percentage assessed against the gross business of their members.

Of the $200,000 first pledged by the independents, $25,000 has been paid to date.

Film Booking Offices is credited by Cohen with having first pledged $25,000 and later cutting it down to $15,000, to be made in five $3,000 payments. So far $3,000 cash has been received by the Board from F. B. O., Cohen states.

Universal pledged $50,000, to be made in five monthly payments. Universal has lived up to its agrement and has delivered to the Board $20,000 cash up to date, Cohen states.

Fear of reprisals from large producer-distributor-exhibitor companies is the reason Cohen offers for some of the other companies first mentioned as interested failing to support the Board of Trade and Commerce.

Separate Bank Account

All of the moneys obtained were then put into a separate account, apart from that of the M. P. T. O. A. This was done, Cohen explains, because the Board is a separate unit comprised and governed jointly by a committee of independent producers and distributors and one of national exhibitors. Before any bills incurred by the Board could be paid they had to be okayed by A. Carlos of the independent committee. This action in itself makes the Board apart from the M. P. T. O. A. Up to the present time the Board has expended about $6,000 of its $48,000 cash account mainly for the printing of the Board's messages, communications to exhibitors and the publishing and mailing of the pledge cards.

These pledge cards were also endorsed at Milwaukee as an important function of the Board, Cohen says. The subject was explained to the conventionees at the time by H. M. Richey of Michigan.

In his own words Cohen briefly summarizes the Play Date Bureau, its motives and functions as follows:

Bureau Is Intelligence Station

"The Play Date Bureau is an intelligence or publicity station. It helped Independent producers and distributors to help themselves; it has made the first move. Independent producers and distributors are carrying on and must continue to carry on. The Play Date Bureau has and will continue to strive to restrain the mad stampeding of previous years. It will help to have play dates laid open. That makes the Independent distributor's golden opportunity, and he is a poor business man indeed if he doesn't grasp it firmly with both hands. The Play Date Bureau afforded him the opportunity of placing his product advantageously in the theatre owner's play time which it, the Play Date Bureau, helped keep open.

Medium for Greater Cooperation

"But the Play Date Bureau is not his salesman to sell his product for him; nor his booker to put his product in on these open dates. If these open dates are worth securing by the Independent distributor—and God knows they are—they are worth going out after aggressively.

"The Play Date Bureau has brought about greater cooperation between all Independent units that has heretofore existed. It has acquainted each with the others trials and tribulations and shown that without the other, neither can exist. They must continue to stand together aiding each other.

Purely a Protective Measure

"The Play Date Bureau had its inception a purely protective measure. A measure tinged with no more selfish motive than the common interests of all Independents.

"The Play Date Bureau has as its purposes the inflexible intent to instill confidence into Independents; confidence to go ahead without let or hindrace to make the best pictures they know how—confidence that having the product available, ample play dates will be forthcoming—confidence that the theatre owner may look to the entire market for product of worthwhile quality, instead of to some two or three concerns, and also with him.

"Theatre Owners have kept faith! The year 1925-1926 will bring to the Independent producer and distributor the greatest volume of business he has ever had. Evidence of this has already been given to us by these producers and distributors. The jury is still out for its final verdict. We are living too close to the situation to fully appreciate its beneficial results not only for the Independent producers and distributors but for the Independent theatre owner. Ninety-five per cent. of the box office attractions of this year will be found to come from independent producing forces. Producers must continue to provide quality product at fair prices, sold under a fair and equitable contract with business service by way of joining with the theatre owner in intelligently exploiting the product to the public.

"We Independents—producer, distributors and theatre owners—are engaged in a mutual quest; we are climbing the heights towards business freedom. These heights cannot be scaled in a day nor a week nor a year. It is true we have made flattering progress, but we are still toiling upward; not yet is it our lot to pause and rest and say, 'well, that's that.' We must rather put new effort into our climb and concerted effort. The Play Date Bureau, as has been pointed out, has this modest record of achievement. It has helped keep more play dates open for diversified bookings than ever before in the history of the industry. By its honest, fearless and sincere propaganda it has created an interest in the principles of Independence and Independent pictures that has never before existed. This interest has enabled Independent producers to go ahead with a confidence that they have never known hereto to make 'bigger and better' pictures. Through the medium of its questionnaire, it has charted the scope of the film market in a definite and comprehensive manner. Through its pledge cards it has created a desire—yes, almost a sense of duty or obligation—to book Independent films on the part of men who for years have looked upon Independents as taboo. These are concrete and definite accomplishments, but they are only beginnings; for them to be carried through to sucessful fulfillment requires that all shoulders be put to the wheel. No one man, no matter how willing he is, can 'fight the world' successfully. And no one, two or few of us can properly do the work that requires the genuine co-operation of producer."

Coming and Going

George Fischer, of the Milwaukee Theatre, has just returned to Milwaukee following a two weeks' motor tour through Canada and Michigan.

I. Frankel, executive head of the chain of picture houses which bears his name, has returned to his home in Cincinnati from Miami, Fla., where he has been looking after his extensive holdings.

Nat G. Rothstein, director of publicity, advertising and exploitation at Film Booking Offices, returned to his desk on Monday, August 31, from a four weeks' vacation in the Maine woods.

Homer Curran, owner of the Curran Theatre, San Francisco, has returned from an extended trip to Europe.

Henry Bredhoff, of the Hawaii Film Supply Company, in Honolulu, has arranged to sail from San Francisco for his island home early in September, following a stay of several weeks on the mainland.

F. C. Munroe and John C. Flinn of Producers Distributing Corporation have arrived from the Coast.

Joe Plunkett of the Strand is on the way to Havana where he will spend a ten-day vacation.

William M. Vogel has returned from a business trip abroad.

Ernest Mattsson has returned from a six weeks' trip to Scandinavia.

Charles Wilcox, of Herbert Wilcox Productions, arrived this week from Europe.

Michael Arlen is another returned traveler abroad. He is due in Hollywood on October 15.

Sigrid Holmquist returned this week from Europe.

JOE WEIL PROMOTED

Joe Weil has been appointed exploitation director of Universal Pictures Corporation. During the last five months he has been acting in that capacity and his work has proven so satisfactory that the promotion followed.

FRANK LEON SMITH

The Patheserial production manager is now supervising the making of "The Green Archer," which he adapted from Edgar Wallace's novel of the same name.

Alhambra Re-Opening Stirs Competition in Milwaukee

Remodeled and renovated while it was closed for two weeks, the Alhambra Theatre, downtown Milwaukee showhouse recently acquired by Carl Laemmle, was reopened on the night of August 28 with a new policy, new manager and a lineup of pictures that indicates the house will once more be considered one of the leading theatres in the city.

The opening program, featuring Charlie Chaplin in "The Gold Rush," supplemented by Bobby McLean, champion ice skater, and a number of other stage numbers, was devoted to charity, half of the proceeds going to a fund for the poor.

Probably the most important change in the house during the two weeks it was dark was in the lighting system. The house now boasts the largest upright in the city, each letter in the name of the theatre being six feet high. The entire lighting scheme in the interior also was changed.

Howard Waugh is the new manager. He hails from Atlanta and Memphis where he was manager of Paramount houses. O. J. Wooden, manager of the house for the Uihlein interests before it was leased to Laemmle, is now directing the affairs of Uihlein's Garden theater.

A formidable array of pictures has been lined up for the house. Seven of the pictures, it is understood, will be United Artists productions. Despite the fact that it is a Universal house, only twenty of the best Universal pictures will be used. The remainder of the programs, it is understood, will be the pick of the Fox productions.

With the reopening of the Alhambra under the new policy, competition among Milwaukee's first run houses is certain to be keener than ever. Thomas Saxe, head of the Saxe chain, in anticipation of the Alhambra's reopening has switched the policy of the Merrill from cheap pictures at cut prices to some of the biggest productions available and has boosted the admission price to fifty cents. The change in policy is doing wonders and for the first time since the showhouse was opened several years ago it is consistently drawing packed houses.

Young False Alarmists Get 60 Days in Detroit

A panic that might have caused tremendous loss of life in the Broadway Strand theatre, Detroit, was narrowly averted one evening last week when the crowded auditorium was startled by the shrill cries of "fire" coming from three boys who fled down the balcony stairways and half way down the main aisles. The young culprits were chased several blocks through the downtown section by the doorman and turned over to the police, while Margaret Smith, head usher of the theatre quieted the crowds by running down the aisles and assuring people that the cry was false.

The boys were taken to court and Judge Thomas Cotter, after giving them a stern lecture, sentenced them to 60 days each in the Detroit House of Correction.

Several neighborhood theatre managers have complained that they have been forced to guard their theatres against such outbreaks on the part of hoodlums and Judge Cotter's drastic action will, it is believed put an effectual damper on the practice in the future.

F. & R. Get 9 More

Nine southern Minnesota houses were placed on the roster of Finkelstein and Ruben theatres last week when the Twin City firm purchased 50 per cent. interest in houses at Owatonna, Rochester and Winona. Theatres included in the deal were Lawler, Empress and Metropolitan, Rochester, Metropolitan and Garden at Owattona and Colonial, Opera House and West End at Winona.

Big Improvements Completed at F. B. O. Plant

Indicating again the increasing volume of independent production in Los Angeles, the completion was announced yesterday of improvements at the F. B. O. Studios aggregating in cost upwards of $100,000.

Improvements at F. B. O. embrace expansion of construction in all departments of production, according to J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O. in charge of production, now at the Coast studios of the company. Three new projection rooms have been built at the west end of Stage 1, while Stages 1 and 2 have been joined into one mammoth stage.

Twenty new offices have been erected for occupancy of outside concerns.

PROJECTIONISTS' STRIKE IMPENDS

It looks as if there will be a strike of union musicians, projection machine operators and stagehands in Denver, Col., on September 1. As reported a week ago, the union employes insist on a 30 per cent increase in wages and a six day a week working schedule instead of seven days which they had been operating under. The theatre managers contend this is equivalent to a 50 per cent increase in wages and firmly refuse to agree to any such clause being inserted in the new contract which is supposed to become effective September 1. Union employes announce their intention to strike, and theatre managers are prepared for any vacancies occasioned by a walk-out.

Connecticut Ends Hectic Week With No Apparent Solution of Tax Mess

Exchanges Evacuating Stumps Commissioner on Collecting Tax, Manhattan Hears— Report Agreement May Be Reached to Stamp Film Outside State—Owners Have $61,500 Borrowed Fund Ready

By Tom Waller

THE past week has been a hectic one so far as Connecticut and its tax burden have been concerned. A lot of statements have been and still are being issued. There is one interpretation of the law today and another tomorrow so that in the final analysis it does not seem that attorneys, exhibitors, producers, distributors or legislators know at the present writing how it is all going to wind up.

Legislators, New York hears, charge the Hays decree for abdication to be nothing more than a smoke screen. Reliable sources in Manhattan, however, contend that never was an order issued with greater sincerity and appreciation of a grave situation. On the other hand some of those sources in New York are inclined to use the same descriptive phrase regarding reports emanating from New Haven that certain Connecticut politicians resent the industry's stand and may show that resentment by wreaking greater hardships upon the industry by pushing through a measure even more drastic than the one causing the present fuss.

"Split" Talk Groundless

Dispatches from New Haven say: "New Haven Film Tax Splits Movie Industry." That distributors have notified exhibitors they must pay the impost. Then also a statement is credited to Joseph Walsh, head of the Connecticut M. P. T. O., as follows:

"We are entirely helpless in the matter, but we regard it a pretty poor business on the part of the distributors, who will now fulfill their contracts to us by sending us the films unstamped. We must buy the stamps and thereby pay the tax before we can register the films and present the pictures."

At this writing efforts to reach Walsh over the telephone either at his theatre in Hartford or at the meeting place of the industry in New Haven were futile.

New York appellants in the case, however, were emphatic in declaring that Walsh must have been misquoted since, they said, he could not conscientiously make such a statement in view of what has happened and what is on the verge of happening.

We are given to understand that under arrangements to be reached within the next few hours after this story is completed or on the morning of the next day, September 3, the affixing of the seal, indicating that the tax has been paid, will be done outside the state, or probably mostly in Manhattan and Boston from where the bulk of the prints will now have to come. This in view of the fact that during the past week every exchange has obeyed the Hays order and evacuated, excepting one, we are told and that is the one said to be operated by Eddie Golden of the Golden Distributing Corporation.

The group in New York which said that Walsh could have not been correctly quoted, as told above, also went into further detail as to why the quotation should be regarded in the negative. In this respect, primarily because the Connecticut exhibitor has been understood to have been cognizant of the fact from the very beginning that he would have to shoulder the tax.

Producers Advance Loan

Reasoning along this line this official informant in Manhattan also points to the revolving fund which has been formed to alleviate the situation for the exhibitor. The producer and distributor certainly needed no such fund, he said, since the tax was not upon them once they had evacuated the state. What other reason was there for its formation than to help the exhibitor meet his hardship, the informant questions.

Incidentally, this revolving fund, it was officially gleaned this week is a lump sum of about $61,500. From the maze of comment and advise heard upon this subject it would seem that it was the primary move of the special executive session held on a Tuesday afternoon and evening in the Hays office between producers and distributors and the Connecticut delegation of five exhibitors headed by Joseph Walsh.

Nothing about the revolving fund was mentioned in the statement issued by Walsh following that conference, except the hint that money would be borrowed to meet the present exigency. No reference to the fund was made in the formal statement issued by Hays the following day.

It now would seem that producers and distributors, at the Hays meeting referred to, reached some agreement whereby they would contribute to the revolving fund in amounts in accordance with the number of reels they are shipping into Connecticut until their present contracts expire. It was said in this respect that Pathe had the greatest number of reels. Whether this is the actual case could not be gleaned since, other than statements, no one in New York officially interested in the Connecticut squabble will talk for publication.

Assessed $2,642 Each Week

It develops, with no official source to openly pin this on, that Connecticut exhibitors are expected to pay back the $61,500, and whatever additional amount the revolving fund may reach, to its subscribers, the producers and distributors. How they may pay this back is laid out in a plan made up of Classes A*B*C*D.

The plan was announced in New York on Tuesday of this week when it was said that in all probability it would be later adopted at one of the conferences in New Haven. In fact the trade press was assured Tuesday that the plan would undoubtedly prove overwhelmingly popular with all of the appellants.

Under Class A, the trade press was informed, thirty-two theatres will each be assessed $31 per week; Class B forty-two at $22; Class C forty-eight at $16. Class D of 73 theatres will have to pay no assessment. In Class D all houses are open only one and two nights each week even under normal conditions so that a tax of even a few dollars each week was considered by the informant as a drastic hardship.

With such a means of assessment the producers and distributors would be paid back at the rate of about $2,642 per week. That

Special Committee

Before leaving for the Coast Saturday, President I. E. Chadwick, of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, appointed a special Legislative Committee to act for the Association wherever necessary. Selection of the committee was authorized at a meeting of the Executive Committee of the Association last Friday, and one of its first duties will be to consider the Connecticut tax situation if it develops that a special session of the General Assembly is to be called by Governor Trumbull.

The committee is made up as follows: Oscar A. Price, Tri-Stone Pictures Inc., chairman; W. E. Shallenberger, Arrow Film Corp., Joseph Brandt, Columbia Pictures Corp., M. H. Hoffman, Tiffany Pictures, Inc., B. P. Schulberg, B. P. Schulberg, Inc., W Ray Johnston, Rayart Pictures Corp., Sam Zierler, Commonwealth Film Corp.

Chairman Price said that he contemplated no immediate activity for the committee unless it develops that it may be of assistance in Connecticut.

Independents Adopt "Hands Off" Policy is why the fund is called a revolving one, we are told.

The money in the revolving fund will not be permitted to pay the tax on any contracts that may have or may be made since Hays issued his dictum last week, it was emphasized in New York quarters.

The chart as presented above in connection with the revolving fund payments would indicate that there are about 195 theatres in Connecticut. According to records on file in the Hays office and previously announced there, there are 165 houses officially catalogued as motion picture houses. The remainder are town halls where pictures were said to have been projected occasionally.

State Revenue About $75,000

As to the reports about houses closing, official information gleaned in Manhattan on September 1 was to the effect that one or two theatres, of the smallest type, had locked their doors. No real closing of the middle and highest type of theatre is anticipated, at least from the angle of an important New York group. They figure that if any more theatres do close it will be cases where leases have expired and exhibitors have been apprehensive about signing a new lease pending some visibility as to the outcome.

A conservative figure given out in New York was that the revenue to be derived by the State of Connecticut through its new tax would not exceed $75,000. It was said in this connection that the mechanical expense in collecting the tax would probably double the amount to be collected from the way things looked at the time that observation was made.

Tax Commissioner William Blodgett is credited with having thrown up his hands as to reaching any feasible method whereby he could collect the tax with the exchanges outside the state. It was pointed out that it would have been an easy matter for him to have checked up on the incoming film had the exchanges remained in Connecticut. But now it would be a matter of him appointing a host of deputies to comb the entire state in order to collect a twenty dollar bill here and some sixty dollars in loose notes and change there.

Commissioner's Job "Tough"

One of the later sessions this week was for the purpose of arriving at some conclusion whereby Blodgett could pick up the change provided for under the obnoxious statute. This apparently had to do with the agreement reached, or near termination, when the World sought information on the statement credited to Walsh earlier in this story. If so, it smacks of something like the Hays organization doing some arithmetic for Blodgett and making it possible for him to accept the $40,000 which they have ready to tender him at this time as the first instalment.

In connection with the forty "grand," lawyers for the appellants previously expressed themselves to the effect that should Blodgett refuse to accept the money the film could continue to come into Connecticut and be projected at theatres with the tax unpaid and the state would have no redress in the courts. At that time it was said in the metropolis that Blodgett would not attempt to rigidly enforce the law in this respect until this point had been cleared up.

From what could be learned up to press time, Connecticut exhibitors still had no intention of raising their admission prices in order to ease down the revolving fund. Walsh is credited with having previously stated that under no circumstances could prices be raised in justice to the picture-going public.

The taxes are scheduled to undergo collection dating Sunday, August 30. It is figured that the $40,000, already mentioned, will meet this first sweeping payment. The enforcement of the bill dates back into July. The matter of collecting these tax arrears is a dubious one since all of the exchanges and their books are outside the state. It is said in New York, however, that this matter will be given consideration after a means has been devised for accumulating the tax moneys incurred during the present week.

It was said in New York later in the week that exhibitors were not seriously aggravated at the producers and distributors for not paying the tax, but that they were considerably riled over the extra charge in shipping necessitated by film coming through government channels. It was volunteered that exhibitors are paying the taxes and the freight because it is essentially their fight. All expenses incurred by litigation, however, will be met by the producers and distributors, New York sources had it.

It was intimated that no films will be shipped into Connecticut in instances where the rental price involved is less than the amount of tax on such films. Some agreement, it was reported, has been arrived at so that when a case of this kind occurs another film will be substituted. This, it is explained, will abrogate no contract since the theatre owner will be in receipt of product. It was also heard that the Connecticut exhibitor had voiced his approval of this method of substitution.

The next legal move on the Connecticut calender as far as the appellants are concerned seems to be one for a re-hearing before the special session of the Federal Court which once before declared the new tax law a police regulation. The appellants anticipate better treatment this time in view of the fact that their exchanges are now outside the state. They view the evacuation in the light of a clear cut case of interstate commerce. No doubt, according to some official sources, this point will furnish one of the highlights of the appellants' argument in court this second time. Many voice the optimism that the re-hearing will make the appeal to the United States Supreme Court wholly unnecessary.

Law Made in a Day

The reports of the motion picture men appealing for a special session of the legislature are now on the wane. It is believed in reliable quarters that such a movement at the present time would be nothing short of an impossibility.

It is interestingly recalled in New York that Connecticut was the state which introduced the tax on gasoline. The fact that gasoline is now taxed in every state in the Union but about six makes the seriousness of the success of the present film tax more than well apparent.

Another matter opportune at this time and one which may be put to a test as the fight proceeds is the passage of this new tax bill. New York sources claim it was reported out of committee and put to the vote of both houses in the same day.

It may be because of the accelerated passage of this bill, said to have been cradled by Representative Durant of Guilford who one time was remembered to have had an active berth in the scenario end of the film industry, that projectionists throughout the state are communicating with their senators and representatives. The head of the projectionist union in the state issued the order just the other day that they submit to the leigslators of their respective districts a questionnaire on the subject of how they voted for the bill and present $10 per reel tax law, among other things.

Independents' Statement

Frederick Elliott issues the following very declarative and significant statement on the attitude of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America of which he is the manager on the Connecticut tax situation:

"The Independent Motion Picture Association of America, representing producers, distributors and exchanges to the number of 105, has no war with the people of the State of Connecticut. It believes that the film tax law imposes a hardship which, if duplicated in the other states, would cripple the motion picture business, and which in the State of Connecticut imposes too great a penalty on an already too heavily taxed industry.

"It believes this law to be unfair, and, from information received from wide spread sources in Connecticut, that it is not a law popular with the people, who naturally must eventually bear its burden. It believes that this law should be repealed, but it also believes that the people of Connecticut, as part and parcel of a free commonwealth, have the right to settle their own propositions without outside interference.

"Blundering Interference"

"This Association is against depriving the people of the State of Connecticut of its amusement in the motion picture theatres by any boycott or other reprisal.

"It believes that the entire matter can be left with safety to the judgment and sense of fairness of the people of the State of Connecticut and that the local motion picture theatre owners are capable of presenting their case to the people fairly and openly, without the annoying aid and blundering interference on the part of paid attorneys representing certain well meaning but misguided persons in the motion picture business.

"The motion picture theatre men of Connecticut have their business existence at stake and they foresee the sweeping away of their investments by the operation of this tax, because to them it is a problem as to how it is possible for the public to absorb the burden.

New Contract and Rules Presented to Industry by Joseph M. Seider

National Committee Terms it "Solution to Our Contract and Arbitration Difficulties" —Called Equitable—Await Verdict

THE approved standard exhibition contract and the rules provided for in the approved standard exhibition and made a part thereof, are now submitted for the industry's consideration by the Committee on Contract and Arbitration of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, of which committee Joseph M. Seider is the chairman.

Both the new contract and the rules are presented in full in this issue of Moving Picture World. Their purpose and a resume of their contents is sketched briefly in the following preamble by Chairman Seider:

"We are submitting to the industry a form of contract. We offer it with the firm conviction that it contains a solution to our contract and arbitration difficulties; that it is equitable and that it affords every protection to both sides. We do not demand that it be accepted without change. We solicit and will welcome constructive criticism and suggestions.

"We have given the subject much study, have investigated the application of the present contracts and arbitration system in many states and have gone far afield to obtain assistance so that this proposed contract should through its terms, brevity and simplicity serve to minimize disputes and thereby lessen, if not entirely eliminate, litigation through both law and arbitration.

"The proposed contract is in two sections. The contract proper and a set of rules or supplemental contract. We feel that the contract proper should cover those provisions which need be agreed upon at the signing of the contract, such as price, names of pictures, protection, run, etc. The terms that would assume importance only in the event of a controversy are covered in the rules. There is provision made for the rules being binding and a part of the main contract. Thus the theatre owner has only a short document to check up when signing for pictures and he will easily detect the addition or omission of clauses. This together with the fact that the proposed contract contains a warrantee that the contract is the APPROVED STANDARD EXHIBITION CONTRACT will assure a UNIFORM contract.

"Mr. Nathan Burkan's suggestion for a solution of the designation of Play Dates problem is in our opinion the most feasible offered. We have incorporated in our proposed contract Mr. Burkan's clause relating thereto with the addition of a provision for specific dates for second or subsequent runs and a provision for relief in the event a theatre owner is forced into an over-bought condition because the pictures he had contracted for had not been made available to him.

"All pictures contracted for must be made available and played within a year. No running into another year. A playdate becomes a pay-date.

"The Arbitration clause in the proposed contract is in accordance with the law. It is fair to both sides and it is AMPLE. It only exempts a dispute arising out of the violation or attempted violation of protection. In such a dispute provision is made for injunctive relief.

"The theatre owner who does not want to enter into a contract providing for compulsory arbitration is given the option of protecting the distributor through depositing with the distributor a sum equal to ten per cent (10%) of the amount of the contract as security for the faithful performance of the contract.

"The theatre owner who agrees to arbitration with such an option will not, if a dispute arises, refuse to submit same to an arbitration board. He will in every instance if it is against him carry out the decision or award of the Arbitration Board.

"This together with the provisions made for open hearings, for the availability of the records to the disputants and the press, for the right to the disputants to challenge the appointed arbitrators and replace them with their personal choice, for the refunding to the exhibitor who successfully defends an arbitration claim, his railroad fare and expenses, for the giving to the Arbitration Boards jurisdiction over matters arising out of ethics and fair dealings and for a Contract Commission and Appeals Board, will win over many opponents of Arbitration.

"The theatre owner is entitled to and must have relief from the present contract and arbitration procedure. If distributors have honest objections we in all sincerity beg them to state them. If they have none they should not withhold a square deal from us any longer."

THE APPROVED STANDARD EXHIBITION CONTRACT

The Distributor warrants that this contract conforms in every respect and detail with the APPROVED STANDARD EXHIBITION CONTRACT, on file with , and identified by the signature of its President, on the day of September, 1925.

AGREEMENT, made in triplicate, this day of , 19 between , a corporation (hereinafter called the "Distributor") and , operating the theatre, at , City of and State of (hereinafter called the "Exhibitor") as follows:

1. The Distributor hereby grants to the Exhibitor, and the latter accepts, a license under the respective copyrights to the several photoplays hereinafter in the schedule below designated and described, subject to the terms and conditions herein specified, to exhibit, during and within the year commencing on the day of 19 and ending the day of , 19 , and the Distributor agrees to furnish to the exhibitor during and within the said period, each of such photoplays in the theatre herein specified only, for the number of successive days herein specified, and to deliver to a common carrier or to an agent of the exhibitor, a positive print of each of such photoplays, in time for exhibition at the theatre and on the dates herein specified or determined as herein provided.

2. The Exhibitor agrees:

(a) To pay for such license as to each of such photoplays, the sums herein specified, at least three (3) days in advance of the date of shipment of each of such photoplays by the Distributor.

(b) To pay the cost of the delivery of each of such photoplays to the theatre from the local exchange of the Distributor and their return to the said local exchange.

(c) To return each of such photoplays in the same condition in which they were received, reasonable wear and tear excepted.

(d) To be liable in an amount not exceeding four (4) cents per lineal foot for each foot of the positive prints of such photoplays that is damaged, lost or stolen while in his possession.

3 The Distributor agrees not to permit or authorize or license the exhibition of any of such photoplays in violation of the run and protection granted to the Exhibitor as follows:

PROTECTION days against Theatres
RUN to FOLLOW days after Theatre.

H. A. Cole Resigns

R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., has received a letter from H. A. Cole, president of the M. P. T. O. of Texas, in which Mr. Cole announces his resignation as a director of the national organization.

Mr. Cole asserts that he is not attempting to split the national exhibitor body, arguing that it today "is split wide open, no matter whether any of us resign or not."

The Texan takes exception to the policies and methods of Sydney S. Cohen, past president and present chairman of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. His letter is a long one and in it Mr. Cole goes into detail as to these alleged policies and methods.

6. Excepting always and only the right of the Exhibitor to take such proceedings as he may deem advisable to enjoin any breach or threatened breach or violation by the Distributor of any of the provisions relating to run or protection provided for herein, the Distributor hereby consenting to the granting of an injunction restraining such breach or threatened breach, it being agreed that in case of any such breach the damages to be sustained by the Exhibitor is irreparable and incapable of definite ascertainment and computation, the parties hereto agree that before either of them shall resort to any Court to determine, enforce the legal rights of either hereto, he shall submit to a board of arbitration consisting of an equal number of Distributors and Exhibitors, which board of arbitration shall be formed and shall function as provided in a set of Rules on file with .....and identified by the signature of the President of said Association, which rules are made a part hereof the same as if they had been fully set forth herein, all disputes, claims and controversies arising hereunder, including those based upon a repudiation or rescission, or attempted repudiation or attempted rescission of this contract, for determination.

The parties hereto further agree to abide by and forthwith comply with any decision or award of such Board of Arbitration in any such arbitration proceedings, and agree and consent that any such decision or award shall be enforceable in or by any court of competent jurisdiction pursuant to the Laws of the State of New York, now or hereafter in force and the parties consent to the introduction of such findings in evidence in any judicial proceedings.

7. The foregoing clause Six relating to arbitration shall become null and void and the parties hereto shall retain all their rights and powers at law and in equity in the event the Exhibitor deposits with the Distributor a sum equal to ten (10%) per cent of the total sum payable by the Exhibitor to the Distributor under the terms of this contract, and in the event the Exhibitor so elects to deposit said sum of money with the Distributor, the Distributor agrees to pay to the Exhibitor interest on said sum or any balance remaining due from time to time at the rate of two (2%) per cent per annum. Such moneys shall constitute trust moneys, and shall not be commingled with its other moneys unless and until and at the time when the sum shall be applied on account of the last sums payable hereunder. It is hereby expressly provided and understood however, that Clause Five of the Rules referred to and provided for in the said Clause Six shall at all times and in any event be in force and effect and a part of this contract.

8. This contract shall be deemed an application for a contract only and shall not become binding upon either party unless accepted in writing by an officer of the Distributor and notice in writing of acceptance sent to the Exhibitor within days from the date hereof. The Exhibitor may withdraw this application at any time prior to its acceptance by the Distributor as provided for herein.

9. No terms or representations have been made by either party to the other except as herein set forth.

RULES PROVIDED FOR IN THE APPROVED STANDARD EXHIBITION AND MADE A PART THEREOF

Identified this day of , 19 .

1. The Board of Arbitration shall consist of four persons, two distributors who do not own or operate theatres and two exhibitors who are not directly or indirectly affiliated with a producer or distributor.

The two distributors' representatives shall be selected by the to serve for one month. The two exhibitors' representatives shall be selected by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to serve for one month.

No member of the Board of Arbitration shall sit in any case or controversy in which he has an interest direct or indirect.

In case of a tie vote the Board of Arbitration shall appoint a fifth arbitrator, and if they are unable to agree, then the chairman of the Board of Arbitration shall request the presidents of the respective organizations of which both litigants are members to make the appointment and in the event they are unable to agree, then the chairman shall request the Mayor of the city in which the dispute is arbitrated to make the appointment.

The exhibitor shall have the right to challenge the exhibitors' representatives on the Arbitration Board appointed as herein provided and shall have the right to name the two exhibitors who shall serve on the Arbitration Board in his particular case or controversy.

Likewise, the distributor shall have the right to challenge the distributors' representatives on the Arbitration Board appointed as herein provided and shall have the right to name the two distributors who will serve on the Arbitration Board in his particular case or controversy.

2. The Board of Arbitration shall have general power, after a thorough and impartial hearing of any dispute or controversy (1) To determine such dispute or controversy, (2) to make findings thereon, (3) to direct what shall be done by either party or both parties with respect to the matter in dispute, (4) to elect its chairman, (5) to, in any decision or award, include a provision therein requiring the payment by one party to the other of compensatory damage and/or indemnity, (6) to also provide in any decision or award that the railroad fares and hotel bills incurred by the exhibitor shall be paid to the exhibitor by the distributor, in the event the Board of Arbitration shall find in favor of the exhibitor against the distributor in the pending controversy or shall dismiss the grievance brought by the distributor against the exhibitor, (7) to have jurisdiction over all matters in dispute arising under an application for a contract, (8) to have jurisdiction in all matters of fair dealing and ethics arising out of a contract, even though not specifically provided for therein.

3. There shall be formed an Arbitration Commission consisting of three exhibitors and three distributors. The exhibitor members shall be appointed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and the distributor members shall be appointed by

This commission so constituted shall have the power of supervision of all Arbitration Boards, to review such decisions of Arbitration Boards as may in its discretion merit review and shall have the power to avoid or amend or modify the award thus reviewed and to make such changes in the Approved Standard Exhibition Contract and these rules as may from time to time become necessary.

4. The hearings before the Arbitration Boards shall be open. The records of the Arbitration Boards shall be available and open to the press, exhibitor, distributor and their organizations and counsel. Copies of complaints, awards, minutes and calendars shall be available to the distributor and exhibitor and their organization.

5. Both the distributor and the exhibitor agree:

(a) None of the photoplays specified in the contract shall be reissues from old negative except it is so expressly noted therein.

(b) The photoplays specified in the contract shall not contain any paid advertising.

(c) Contracts may be assigned by either party providing the assignment is in writing and accepted in writing by the assignee and approved in writing by the distributor or the exhibitor as the case may be, in which event the assignor shall be released from his or its liability hereunder.

(d) The exhibition date of each photoplay which has not otherwise been specified on the contract shall be fixed as follows:

(d1) For all purposes herein the release date of such photoplay shall be construed to be the date when such photoplay shall have been exhibited for the first time in a first-run theatre in the key city or exchange centre in the district in which the theatre specified in the contract is located.

Prompt notice of such exhibition date and the date of the expiration of the protection period of said first-run theatre shall be given to the exhibitor.

From and after the date of the expiration of such protection period, such photoplay shall forthwith become available to the exhibitor for exhibition under his contract.

(d2) If the exhibitor is entitled to a first run of a photoplay the exhibitor shall fix an exhibition date, such date to be within a period not exceeding three weeks following the expiration of the protection period aforementioned. The notice of the exhibitor fixing the exhibition as aforementioned shall be given to the distributor at least two weeks prior to such exhibition date.

If the exhibitor shall fail to fix such exhibition in the manner above provided, the distributor shall, promptly after the expiration of three weeks following the protection period, fix such exhibition date, such date to be within two weeks following such three-week period, and in such case the date so fixed by the distributor shall, for all purposes hereunder, be deemed the exhibition date of the photoplay.

(d3) In case the exhibitor shall have a run subsequent to a first run, and the number of days, subsequent to the run immediately prior to the exhibitor named in the contract, after which the exhibitor is entitled to such photoplay is not specified, then the exhibitor's exhibition date shall be fixed in like manner as herein above provided for the exhibition with respect to a first run, except that all periods shall run from the date of the expiration of the protection period of the

Buhler Would Utilize Movie Season All Year, Hays Hears

IN a letter to Will H. Hays, Frank W. Buhler, managing director of the Stanley Company of America, makes a suggestion as follows:

"I am of the opinion that a permanent organization of the active men in the Greater Movie Season Campaign might be perfected—not only for Greater Movie Season each year, but for the general exploitation of the Motion Picture Industry as a whole, bringing it constantly before the public.

"The will to do has been the thing that has made the picture industry and I am sure that the motion picture distributors would welcome and would help an organization that would be perfected for the purpose of selling pictures to the public."

Acting immediately upon Buhler's plan the Greater Movie Season Headquarters is communicating with the general managers of the campaigns to learn their thoughts regarding the suggestion. If the active workers in the various campaigns favor such a move, the Hays organization will assist in every possible manner, serving the exhibitors with material and acting as a clearing house.

Whether or not a definite organization is perfected, the Hays Organization plans to furnish to all exhibitors who can use such material, a service of publicity and advertising matter that can be used as a follow up on this year's Greater Movie Season Campaign, and for leading into next year's. Included, will be all the material that can be gathered that will help exhibitors sell their theatres to their townspeople and which will build good will for motion pictures in general.

There is no question now as to whether there will be a Greater Movie Season Campaign next year. Exhibitors are unanimous in declaring that the drive should be made an annual affair, the Hays organization announces.

QUITS N. Y. FILM COMMISSION

Ansel Brown, who was formerly in charge of the Albany branch of the New York Motion Picture Commission, and who resigned a few months ago to be succeeded by William Leonard, of Saratoga Springs, a Democrat, is disposing of his effects in Pulaski, preparatory to moving to Florida, where he will enter the real estate business.

Although an eligible list has just been established from which persons might be appointed to the New York State Motion Picture Commission as reviewers, it was learned during the past week that no vacancies exist and that no appointments will be made for at least some time yet.

LILYAN TASHMAN TO WED

Lilyan Tashman, now playing a featured role in Robert Z. Leonard's "A Little Bit of Broadway" in support of Pauline Starke and Charles Ray, recently announced on the set that she is to marry Edmund Loew within a few days, or at least as soon as her part is completed.

Testimonial Dinner to Cohen Slated for Early in October

THE committee of Independent producers and distributors and exchangemen arranging the testimonial dinner to Sydney S. Cohen in recognition of his great service to the Independence cause in motion pictures have decided to make the event synchronize with Independence Week, which will be celebrated beginning October 18. The dinner will be held at one of the big New York hotels early in October.

The first plan was to have the dinner an isolated event meant only to signalize the affection and regard which Independent leaders feel for Mr. Cohen. He requested, however, that he be treated as any other individual who has worked for Independence and that the cause rather than himself be honored. Therefore the committee has decided to tie in the dinner with Independence week, thus meeting Mr. Cohen's wishes without surrendering its desire to honor the man as an individual.

The committee is meeting weekly in the offices of the chairman, Samuel Zierler, president of Commonwealth Film Corporation. It is certain that the event will be a large and most significant one. Prominent members of the industry have written the committee from trade centers all over the country, declaring their intention of being present. Committeemen in addition to the chairman include J. G. Bachman, Jack Cohn, Harry Reichenbach, Fred E. Baer, Whitman Bennett, Joe Brandt, Abe Carlos, I. E. Chadwick, Fred H. Elliott, Lin Bonner, Arthur James, Dr. W. E. Schallenberger, Oscar A. Price, Ray Johnston, S. L. Rothafel and B. P. Schulberg.

Carr and Schad Sell Reading Theatre to Loew

H. J. Schad, president of Carr and Schad, Inc., announces the sale of the Colonial, Pa., to Loew's Inc., of New York City. The new owners will take possession on September 14, and the theatre will become the permanent home of the Metro-Goldwyn program. While the purchase has not been made public, it is reported to be in the neighborhood of $600,000.

Carr and Schad, Inc., will continue to operate the Arcadia, Lyric, Princess, Strand, San Toy and Schuylkill Avenue theatres in Reading and the Colonial and Capitol at Lebanon, Pa. The new headquarters will be established on the second floor front of the Arcadia Theatre building.

Cinema Company Buys Interests of Stromberg-Prod. Dist. Corp.

UPON the return from Los Angeles this week of F. C. Munroe, president, and John C. Flinn, vice-president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, announcement was made of the purchase of the Hunt Stromberg-Producers Distributing Corporation interests by the Cinema Corporation of America, the holding company back of Cecil B. De Mille's independent film producing enterprises. The Cinema Corporation of America has also purchased the controlling interest in the Hollywood Studios from Charles and Al. Christie, and plans have been formulated for greatly increasing its equipment and general facilities.

In the transaction with Hunt Stromberg, the Cinema Corporation of America secured all of the Harry Carey pictures and Hunt Stromberg productions released and scheduled for release through Producers Distributing Corporation, including the producing rights of "The Last Frontier."

This spectacular Western epic, for the filming of which elaborate preparations have already been made, will now be produced by Cecil B. De Mille, either under his personal direction or supervision. De Mille's producing activities will be still further increased by his assuming supervision of the filming of the several other big stories, originally scheduled for production by Stromberg, and now, under the terms of the deal, the property of the Cinema Corporation of America.

De Mille's activities will now be expanded to such proportions that two studios, the De Mille Studio and the Hollywood Studio, will be running to capacity under his supervision, while the productions releasecd this season with the De Mille trademark will probably be increased fifty per cent over the twelve originally on the schedule.

TRADE MARK

Koerpel Opens Many European Branches for First National

PARIS may be the city of wine, song, light and laughter but, following the recent trip to the Gay Capital, one cannot but help realize that in one imposing building at least, work and determined work is the sole object of existence. For at 25 rue de Courcelles the writer found a veritable hive of activity under the direction of J. A. Koerpel, the European headquarters of First National Pictures.

Following the decision of E. Bruce Johnson, foreign manager, to cease selling and commence renting, a period of considerable activity has taken place as a result of which First National Pictures is already firmly established on the European continent. How well and how speedily this new effort was carried out will be realized when it is stated that the general European manager has opened not only Paris headquarters but also seven fully equipped exchanges and has engaged the staff of over sixty-two persons within a few weeks of opening. This number will probably be trebled ere long for the general clerical staff has not yet commenced operations, the following being the chief appointments made at the moment: Robert Schless, formerly exclusive agent for First National in France, is at the head of affairs in that country as managing director while assisting him in executive positions are A. G. Krikorian, assistant manager; P. J. Thomson, secretary and chief of accounts department; E. T. McCarthy, booking control; P. M. Rogers, publicity director; J. Faivre, editing and printing department; Messrs. Fontanon, Perrez, Roge, Gatto, Fausser, Lestienne, Pitou, Stewart of the sales department.

Five Exchange Centers

The five last named will operate as exchange managers in the towns of Marseilles, Strasbourg, Lille, Paris and Brussels respectively where excellent offices have been obtained.

For Paris headquarters, J. A. Koerpel took over an entire bank building completely furnished with vaults, executive offices, counters, desks, and all that could be desired and in the course of a fortnight transformed it into a veritable palace of renting. The same hustle and the same excellent results were obtained in the towns mentioned above with the result that First National is now fully established in the new territory.

Schless Also Busy

Meanwhile, Robert Schless and his salesmen had been equally busy with the result that a contract was secured with Reginald Ford of the Cameo Theatre on the Grands Boulevards (The Broadway of Paris) for the showing of the first four pictures: "The Sea Hawk," three weeks; "The Lady," two weeks; "The Lost World," playing its eighth week at the moment of writing, and "The Only Woman."

Trade shows of an unprecedented character were arranged and held with extraordinary success. Over 1,100 exhibitors attended the showing of "The Lost World." Elaborate prologues were staged by P. M. Rogers, the publicity chief, who also worked to good effect in the press with the result that front-page stories of "The Lost World" were carried for three weeks in the biggest evening journal of France, while every newspaper of note reported the showing of "The Sea Hawk" on the flagship "Provence" at Toulon.

J. A. Koerpel's activities have not been confined to France and Belgium alone, however. He has also concluded arrangements for the opening of offices in Holland, having already secured offices in Amsterdam for that purpose. The United Kingdom was, of course, already under way but the European general manager has done much to increase the work being carried out in the ten branches of the British Isles. He has also opened up new channels of liaison with the First National agents in Switzerland, Germany, Italy, Spain, Austria and is also making arrangements for extensive operations in Russia.

Producers Distributing Opens British Releasing Organization

WILLIAM M. VOGEL, general manager of the Producers International Corporation, the foreign division of Producers Distributing Corporation, returned to America last Wednesday on the Olympic, after a busy three months' trip. He organized and established a new British distributing company to handle the P.D.C. releases throughout the United Kingdom, and opened "supervising" offices in Paris and Berlin to conserve the interests of Producers International Corporation in the continental markets.

The new British distributing agency has been incorporated as the Producers Distributing Company, Ltd., with headquarters in London at No. 12 Great Newport Street, and eight subsidiary exchanges throughout the provinces. A. George Smith, who headed the British Goldwyn, Limited, prior to its merger with Metro, has been engaged as managing director of Producers Distributing Company, Ltd., and will be in complete charge of the release of the P.D.C. product in England, Scotland, Ireland and Wales.

Film Booking Offices of England handled the 1924-1925 releases of Producers Distributing Corporation during the past year and in view of this, Mr. Vogel intended to give preference to Film Booking Offices for the 1925-1926 productions. But the untimely demise of Sir Edward Hulton, which occurred just a few weeks prior to Mr. Vogel's arrival in London, together with the decision of the executors of the Hulton Estate to sell its film enterprise en bloc, crystallized the Producers International Corporation's desire to open up its own English distributing organization.

While in Berlin, Mr. Vogel arranged for the distribution of the P.D.C. releases throughout Germany with National Film, A. G., of which company Herman Rosenfeld is managing director.

The interests of Producers International Corporation are being supervised for France, Belgium, Switzerland, Spain, Portugal and Italy by Mr. F. de Sacadura with offices at No. 2 Rue de Lancry, Paris. During the next thirty days an office will be opened for the supervision of the P.D.C. distribution through Central and Northern European countries and the outright sale to other European markets reached directly from Berlin.

Further broad expansions in the foreign market are now in contemplation in adidtion to the outright sale of the 1925-26 P.D.C. product in the Balkan kingdoms and republics, which Mr. Vogel closed while in Europe.

VETOES SUNDAY REPEAL BILL

Mayor Jeffries of Moberly, Mo., on Monday, August 24, vetoed the bill repealing the Sunday closing ordinance which prohibits Sunday shows at present.

Six votes are needed in the City Council to beat the mayor's veto. The repeal bill passed last week by a vote of 5 to 3.

Pressure from the Protestant church and reform element caused Mayor Jeffries to veto the bill.

Incorporations

At the rate of two a day or twelve to the week, an even dozen of motion picture companies incorporated in New York state during the past week, an increase over the same period a year ago, and with the companies showing a heavier capitalization than in the past. The following gives the companies, directors chosen for the first year, and the amount of capitalization when specified in the papers filed: Welcome Pictures, $20,000, with A. W. Goldstein, H. A. Krein, Rachel Marmer, New York City; Walker-Hamilton Distributing Company, Inc., $20,000, Henry Modery, Brooklyn; John H. Gould, Port Washington; Seward G. Spoor, Great Neck; Careda Theatres Corporation, $10,000, M. B. Jones, Jr.; R. Beattie, Ruth Rosenblatt, New York City; Play C. Company, Inc., $20,000, Charles Lorete, R. J. Joseph, New York; B. M. Mark, Brooklyn; Weak Sisters Production, Inc., $20,000, J. H. Harris, Charles Hertzman, H. N. Heldc, New York; Edco Producing Unit, Inc., $200,000, I. M. Michelman, R. Liebhoff, A. J. Johnston, New York; Hal Hodes Short Film Exchanges, Inc., $5,000, I. Steinberg, Brooklyn; Hal Hodes, P. Poger, New York City; Easy Terms Corporation, with M. L. Elkin, M. Salit, Anne Eichel, New York; Sawyer and Lubin, Inc., H. G. Kosch, E. Bregstein, A. Thompson, New York; Lariat Productions, Inc., H. B. Goldsmith, Haverstraw, J. F. Gerlach, Bayside; C. Three Hour Conference Fails with "Musics" in Chicago

The meeting of the officers and scale committee of the Musicians Union in Chicago with the committee from the Chicago Exhibitors Association, held recently at the executive offices of Lubliner and Trinz circuit resulted in no agreement after three hours of discussion. The original demand was for 25 per cent. increase and changes in working conditions, but this was cut down to 10 per cent. increase by the musicians before the meeting.

The old scale expires on Labor Day and it is expected that another meeting will be held to bring the interested parties together before the expiration of the old agreement.

The exhibitors committee was headed by Jack Miller of the Chicago association, Ludwig Siegal of the Prairie Theatre, John Balaban of the Balaban and Katz circuit, Emil Stern from Lubliner and Trinz, Julius Goodman from the Goodman circuit, Arnold Schack of the Keystone Theatre, Louis Marks from Marks Brothers circuit, Andrew Karzas of the Karzas circuit, Al Cooney from the National Theatres Corporation and several others from the smaller houses met with the musicians to get together on the new scale.

The main contention seems to be over the working conditions and when another meeting is held both sides may iron out their differences.

BOOTHBY MADE COMPTROLLER

First National Pictures, Inc., has appointed W. C. Boothby, formerly of the First National Bank of Boston, to the responsible executive position of financial comptroller made vacant by the resignation of C. S. Pinkerton. Mr. Boothby has already assumed the duties of his new position.

Connecticut Tax

"For the present at least nothing can be done toward having this burden shared by the public, the motion picture theatres of Connecticut have had to expend thousands of dollars in the middle of one of the worst seasons in their history, and there is no way that they now see that they can get it back.

"As far as the independent motion picture exchanges are concerned some have closed their New Haven offices, not from a desire to boycott anybody, but because their slim resources are in danger of being wiped out by the tax.

"This association is not in favor of any carpet-bagging activities, and does not desire in any way to enter into the situation except to give such aid as is necessary to keep the theatres open and the business running.

"If this can be made plain to the public, possibly the people would have a better understanding of the actual situation. It is the purpose of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America to co-operate insofar as possible with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut and the owners and managers of the independent exchanges serving theatres in that state."

Niagara Strikers Replaced; Buffalo Gives 5% Increase

MUSICIANS, stage hands and motion picture operators, failing to have their demands granted, have "walked out" at the Strand, Bellevue and Cataract Theatres in Niagara Falls, N. Y. The union men quit August 29 and their places were taken at once by 43 members of the National Theatrical Federated Union, all of whom were brought from New York City to the Falls a week in advance preparatory to any strike on the part of the local men.

The stage hands demanded an additional man on every local stage crew as well as a 12 per cent increase. The operators demanded a boost of $16.25, or three-three and one-third per cent, while the musicians wanted an increase of 10 per cent and a clause inserted in their contract that if a man was hired and kept two weeks he could not be "fired" without the consent of the local union. The musicians also demanded that not less than eight men be employed in the pits.

The Lumberg and Amendola Theatres in Niagara Falls, both gave in to the demands of the unions. It is announced that the new men have come to the Falls under a year's contract. The Strand and Cataract Theatres are managed by A. C. Hayman while Herman Lorence manages the Bellevue.

After seven hours of battling on Saturday, August 29, the stage hands of Buffalo theatres reached an agreement with the Buffalo Theatre Managers' Association, whereby the men are to receive a five per cent increase in wages effective September 1, and covering a period of two years. Al Beckerich, president of the association of managers announced the compromise was satisfactory to both sides.

Musicians Threaten Walkout if Frisco Cuts Orchestras

Commencing this month a decided change will be noted in the manner in which moving pictures will be presented in the leading theatres in San Francisco. The customary musical stage concerts will be done away, orchestras will be reduced to the minimum provided for in the agreement with the Musicians' Union and will play only in the orchestra pit.

At the same time all bonuses will be done away with and a straight scale will prevail. The organized musicians have demanded a six months' contract, a decrease in working hours from six and a half hours a day to six hours, and increased pay for organists. They have advised theatre owners that their demands are not subject to change and in turn the Allied Amusement Industries has decided to oppose any changes in present conditions.

A strike is threatened and there is a possibility that instead of reduced orchestras in moving picture theatres there may be no orchestras at all.

Saxe Business Hurt By Slanderers

Slanderers, who have spread rumors in Milwaukee that the new $2,000,000 Wisconsin theatre building is unsafe, have caused such a noticeable falling off in business that Thomas Saxe, head of the chain which controls the house, has offered a reward of $1,000 for information leading to discovery of those responsible.

Mr. Saxe, in order to prove to Milwaukee that the rumors are entirely without foundation, recently invited the city engineer, theatre inspector, a fire chief, a member of the building inspector's office and newspapermen to make a minute inspection of the entire building. These investigators announced following their tour that the building is one of the safest structures in the city and there is not a trace anywhere of weakness.

Milwaukee Unions Still Negotiating On Wage Question

Demands for pay increases, ranging from five per cent in outskirt houses to thirty-two per cent in de luxe downtown houses, are being made by members of the operators' union in Milwaukee.

Thus far theatre owners have unanimously rejected the demands, but negotiations are still being carried on and although some members of the union are talking strike, it is the opinion in most quarters that an amicable adjustment will be reached and serious trouble averted.

Stage hands also are seeking increases which thus far likewise have been refused, and the two unions are working together in an effort to obtain advances.

Some of the downtown houses are somewhat worried over the demands because they are inclined to believe that the outskirts may be swung over to grant the increases because they are not large where their own houses are concerned.

MIDWEST GOLF TOURNAMENT

The first annual Fall Midwest Film Golf Tournament, will be staged at the Bob-o-link Golf Club of Highland Park, Chicago, September 16.

This event will mark the inauguration of an arrangement whereby the Midwest Tournament will be semi-annual affairs. Judging from the rate at which entries are pouring into Committee Headquarters, the entry list for the Fall Tournament will set a new high-mark.

The Committe in charge consists of F. M. Brockell, General Manager Balaban & Katz Midwest Theatres; L. H. Mason of the Motion Picture News; Ashur Levy of the Orpheum Circuit; J. J. Jones of Jones Linick and Schaeffer; and R. C. Seery of the First National.

Warner Bros. Announce New Appointments in the Field

APPOINTMENTS of a number of new managers of Warner Bros. branch exchanges, and special representatives were made public this week by Sam E. Morris, general manager of distribution.

Jacob M. Klein, an experienced salesman and executive, has become manager of the Albany office. His work heretofore has been largely in Boston territory. Lloyd Willis, another veteran in motion picture sales work, is now a special representative out of the New York office, and Edwin Silverman, in addition to his duties as a district representative, has taken over the management of the Chicago exchange.

George H. Dumond, general manager of Warner Bros.' theatres, announced the selection of managers of a number of Warner houses in the south. These appointments were made by Nat L. Royster, managing director of the Warner southern theatre with the approval of Dumond.

B. H. Stough, former manager of the Rialto Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., has become assistant manager of the Broadway, in Charlotte, N. C. Previous to his connection in Birmingham he was associated for twenty-eight months with Sid Grauman, in Hollywood.

Ed. C. Pearce, formerly owner of the Amusa Theatre, Winston-Salem, N. C., has been appointed manager of the Broadway, Columbia, S. C. Ed. W. Williamson, formerly of Columbia, is the new manager of the Lexington Theatre, Lexington, S. C., and M. Merriweather, of Winston-Salem, N. C., becomes manager of Warner's New Concord Theatre at Concord, N. C.

POSTER TAX OVER $1,000 MONTHLY

An important technical change is being made in the poster censor's bureau at Montreal, Quebec, which is under the direction of Martin Singher, a former local newspaperman. The bureau was opened a year ago as a division of the Montreal Police Department as it was considered as a disciplinary feature of the civic administration. The bureau has now been transferred to the city treasurer's department because of the recognized and admitted fact that it has become more of a revenue producing office than anything else, local exchanges and exhibitors paying the bill. More than $1,000 per month is being collected through the poster taxation locally.

MILWAUKEE AUTO PARTY RESULTS IN A TRAGEDY

Miss Evelyn Benson, an employe of F. B. O., was killed and Bob Turner, of the same company, suffered a fractured leg when an automobile in which they were returning to Milwaukee following a party at a nearby lake resort left the road and crashed into a tree. Two other members of the party also were injured.

Rothafel to Study Theatre Conditions in Europe

S. L. Rothafel will sail for Europe aboard the Leviathan September 5. He will be accompanied by Arthur H. Sawyer, one of the leading spirits in the organization recently formed to build the new Roxy Theatre at 50th Street and 7th Avenue, New York City. Mrs. Arthur H. Sawyer, Dorothy Sawyer, Clark Robinson, Mr. Rothafel's art director, who recently resigned from the Capitol Theatre staff to join Roxy's new organization, and Yascha Bunchuk, internationally known 'cellist.

Roxy's European trip will take him into England, France and Germany and is in the interests of the new Roxy Theatre, which is to be built at 50th Street and 7th Avenue, New York, construction starting this Fall.

Further announcements will then be made concerning the theatres which the Roxy Theatres Corporation will erect in Manhattan, Bronx and Brooklyn, in addition to the 6,212 seat house at 50th Street and 7th Avenue, New York. During Rothafel's absence in Europe, Herbert Lubin and William E. Atkinson, his associates, in the theatre building project, will push to completion the plans involving the contemplated Roxy chain of houses.

Fairbanks Leads Taxpayers With a Check for $182,190

By SUMNER SMITH

NOT all of our movie stars have gone bankrupt. In testimony witness the income tax figures made public this week by federal authorities, Douglas Fairbanks bounds to the top of the list with $182,190, while Mary Pickford Fairbanks handed over $34,387. Charles Spencer Chaplin gave the curious a conversational treat when his personal return showed only $345. The Chaplin Studio, Inc., came across with $1,994. Another surprise occurred when Roscoe Arbuckle, thought by many to be "broke," paid $6,116. Monsieur Jackie Coogan wrote out a check for $268. Rudolph Valentino paid $1,995, and that other sheik of the screen, Ben Turpin, $6,104. No wonder he doesn't get his optics aligned.

Gloria Pays $57,075

Gloria Swanson indited a check for $57,075. Jesse L. Lasky got separated from $48,592. James Cruze lost some "Covered Wagon" salary when he paid $40,353, as did Ernest Torrence with a return of $22,209. Pola Negri paid $15,108 and Tom Mix dug down into his cowboy pants for $7,514. Agnes Ayres, otherwise Mrs. M. Richi, paid $317.

The Beerys ran a pretty close race, with Wallace paying $2,671 and Noah $2,398. Also among the "B's" appear the names of Monte Blue with $3,996 and Madge Bellamy with $891.

Dropping our eyes Turpin-fashion to the "C's" we discover A. E. Christie with a return for $13,974 and Charles H. Christie paying $13,784. That's fair enough. Lew Cody's villainy cost him $996 in income tax.

Among the "D's"—just as though all tax payers didn't come under that heading—we find Viola Dana paying $5,469 and Bebe Daniels $75. Cecil B. DeMille's tax was $11,240.

Zane Grey, the author of profitable westerns, paid $21,222. D. W. Griffith came across with $7,777, his lucky numbers. William S. Hart's check book now is shy $15,785 and Rupert Hughes, the author, bemoans the loss of $7,608.

Buster Keaton continued to look serious after handing over $2,702, while Harold Lloyd's expression was not photographed when he made out his check for $28,151. Bert Lytell's tax was $2,213.

Other returns were: Mrs. Marshall Neilan (Blanche Sweet), $3,220; Conrad Nagel, $6,740; Jack Pickford, $5,218; Marie Prevost, $3,154; Hal. E. Roach, $8,828; Alolph Ramish, $543; Charlotte P. Smith (Lottie Pickford), $34,267; Lewis Stone, $12,853; Constance Talmadge, $5,809; Conway Tearle, $1,550.

Four In a Row

Well, now that we are on the subject of box office successes—and we certainly are, right now—I can name you four independent ones in a row from one company. I know some more also but we are now dealing with the first four pictures for the new season from Associated Exhibitors.

To begin with, there is the picture "Headlines," a title I don't fancy much because it hasn't much lure but after all a lot of these lureful titles are falling flat on their noses and maybe, soon, the title won't be as important as the picture. "Headlines" is a story of a woman's sacrifice, not an old and ugly woman, but a woman young and sweet enough for any man's bother and happily played by Alice Joyce. Her sacrifice is for her cruelly young daughter, a flapper with all the extreme selfishness of youth in the modern manner. Virginia Lee Corbin is the best flapper the screen has presented. She teaches a lesson as well as entertains and the picture, while broad, extreme and swift, can laugh at all censors because it actually shows the unlovely side of flapperism. It's better than a sermon because it's convincing.

One of my reviewers saw this picture and praised it with faint damns. Later he told me it was better than "Flaming Youth." He was so right in his private comment that I've given him another chance because this is one of the really great pictures of ten years. It's well written, Peter Milne saw to that, it's logical, sane and with a fine and intriguing plot. It's compelling, powerful and delicate and could run at the Capitol, New York for four weeks to everybody's profit.

I think Jack Woody is a conservative when he says he's just "strong for that picture."

What it needs in every local community is exploitation, going to it in a showman's way, because it has everything that goes to make real compelling entertainment.

Well, so much for that, and now we come to the Monte Banks starring effort, called "Keep Smiling." I took the liberty of recommending some cuts which I was advised already had been made because I only saw the sample print. But here really is a great big, fine exciting picture with danger and comedy walking along side by side like the Siamese twins and very nice too, all the way. I don't know whether I regard Banks as really a comedian but certainly this is a picture of box office power and attraction value. It's the sort of thing that can be exploited and make good on the exploitation and what more can those with money hunger ask?

Then there's "Under the Rouge," running to fine and well deserved business at the Colony. Tom Moore is the star and in excellent support are Mary Alden, Eileen Percy, Chester Conklin and Carmelita Geraghty. Lewis H. Moomaw directed it from A. P. Younger's story and he has made one of the very best box office pictures of the year. It's a strong, properly sentimental play, gripping and absolutely satisfying as real entertainment. Mary Alden, the woman magnificent of the screen, contributes tremendously to the power of the play. "Under the Rouge" is a real production.

Now we come to "Manhattan Madness" an Oscar Price offering with Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor. It is delightfully preposterous and has enough battle in it to satisfy all that could have been expected from the heavyweight champion of the world. The box office power of Dempsey will ride this picture into money and there again we get into the thing that satisfies.

Four in a row! A fine start for the season. We congratulate the exhibitors who are using and who will use independent pictures.

As a Whole ... HAS A COMEDY PLOT THAT IS BETTER THAN THE AVERAGE BUT THEY DON'T STICK TO IT CLOSELY ENOUGH. SLOW AT START BUT HAS FINE FINISH

Star ... Doesn't seem to warm up until the picture is well under way but they'll like his comedy boat race and the wild antics he goes through.

Cast ... Ann Cornwall a pretty lead. Stanhope Wheatcroft the comedian's enemy and Robert Edeson the typical rich sportsman, father of Ann.

Type of Story ... Comedy. They had a better idea to go to work on in "Keep Smiling" than is usually found in these comedy features. It was a trifle short on situations for a picture of feature proportions but at that they had a chance to make a good short feature of it and get it through with some good laughs. Instead of sticking to the story, however, they've brought on a lot of irrelevant slap-stick that isn't a bit funny and only serves to make the picture drag. As a result it gets off to a slow start. If they're patient enough to wait around a while, though, they'll enjoy a hilariously funny motor boat race with Monty at the wheel of a speed boat which he knows nothing about. They've pocketed this race with a fine lot of gags, original and amusing and it brings the piece to a swing finish. It is a pity some of this speed couldn't have been injected into the early reels.

The plot concerns the efforts of Monty to interest a rich man in a life saving belt, his own invention. Monty arrives at Ryan's home during a party and through some mix-up he's announced as Bordino, the great motor boat racer. Monty is forced to race Ryan's speed boat. After a wild ride, and through no fault of his own, Monty wins the race, Ryan's daughter as well, and sells his patent in the bargain.

Box Office Angle ... If they could manage to speed up the first few reels and eliminate some occasional overdone slapstick this ought to come through in much better shape.

Exploitation ... Motor boat race with Monty Banks on his hair-raising ride will get them interested. Run a trailer showing bits of this sequence. It has thrills and laughs, too.

Direction ... Albert Austin and Gilbert W. Pratt; haven't distributed the laughs evenly.

Authors ... Monty Banks, Herman Raymaker, Clyde Bruckman.

Scenario ... Monty Banks, Herman Raymaker, Clyde Bruckman.

Cameramen ... James Diamond Lee Garmes, Donny McGill.

Photography ... Fair

Locale ... Coast town

Length ... 5,400 feet

FILM DAILY

"Keep Smiling"—with Monte Banks
(Astd Exh., Fall release; 5400 ft.; 62 to 77 min.)

This is a combination of farce and melodrama, and an entertaining one. Its entertaining features are, however, mostly thrills. These are caused by motor-boat races, mostly by the hero. The danger of colliding with some object and smashing his boat and himself to pieces. In most of these scenes the spectator is held breathless. As little comedy is created by the awkwardness of the hero a fishing-village boy, when he finds himself in society. The direction is good. So is the acting of all, particularly of Monte Banks, he is consistent all the way through in the role of a rube—

The hero grows up to hate the water, because his father, a sailor, had been drowned at sea. He is determined to invent a life belt that will work unfailingly under all conditions. He succeeds, but as he has no money for financing it, he secures a letter of introduction to a wealthy shipping magnate. His letter of introduction gets mixed up with that of a famous motor boat racer, and the hero is taken for the famous racer. He makes ready to leave the wealthy man's mansion secretly, when he is spied by the wealthy man's daughter (heroine), whose life he had once saved, and is held back. The heroine expresses the hope that he will win the race. The hero takes lessons in motor boat running. On the appointed day the hero loses his nerves, but his antagonist, seeing a chance to make the wealthy man lose the race and thus win the heroine's hand, detains the hero and forces him to run the race. But luck is with the hero and he wins the race, and the girl.

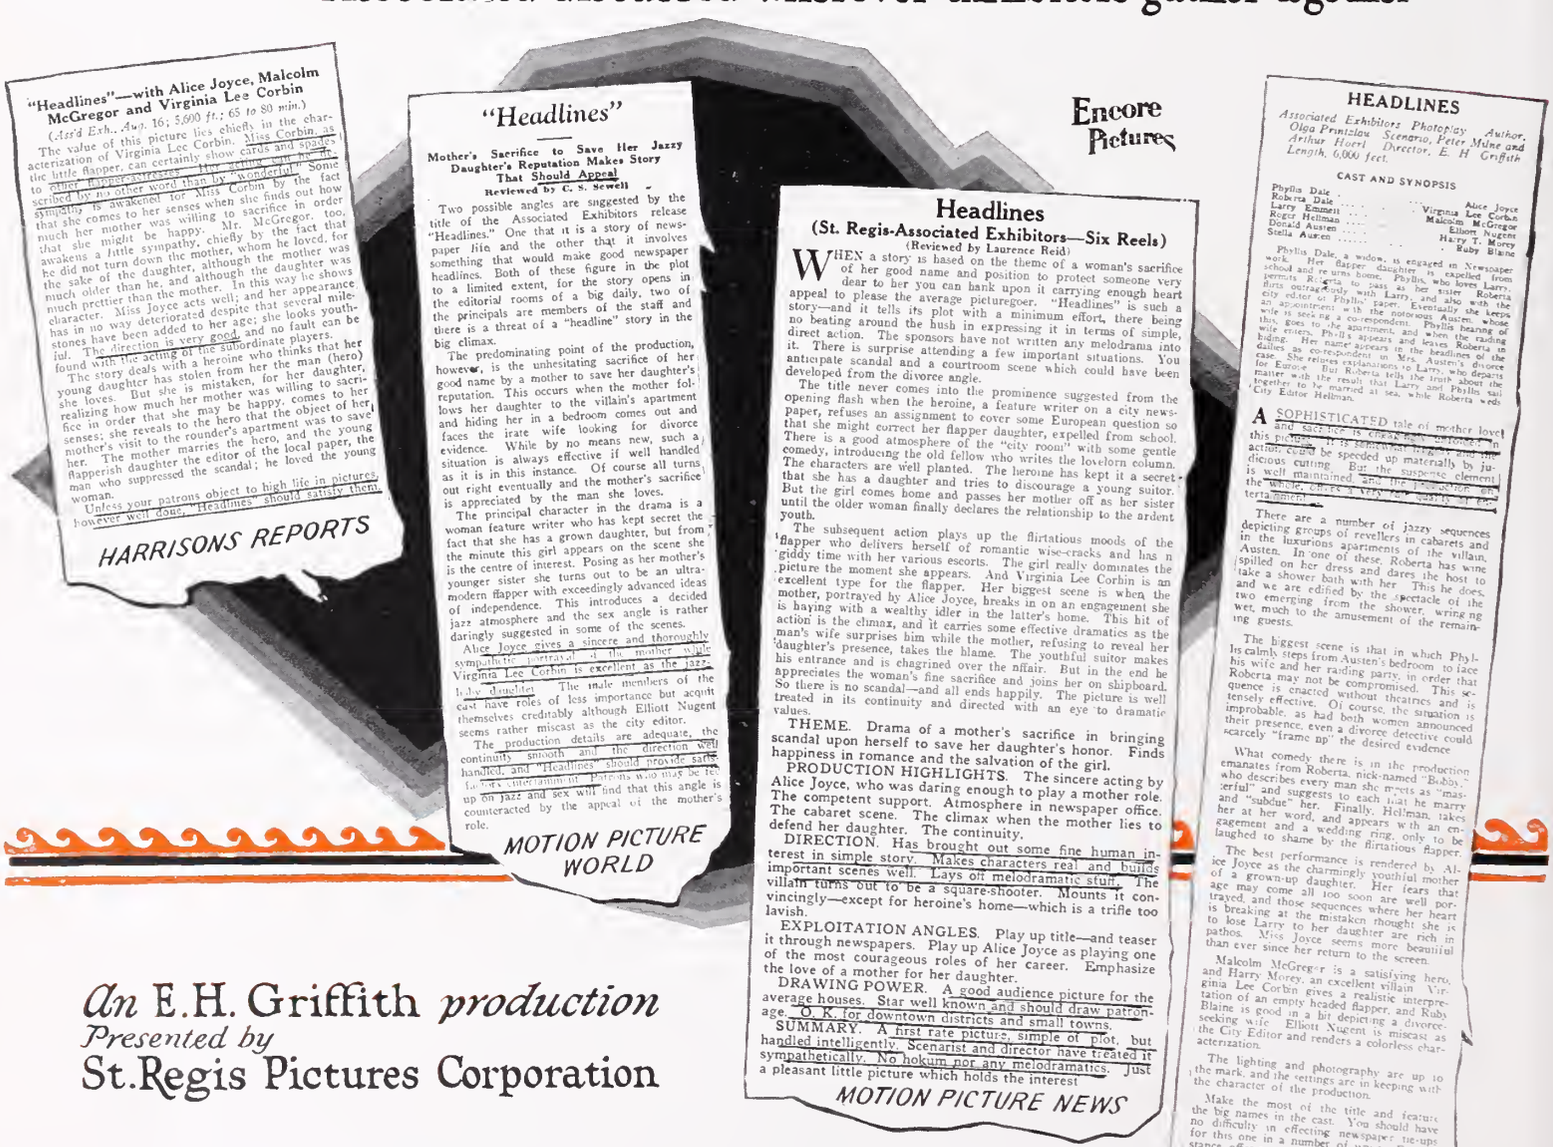
"Headlines"

Another one of the truly big pictures that are making Associated discussed wherever exhibitors gather together



"Headlines"—with Alice Joyce, Malcolm McGregor and Virginia Lee Corbin
(Ass'd Exh., Aug. 16; 5,900 ft.; 65 to 80 min.)
The value of this picture lies chiefly in the characterization of Virginia Lee Corbin. Miss Corbin as the little flapper, can certainly show cards and spades to other flapper stressers. Her acting with a scribed by no other word than by Wonderful! Some sympathy is awakened for Miss Corbin by the fact that she comes to her senses when she finds out how much her mother was willing to sacrifice in order that she might be happy. Mr. McGregor, too, awakens a little sympathy, chiefly by the fact that he did not turn down the mother, whom he loved, for the sake of the daughter, although the mother was much prettier than he, and although the daughter was much older than the mother. In this way he shows character. Miss Joyce acts well; and her appearance has in no way deteriorated despite that several milestones have been added to her age; she looks youthful. The direction is very good, and no fault can be found with the acting of the subordinate players.
The story deals with a heroine who thinks that her young daughter has stolen from her the man (hero) she loves. But she is mistaken, for her daughter, realizing how much her mother was willing to sacrifice in order that she may be happy, comes to her senses; she reveals to the rounder's apartment was to save her. The mother marries the hero, and the young flapperish daughter the editor of the local paper, the man who suppressed the scandal; he loved the young woman.
Unless your patrons object to high life in pictures, however well done, "Headlines" should satisfy them.
HARRISONS REPORTS

"Headlines"
Mother's Sacrifice to Save Her Jazzy Daughter's Reputation Makes Story That Should Appeal
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell
Two possible angles are suggested by the title of the Associated Exhibitors release "Headlines." One that it is a story of newspaper life and the other that it involves something that would make good newspaper headlines. Both of these figure in the plot to a limited extent, for the story opens in the editorial rooms of a big daily, two of the principals are members of the staff and there is a threat of a "headline" story in the big climax.
The predominating point of the production, however, is the unhesitating sacrifice of her good name by a mother to save her daughter's reputation. This occurs when the mother follows her daughter to the villain's apartment and hiding her in a bedroom comes out and faces the irate wife looking for divorce evidence. While by no means new, such a situation is always effective if well handled as it is in this instance. Of course all turns out right eventually and the mother's sacrifice is appreciated by the man she loves.
The principal character in the drama is a woman feature writer who has kept secret the fact that she has a grown daughter, but from the minute this girl appears on the scene she is the centre of interest. Posing as her mother's younger sister she turns out to be an ultra-modern flapper with exceedingly advanced ideas of independence. This introduces a decided jazz atmosphere and the sex angle is rather daringly suggested in some of the scenes.
Alice Joyce gives a sincere and thoroughly sympathetic portrayal of the mother while Virginia Lee Corbin is excellent as the jazzy baby daughter. The male members of the cast have roles of less importance but acquit themselves creditably although Elliott Nugent seems rather miscast as the city editor.
The production details are adequate, the continuity smooth and the direction well handled, and "Headlines" should provide safe fare for any entertainment. Patrons who may be fed up on jazz and sex will find that this angle is counteracted by the appeal of the mother's role.

Headlines
(St. Regis-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)
WHEN a story is based on the theme of a woman's sacrifice of her good name and position to protect someone very dear to her you can bank upon it carrying enough heart appeal to please the average picturegoer. "Headlines" is such a story—and it tells its plot with a minimum effort, there being no beating around the bush in expressing it in terms of simple, direct action. The sponsors have not written any melodrama into it. There is surprise attending a few important situations. You anticipate scandal and a courtroom scene which could have been developed from the divorce angle.
The title never comes into the prominence suggested from the opening flash when the heroine, a feature writer on a city newspaper, refuses an assignment to cover some European question so that she might correct her flapper daughter, expelled from school. There is a good atmosphere of the "city room" with some gentle comedy, introducing the old fellow who writes the lovelorn column. The characters are well planted. The heroine has kept it a secret that she has a daughter and tries to discourage a young suitor. But the girl comes home and passes her mother off as her sister until the older woman finally declares the relationship to the ardent youth.
The subsequent action plays up the flirtatious moods of the flapper who delivers herself of romantic wise-cracks and has a giddy time with her various escorts. The girl really dominates the picture the moment she appears. And Virginia Lee Corbin is an excellent type for the flapper. Her biggest scene is when the mother, portrayed by Alice Joyce, breaks in on an engagement she is having with a wealthy idler in the latter's home. This bit of action is the climax, and it carries some effective dramatics as the man's wife surprises him while the mother, refusing to reveal her daughter's presence, takes the blame. The youthful suitor makes his entrance and is chagrined over the affair. But in the end he appreciates the woman's fine sacrifice and joins her on shipboard. So there is no scandal—and all ends happily. The picture is well treated in its continuity and directed with an eye to dramatic values.
THEME. Drama of a mother's sacrifice in bringing scandal upon herself to save her daughter's honor. Finds happiness in romance and the salvation of the girl.
PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The sincere acting by Alice Joyce, who was daring enough to play a mother role. The competent support. Atmosphere in newspaper office. The cabaret scene. The climax when the mother lies to defend her daughter. The continuity.
DIRECTION. Has brought out some fine human interest in simple story. Makes characters real and builds important scenes well. Lays off melodramatic stuff. The villain turns out to be a square-shooter. Mounts it convincingly—except for heroine's home—which is a trifle too lavish.
EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up title—and teaser it through newspapers. Play up Alice Joyce as playing one of the most courageous roles of her career. Emphasize the love of a mother for her daughter.
DRAWING POWER. A good audience picture for the average houses. Star well known and should draw patronage. O. K. for downtown districts and small towns.
SUMMARY. A first rate picture, simple of plot, but handled intelligently. Scenarist and director have treated it sympathetically. No hokum nor any melodramatics. Just a pleasant little picture which holds the interest

CAST AND SYNOPSIS
Phyllis Dale ..... Alice Joyce
Robert Dale ..... Virginia Lee Corbin
Larry Emmett ..... Malcolm McGregor
Roger Hellman ..... Elliott Nugent
Donald Austen ..... Harry T. Morey
Stella Austen ..... Ruby Blaine
Phyllis Dale, a widow, is engaged in Newspaper work. Her flapper daughter is expelled from school and returns home. Phyllis, who loves Larry, permits Roberta to pass as her sister. Roberta flirts outrageously with Larry, and also with the city editor of Phyllis' paper. Eventually she keeps an appointment with the notorious Austen, whose wife is seeking co-respondent. Phyllis hearing of this, goes to the apartment, and when the raiding wife enters, Phyllis appears and leaves Roberta in hiding. Her name appears in the headlines of the dailies as co-respondent in Mrs. Austen's divorce case. She refuses explanations to Larry, who departs in disgust. But Roberta tells the truth about the matter with the result that Larry and Phyllis sail together to be married at sea, while Roberta weds City Editor Hellman.
A SOPHISTICATED tale of mother love and sacrifice is presented in this picture. It is somewhat [illegible] in action, could be speeded up materially by judicious cutting. But the suspense element is well maintained and the [illegible] the whole, clears a very [illegible] entertainment.
There are a number of jazzy sequences depicting groups of revellers in cabarets and in the luxurious apartments of the villain, Austen. In one of these, Roberta has wine spilled on her dress and dares the host to take a shower bath with her. This he does, and we are edified by the spectacle of the two emerging from the shower, wringing wet, much to the amusement of the remaining guests.
The biggest scene is that in which Phyllis calmly steps from Austen's bedroom to face his wife and her raiding party, in order that Roberta may not be compromised. This sequence is enacted without theatrics and is tensely effective. Of course, the situation is improbable, as had both women announced their presence, even a divorce detective could scarcely "frame up" the desired evidence.
What comedy there is in the production emanates from Roberta, nick-named "Bobbs," who describes every man she meets as "masterful" and suggests to each that he marry and "subdue" her. Finally, Hellman, takes her at her word, and appears with an engagement and a wedding ring, only to be laughed to shame by the flirtatious flapper.
The best performance is rendered by Alice Joyce as the charmingly youthful mother of a grown-up daughter. Her fears that age may come all too soon are well portrayed, and those sequences where her heart is breaking at the mistaken thought she is to lose Larry to her daughter are rich in pathos. Miss Joyce seems more beautiful than ever since her return to the screen.
Malcolm McGregor is a satisfying hero, and Harry Morey, an excellent villain. Virginia Lee Corbin gives a realistic interpretation of an empty headed flapper, and Ruby Blaine is good in a bit depicting a divorcee-seeking wife. Elliott Nugent is miscast as the City Editor and renders a colorless characterization.
The lighting and photography are up to the mark, and the settings are in keeping with the character of the production.
Make the most of the title and feature the big names in the cast. You should have no difficulty in effecting newspaper tie-ups for this one in a number of ways. For instance, offer a pass to any citizen whose name may be spelled from the letters on the front page headlines of the paper whose cooperation you secure

"Under the Rouge"—with Tom Moore and Eileen Percy

(Astd Exhib., Oct. 18, 6038 ft., 70 to 86 min.)

A good crook melodrama. It reaches one's emotions and holds one in suspense. The scenes showing the hero in the heroine's apartment about to be arrested for the murder of the chauffeur who had given him and his pal away, are suspensive in the extreme; because the hero, though a crook, was shown to have some character, he arouses sympathy, he had protected the heroine from an unscrupulous crook . . . The most pathetic scene in the picture is the one showing the hero in the house of his dead pal's mother, out in the country, instead of telling the old woman the truth—that her son died in his arms from a bullet fired by a detective when they were caught robbing a warehouse—he tells her that he died in his arms in France, fighting bravely . . . The scenes in the country town where the hero, the heroine and the crooked side of the hero's past will become known by the treachery of the fake evangelist's aide, and the opportunity of the hero and the heroine, who had decided to go straight, of leading a quiet life will be lost. . . . The scenes showing the heroine, in an attempt to end her life, being carried down stream by the swift current and the hero rushing to her rescue, are thrilling. . . . Bruce Guerin, William V. Mong, James Mason and Chester Conklin are some of the other players in the cast. . . . It should give excellent satisfaction to those who enjoy strong melodrama.

HARRISONS REPORTS

"Under the Rouge"

Crook Story With Intense Drama, Comedy and Heart Interest Is Excellent Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

About a year ago Associated Exhibitors released "The Chechacos", the first picture filmed entirely in Alaska, thus focusing attention on Lewis H. Moomaw its producer. Now this company is offering another Moomaw production "Under the Rouge" which is of an entirely different type.

"Under the Rouge" is a story of the underworld. Its leading characters are crooks and some of its situations melodramatic, but it differs greatly from the familiar type of crook melodrama. It throws no glamour over the commission of crime and is concerned entirely with the better natures of a man and a girl whose circumstances had made them crooks.

Mr. Moomaw has succeeded in developing strong dramatic tenseness right at the outset and a sympathy for the characters despite the fact that they are not in the least ashamed of their profession. Several deft touches and original twists make the characters exceedingly human and establish intense earnestness and sincerity.

So well established is this angle that the story sustains its suspense and holds the attention despite the fact that so many new characters are continually being introduced that the theme becomes rather involved. That lack of dramatic concentration would cause the interest to waver were it not for the fact that it is over-balanced by the power of the main theme.

"Under the Rouge" has a great melodramatic climax which develops additional punch because it comes when you are sure that you are going to see old stuff. There is certainly nothing new in seeing the hero start out in a boat to rescue the heroine who is being swept through the rapids towards a waterfall, but when you see them swept over the edge of the falls and saved by grasping a tree at the waters edge there is an honest to goodness thrill.

It is along human interest lines, however, that Mr. Moomaw really shows to best advantage and makes his characters unusually convincing and appealing. In fact this is the keynote of the production. He makes you feel that Whitey, though a crook, is every inch a man, his friendship for his young pal and his devotion to the girl who is persecuted will warm your heart and there is a tremendous tug in the scene where he gives his own war medal to his pal's mother to make her believe he died a hero instead of while fleeing from the police. And an unusual and effective note is the detective who instead of hounding Whitey, aids him at every turn and urges him to go straight.

The work of the entire cast is excellent. Tom Moore and Eileen Percy have the leading roles with Eddie Phillips as the pal, James Mason as the villain, Claire DeLorez as a vamp, Mary Alden as the mother and Carmelita Geraghty as the susceptible village girl. In the role portrayed by Wm. V. Mong, that of a confidence man who turned evangelist, there is a suggestion of a "Miracle Man" theme.

This picture should please the majority and rate well above the average as a box-office attraction.

Associated Exhibitors Photoplay. Story and Scenario, A. P. Younger. Director, Lewis H. Moomaw. Length, 6,055 feet.

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Kitty	Eileen Percy
Whitey	Tom Moore
Skeeter	Eddie Phillips
Mal	James Mason
Daisy	Claire De Lorez
Martha Maynard	Mary Alden
Fred Morton	Tom Gallery
Jim Gordon	Stanley Blystone
Evelyn Maynard	Carmelita Geraghty

Whitey and Skeeter, war heroes, are now safeblowers, and Whitey is in love with Kitty, also a member of the underworld fraternity. Skeeter is killed, and Whitey is arrested because of information given the police by the skunk-like Mal, lowest of all lounge lizards. Whitey arranges with Detective Gordon, with whom he served in the war, to send Kitty to the country. Released from jail, he follows her and finds her in love with Fred Morton, a bank cashier, and living at the home of Skeeter's mother. Mal nearly succeeds in deceiving Evelyn into eloping with him. To save her Kitty discloses her own past, and Fred, overhearing, promptly breaks their engagement. Whitey saves Evelyn, gives Mal several good lickings, finds that Fred is stealing the bank's bonds, rescues Kitty from suicide, and marries her. Their decision to go straight, are have found the road to happiness.

THIS is sorking good crook melodrama, replete with action, heart interest, and a wealth of dramatic situations. It is capital entertainment.

There isn't a dull moment throughout the length of the film. From the first clash between Mal and Whitey until the latter rescues Kitty from a watery grave in a close to closing sequence, there is action every minute.

Beside any number of exciting scraps, there are many moments of tenderness and not a few of pathos. Perhaps the most affecting scene in the picture is that enacted between Whitey and Mrs. Maynard. Whitey discovers a photograph of his dead pal, Skeeter, her son.

Whitey then lies like a gentleman, ascribing to Skeeter his own acts of bravery during the late European unpleasantness. From his tale it appears that Skeeter died a hero instead of being shot down by the despised cops during an attempted burglary. And as a climax, Whitey pins on the mother's bosom his own Croix de Guerre, stating that it belonged to her son.

Another appealing instant is that in which Whitey, with breaking heart, tells Kitty with a smile that he has met another girl whom he loves, in order to clear the way for her romance with Fred.

Tom Moore is at his best in these lovable crook roles, and in "Under the Rouge" he renders an outstanding performance. He smiles his way right into the hearts of his audience.

Eileen Percy is excellent as Kitty. She never overacts, and is convincing in her characterization. James Mason is finely cast in the role of a despicable lounge lizard and makes the most of his many opportunities to win the hisses that are as cheers to a villain. Martha Maynard makes a sweet mother and the rest of the cast contribute their shares to rounding out a first class picture. In minor roles special mention should be given to William V. Mong, as a peddler of post cards and religion, and Claire De Lorez as a colorful cabaret vamp.

In your exploitation make the most of an attractive title, feature the names of the leading players, and stress the crook atmosphere with handbills offering rewards for the apprehension of Whitey.

TRADE REVIEW

"Under the Rouge"

Prod.: Louis H. Moomaw Prod. Dist.: Associated Exhibitors

As a Whole.... VERY INTERESTING CROOK STORY THAT IS SPLENDIDLY ACTED AND HAS A LOT OF GOOD COMEDY RELIEF TO KEEP YOU AMUSED.

Cast.... Tom Moore delightful as the genial crook who just can't help befriending people in spite of his reputation. Splendid in the part. Eddie Phillips good as his pal, but he's killed off a bit too soon. Eileen Percy is the girl in the case. Good also. James Mason, the heavy, and others. Carmelita Geraghty, little Bruce Guerin, Mary Alden, Wm. V. Mong.

Type of Story.... Crook comedy-drama. "Under the Rouge" is a highly amusing crook theme that mixes a very reliable combination—pathos and humor—and serves it attractively through the interesting personalities of a well suited cast headed by Tom Moore, who is at his best as the genial young crook. As "Whitey" he can't stop lending a helping hand to folks any more than he can stop cracking safes. The story revolves about the character of Whitey and includes many new and interesting situations. The direction is first rate and there isn't a dull minute all the way through. It is fecetpaple good entertainment.

Story.... Whitey rescues a girl from Hawkins, another crook. He sends the girl to a farm to recuperate. While she's getting well and falling in love with a local bank clerk Whitey does time. Upon his release he goes to the girl. He loves her but keeps silent when he finds she's in love with the clerk. Hawkins happens into the same town and shows up Whitey who is now going straight and working in the local bank. At the same time Whitey discovers that the clerk has stolen funds but plans to throw suspicion on himself rather than cause the girl unhappiness by knowing that her fiance is a thief. How it works out offers a series of interesting turns and twists and is concluded with Whitey's winning the girl he has loved all the time.

Box Office Angle.... Good entertainment that should thoroughly please your folks. Theyll certainly enjoy Tom Moore's work as Whitey.

Exploitation.... You can assure them a real good entertainment in "Under the Rouge." It is a bright and amusing number that gets over some good punches and has some new angles to keep them interested. Boost Tom Moore's name and be sure to impress them with the good work he does in "Under the Rouge." Should be well worth getting them to see this one.

Under the Rouge

(Encore-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

SHAPING up as a box-office attraction of incident and action, "Under the Rouge" is a first rate crook melodrama. While it is rather involved and some situations are too vague in their treatment in that the action unfolded is glossed over considerably, but there isn't a moment that it fails to sustain the interest.

There is one scene which is given undue emphasis since one of the principal crooks is eliminated. But his death is never explained, nor is the episode clearly established. We see the two crooks in a gun battle with a chauffeur (who is killed) and a couple of cops. But after the lesser crook fades out of the picture and death scene the incident is closed. Meanwhile his pal is permitted his liberty after a few weeks in jail. Which introduces too much charity by the forces of law and order. Otherwise the plot holds up very well, allowing for some coincidence—and a few unimportant gaps.

It is a picture carrying a redemption theme worked out via romance. The crook's sweetheart longs for the peace of the country and when she arrives there she lins a mild love affair with a supposedly honest youth. The hero follows and gets a job in the local bank. But they have enemies in another set of crooks who are posing as evangelists. One of them lures the banker's wilful daughter into a near-scandal with his offer of marriage, but the hero rescues her just in time. There is a lot of incident in this introductory scenes—and plenty of it in the country episodes, which is another way of saying that the plot doesn't lack for action.

It moves briskly and presents some surprise touches as well as a fair amount of suspense. The finish showing the heroine determined to commit suicide is well executed. She has thrown away the paddle and the canoe has approached almost to the brink of the falls when the hero jumps in and saves her. Odd? Yes, but never done any better. The acting is competent.

THEME. Crook Melodrama featuring the redemption of a pair of crooks. When the girl goes to the country the youth follows—and the quiet environment and sympathetic treatment accorded them by the natives has its effect.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The convincing work by Tom Moore, Eddie Phillips, Mary Alden and others in cast. The crook incident. The attempted suicide of heroine and her rescue. Scene when hero's pal dies.

DIRECTION. Has concocted a good crook melodrama, though some of the strings could be tied better. Shows some gaps which need explaining, but in the main has constructed a box-office picture.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. This title should stimulate interest. Tie up with dealers of cosmetics. Exploit as fascinating crook story enacted by an all-star cast.

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for average houses. Cast should draw and title has magnetic quality.

SUMMARY. An entertaining crook melodrama which allowing for a few gaps is as reasonably true as any of them. It features the redemption theme—and while you may anticipate the action all the way nevertheless it contains some good incident and characterization.

Estelle Taylor and Jack Dempsey in "Manhattan Madness"
Producer: Fine Arts, Inc.
Distributor: Associated Exhibitors

As a Whole.... CERTAINLY A LIVELY ONE IF THEY LIKE THEM FAST AND FURIOUS. SHOULD BE GOOD BOX OFFICE POSSIBILITIES IN STAR COMBINATION.

Stars.... First joint appearance since their marriage. Dempsey has a long fighting sequence toward the close that should satisfy his admirers. Estelle Taylor hasn't much to do but escape pursuers.

Cast.... All unimportant. Includes George Seigman, Jane Campeau, "Bull" Montana, Jane Starr.

Type of Story.... Mystery melo.

It's a good thing this turned out to be a joke or you would be apt to wonder why they blamed the "madness" on Manhattan for madness it certainly would be to try and put over anything like this as straight stuff. But it works out that the whole rough and tumble was staged to furnish a westerner with a thrill. There's a wholesale slaughter for about two reels with at least a dozen decaths recorded. Then there is a quantity of mysterious business by way of sliding panels trap doors, trick entrances and exits and all the other mechanical devices that aid to a suspense. On top of this you have the thriving romance of the western hero who gets into all this excitement through his desire to help a lady in distress. There is also some comedy interpolations but these break in on the story abruptly and are never sufficiently amusing to warrant the interruptions. So much happens in these last reels that it would be difficult to attempt a short synopsis. It works around to a surprise finish, however, with hero discovering he was just being shown a good time by some of his friends who wanted to cure him of his pet habit of "roasting" New York. The surprise works out very well and will help to appease whatever ire they may feel for the preceding absurdities. The surprise covers it up pretty well.

Box Office Angle.... No doubt but what you'll find this a good drawing card due to the recent marriage of Dempsey and Miss Taylor. They'll want to see them co-starred in the picture.

Exploitation.... With the recent publicity acquired by the stars it should be an easy matter to get your folks in on the announce "Manhattan Madness". Their joint appearance should bring in a crowd of fans who follow up the private affairs of screen stars as closely as they do their professional careers. Men notes will be interested to know that the champion has plenty of fighting to do.

FILM DAILY

"Manhattan Madness"—with Jack Dempsey and Estelle Taylor

(Ass'd Exhibitors, Sept. 20, 5,620 ft.; 65 to 80 min.)

This is an out-and-out melodrama. And it is the kind that should find favor with all those who enjoy a rattle-headed entertainment for the reason that there is something doing all the time; there is not an idle moment anywhere in the picture. Mr. Dempsey acts surprisingly well. Miss Taylor appears charming. The direction is good, and the settings beautiful.

The story is the same one in which Douglas Fairbanks appeared several years ago—when Triangle was in existence. It deals with a cowboy who leaves his ranch to go East for the purpose of collecting money for stock he sold to the German Government. In the East he is met by many of his college chums and because he insists that the West beats New York for thrills, his friends proceed to give him real thrills. With some friend actors, they stage an affair in which the pretty heroine is made to appear as being held forcibly by some mysterious persons. She asks for his help, but just as he goes to help her she disappears behind some sliding wall, being dragged behind it by some mysterious person. Several fights are staged, in which the hero engages many persons at a time. After many thrills, his friends appear, and inform him that everything was framed for his benefit. The hero feels humiliated, but he decides to turn the tables on them; by aid of his two Western chums, he hold his friends at bay with guns, and then carries the heroine away; he had already fallen in love with her, and was angered to think that the kisses she gave him during the time he was trying to rescue her from her captors were insincere. He finds out, however, that she, too, loves him. And so they marry.

DEMPSEY FEATURE

"MANHATTAN MADNESS." Associated Exhibitors' Photoplay. Stars, Jack Dempsey, Estelle Taylor. Director, John McDermott. Length, 5,620 Feet.—Jack Dempsey, it appears, has not given up the fighting business altogether, for while the prizering has not been honored with his stalwart presence in many a moon, he is now appearing before the camera in his first feature picture. The youngsters, as well as the adults, will undoubtedly wax enthusiastic over this picture, and the name of Dempsey and Estelle Taylor will draw a large audience.

The story is woven about a man who comes out of the West convinced that the East is a pretty tame place. His friends see to it that he shall not suffer from ennui during his stay in New York, and plan a series of entertainments that keep him pretty much on the qui vive. He is kept busy trying to round up a gang of crooks who threaten his peace of mind as well as that of a girl he has met on his trip East. It all turns out to be a harmless and innocent hoax planned by his thoughtful friends. He is called upon in the course of the seven reels to stretch horizontal at least fifty antagonists and needless to say Mr. Dempsey is right at home in this role.

He is supported, if one may use such an expression in connection with a champion, by Estelle Taylor, who gives a pleasing performance. The remaining cast is satisfactory.

Manhattan Madness
(Price-Fine Arts—Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)
(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

IN looking over the market for a suitable picture for Jack Dempsey, his sponsor, Oscar Price, turned to one of Douglas Fairbanks' most popular stories, "Manhattan Madness," which was made back in the old Triangle days. The new star being an active fellow like Doug, needed an action picture. And the former vehicle was just made to order for him. It has been completely re-written and certainly affords Dempsey forty minutes of some excitement as well as the audience out front.

To the old-timers who remember the Triangle releases (they certainly haven't forgotten this one) it won't appear as much of a novelty. But a new generation of picturegoers have come along since the original. They should like it. Moreover they'll be interested in Dempsey—and that goes for the old-timers. Of course they'll all agree that it is a hokum picture which is built entirely as it is for the patrons—but the latter must belong to the new generation to profit by it.

It is well done allowing for some colorless comedy relief expressed by a pair of eccentric cowpunchers—and some repetitious incident leading up to the climax. We see Dempsey as a westerner bound for New York. He soffs at the big town—says it lacks excitement and thrills. So his friends proceed to show him his judgment is all wrong. They lure him into a mysterious house and put him through all kinds of stunts. It is planted that the friends and their hired "roughnecks" are taking it as seriously as the hero. Dempsey uses his famous left—and his equally famous right. His footwork is agile too. He plunges through trap-doors, is fired on, is forced to defend himself against a dozen men—or more. He squares accounts by kidnaping the heroine and compelling her to elope with him. The players are forced to work hard here. Dempsey has them frightened now and then. But it is easy to see that he "pulls" his punches so as not to punish them too severely.

THEME. Adventure romance of westerner who comes to New York and helittles the city. His friends surprise him with plenty of excitement.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The episodes of adventure when westerner is lured to suburban house and compelled to fight for his life. The speed of the incident.

DIRECTION. Has speeded up the episodes leading to climax, but gets off to a rather slow start. Might have dispensed with some of the comedy relief—which is not funny.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Fans should be interested in Dempsey—and his name well exploited should bring business. Also feature his wife, Estelle Taylor, who is co-starred with him. Bill as a snappy, action picture.

DRAWING POWER. Most everyone is interested in the champion and his bride. Suitable for average houses.

SUMMARY. This is a new version of the Fairbanks picture—the first being made several years ago. It affords Jack Dempsey an active role in which he has occasion to "clean up" the boys, but to anyone who saw the original there isn't any suspense.

exhibitor having a run immediately prior to that of the exhibitor named in the contract.

(d4) In the event any photoplays shall not be exhibited in a first-run theatre in the key city or exchange center in the territory embracing the theatre named in the contract within a reasonable time after its production, and within such period no definite booking therefor shall have been fixed by any such first-run theatre, then the distributor obligates itself to fix a general release date which shall be within a reasonable time after the completion of the production of the photoplay and such release date so fixed shall be deemed the release date for all purposes under this paragraph. Said photoplay shall thereupon forthwith after such date become available for exhibition under contracts, with the same force and effect as if such release date were the date of expiration of the protection period herein above in the preceding subdivision referred to.

(d5) In case the contract shall embrace a series of featured photoplays featuring a particular star or director, the exhibitor shall not be required to exhibit more than one photoplay of such series every five weeks.

(d6) So far as the same may be feasible, the distributor agrees to distribute the photoplays embraced under the contract at equal intervals apart, to the end that the exhibitor shall be enabled to exhibit such photoplays within a year at approximately equal intervals.

(d7) In the event of the failure of the distributor to make available to the exhibitor the photoplays embraced under the contract as provided herein, the exhibitor may at his option cancel the contract embracing such photoplays not made available by giving written notice of cancellation to the distributor.

(d8) If any of the photoplays specified in the contract shall be released by the distributor after the year specified in the contract, the distributor shall be obliged to deliver such photoplays to the exhibitor as though released within the year specified and the exhibitor may at his option accept such photoplays at such later period and pay for and exhibit same pursuant to the terms of the contract.

(e) In case the exhibitor shall be delayed in or prevented from performance of the contract or any part thereof by the elements, accidents, strikes, fires, court orders or Acts of God, such delay in or prevention of performance shall be excused and all damages arising therefrom are hereby expressly waived by the distributor.

In case the distributor shall be delayed or prevented from making deliveries of a photoplay or photoplays as provided in the contract by reason of accidents, elements, strikes, fires, censor rulings or an Act of God, such delay in or prevention of delivery shall be excused and all damages arising therefrom are hereby expressly waived by the exhibitor.

The distributor or the exhibitor, as the case may be, shall give prompt notice in writing to the other of the happening of any of the above mentioned contingencies, and the reasons therefor.

Denouncing Present Contract, Wisconsin Would Revise It

ABOUT 100 Badger exhibitors, attending the annual convention of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin at Milwaukee on August 25 and 26, denounced the present uniform contract as the root of all evil and took steps to have the entire system of ironing out disputes radically revised. Arbitration was the outstanding topic of the convention. It was discussed from all angles and when the two-day discussion was ended it was decided that a committee of three exhibitor members of the arbitration board arrange a conference with members of the Milwaukee Film Board of Trade in order to bring about the desired changes which are intended to spell equality.

Just how the system is to be changed was left more or less to the discretion of the conference, but it was made plain in no uncertain terms that Wisconsin exhibitors will not tolerate attempts which, it was charged, were being made to convert arbitration boards into mere collecting agencies for film exchanges.

Complaints against the existing system of arbitrating disputes were numerous, but in each case the complaint was directed entirely against evils resulting from the uniform contract and in no way against members of the board who, it was repeatedly pointed out, were doing all in their power to help the exhibitor.

The general sentiment expressed was that the hands of exhibitor members of the arbitration board were virtually tied, as long as the present uniform contract remained in effect.

The convention showed how it regarded the few complaints which have been directed against the board itself when, in a vote of confidence, it went on record as thanking members of the retiring board for the efforts put forth in behalf of exhibitors.

Fireworks which had been expected in some quarters as a result of a special invitation extended to Hannah & Martin, of Mineral Point following complaint which that firm had made regarding treatment at the hands of the board, failed to materialize because the invitation to attend the convention was not accepted. As a result, the complaint of the Mineral Point exhibitors was not even discussed.

The new arbitration committee, upon whose shoulders will fall the task of obtaining the desired equality, consists of the following: Eugene Phalen, Allis Theatre, West Allis, chairman; Andy Gutenberg, Grand, Milwaukee; Steve Bauer, Venus, Milwaukee; Herbert Welch, Iris, Milwaukee, and Al Robarge, Merrill, Wis. The latter two are alternates.

Second in importance only to the question of arbitration was the decision of the exhibitors to lend their full support and cooperation to Independents week in October.

Contrary to advance indications, the fight, which had been anticipated over the presidential post, failed to take form and Fred Seegert, of the Regent, Milwaukee, was returned to the office for the third consecutive term without opposition.

Other officers elected include the following: F. J. McWilliams, Madison, vice-president; Max Krofta, Idlehour Theatre, Milwaukee, recording secretary; Ernest Langemack, Colonial, Milwaukee, treasurer, and Phil Jacobs, Lexington, Milwaukee, sergeant-at-arms. J. H. Silliman, of the Silliman chain, Milwaukee, was named national committee man and E. W. Van Norman, Parkway, Milwaukee, was chosen a member of the executive board.

The free show evil, making serious inroads in attendance at regular theatres in the northern part of the state, came in for its share of discussion and the board of directors was instructed to investigate the matter thoroughly in an effort to see what can be done to eliminate this problem.

The convention also set the ball rolling in an effort to obtain the classification of film shipments as perishable and a committee was appointed to work towards that end with representatives of the express companies. It was pointed out that reclassification was the only way to eliminate delays in shipments which are proving costly. Those on the committee are: Charles Trampe, Phil Jacobs and Executive Secretary Henry Staab.

The report of the financial condition of the organization proved especially pleasing, it being shown that due are being paid with greater promptness than ever before, that all expenses were met during the year and that there was a gain of ten per cent in the membership ranks during 1925.

The convention departed from its usual custom somewhat when it presented a program without a single outside speaker. It was explained that it was the belief of the officers that more good could be accomplished by using the time for a free for all discussion among members and following the convention President Seegert expressed himself as well satisfied with the experiment.

The usual dinner dance also was missing this year, but in its place the Milwaukee M. P. T. O. acted as host to outside members of the state organization.

Although previous conventions have drawn a greater number of exhibitors, President Seegert declared he was well satisfied in view of the fact that the national convention had attracted many who could not make another trip to Milwaukee.

Wisconsin Business Not Up to Par

Business in Wisconsin theatrical circles, for the first six months of 1925, was approximately 25 per cent behind that during the same period in 1924, according to reports reaching Fred Seegert, president of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin. The slump was felt mostly by houses in the smaller communities of the state and in the outskirts of the large cities, the reports show.

"Too many poor pictures and an educated public that has become very critical and refuses to fall for any but the good productions," is the explanation of Seegert.

F. B. O. Branch Managers Placed on Percentage Basis

MAJOR H. C. S. THOMSON, president and managing director of Film Booking Offices announces that effective October 1, 1925, the branch managers of all the F. B. O. exchanges throughout the United States will be placed on a percentage basis for remuneration of services, in lieu of salary. Major Thomson emphatically emphasizes that the new arrangement is not a bonus plan in the commonly accepted sense of the word bonus, but is a percentage that will be earned by managers on the business that is done by each exchange.

In putting into effect this plan for percentage remuneration, F. B. O. emphasizes the personnel policy of the company—a policy of promotion from the organization. All of the company's recent appointments to managerships and within the home office have been made from the orginization itself, a policy which has met with an enthusiastic response from the men in the organization. Five members of the field sales force are now on the waiting list for managerships and will have absolute preference over new applicants. Salesmen are being recruited as well from the exchange staff instead of being selected from outside applications.

In commenting on the percentage arrangement, Major Thomson said:

"F. B. O. is moving forward at a fast pace. The organization has been built up in the past three years until today we have one of the finest selling organizations in the business. This plan of remuneration, we expect, will not only encourage the managers to the maximum sales effort, but will stabilize the organization and permanently settle the problem of remuneration. It means, on the basis of the present business, a raise for every manager in the organization.

"F. B. O.'s the second company in the industry to adopt the percentage plan of remuneration for branch managers."

FLAMES CAUSE FILM LOSSES IN KENTUCKY

Through excellent work on the part of the fire department at Lexington, Ky., the Kentucky Theatre was saved from damage, when a $75,000 fire destroyed an adjoining building, which housed an electric shop, tire shop, music store and other concerns. The fire occurred early the morning of Aug. 25.

The Bonita Theatre, at Copperhill, Ky., was destroyed by fire early the morning of Aug. 23, when the heart of the business district of the copper mine town was destroyed, causing loss of a half million dollars to property and merchandise.

Announcement of the acquisition of several others also has been made recently.

NEW EXHIBITORS' ORGANIZATION

It is reported that all Wyoming exhibitors have been invited to attend an organization meeting which will be held at Casper, within the next week. The meeting is reported to be sponsored by Carl Ray of the Carl Ray Amusement Company of Cheyenne, Wyoming. The purpose of this meeting will be to create an organization of exhibitors of all similar lines for the motion picture theatre owners' organizations throughout the country. If these plans materialize this will be the second theatre owner organization in the Denver territory, the other being the M. P. T. O. of Colorado, which has been in existence for several years.

F. B. O. officials last week appointed this live-wire sales expert to be assistant sales manager in the home office.

THREE CANADIANS IN AUTO CRASH

Three prominent moving picture theatre men of Western Canada were victims of a spectacular motor car accident a few miles from Portage la Prairie, Manitoba, recently when their car turned over three times and was demolished when the steering gear of the automobile suddenly went wrong. One of the three passengers, Henry Morton of Winnipeg, owners of no less than five houses there, was seriously injured. The two others in the car who escaped serious hurts were J. Weiner, owner of the Colonial and Regent Theatres at Winnipeg, and W. Narvey of the Capitol Theatre at Portage la Prairie.

WEST COAST BUILDING 2 MORE

West Coast Theatres, Inc. are erecting new houses at Marysville and Chico, Cal., each having a seating capacity of about 1,800. The White Theatre at Fresno has been redecerated and will be reopened with moving pictures and a season of Orpheum vaudeville. Orpheum shows will also be offered at Stockton.

FILMDOM HONORS BASEBALL PLAYER

John H. Kunsky has been named a member of the committee on entertainment for the municipal observance of the 20th anniversary of Ty Cobb's membership on the Detroit American league base ball team. The principal entertainment will be a banquet at the Hotel Book-Cadillac. The city has appropriated $1,000 with which to purchase a suitable memorial for Cobb.

"The Dark Angel"

"A great woman's picture. A great man's picture, too, at that. Yes, I guess we can say a good all around audience picture. And that only tells the half of it.

"The other half is Vilma Banky. A new face, a welcome face, and a face that before the year is out is going to be one of the stellar ones of the screen.

"There's the whole story. Two plus two makes four. Audience hokum—and we are using the word in its best showmanship sense—plus Vilma Banky makes a picture that registers straight, true, and right."—R. E. W.

Benton Building Another Theatre in Mechanicville; Open October 12

Like many a horse that has nosed his way to victory during the past month, William Benton, owner of the Congress Theatre in Saratoga Springs, with another in Plattsburg, is running true to form these days in the third that is under construction in Mechanicville. Even before Mr. Benton let the contract for the Mechanicville house, he decided that it should open on October 12, Columbus Day. And with that thought in mind, the work has progressed week after week, and the new theatre, one of the most beautiful in this part of the state, will swing open on the appointed day. August has been a big month for Mr. Benton, big in the pictures he has played, big in attendance. True, he has boosted prices for the month, when tens of thousands flock to the resort, but for thirty and fifty cents he has given such pictures as "Little Annie Rooney," "Don Q," "Sally of the Sawdust," "Graustark," "The Coast of Folly" and others, several of which in their presentation at Saratoga Springs received their world premiere. To "The Ten Commandments" goes the house record, however, for the summer, and in fact for the entire history of the house. Mr. Benton has a five-piece orchestra. His theatre is admirably situated, directly across the way from one of the large hotels.

Abe Stone, who runs the Arbor Hill Theatre in Albany, is a busy individual these days even though he has surrendered the lease of the Delaware Theatre. You see, it's this way, Abe has been commissioned by Herman Stern, local F. B. O. manager, to care for a puppy presented him by Samuel Goldstein, one of the best known exhibitors in Massachusetts.

The three fattest men on the screen—"Fat" Karr, "Tiny" Alexander and "Kewpie" Ross—in Standard Fat Men Comedies which Joe Rock is producing for F. B. O.

Not satisfied with having fished every lake and stream in the vicinity of Kingston, with a boat of tan that would do credit to a life guard, Harry Lazarus, who has one house in Kingston and is planning to build another, has now hied himself to Schroon Lake on the excuse that he needs a vacation.

With Ed Trembley looking his part in a brand new blue serge, and right out in front to greet the people, and with the ticket window framed with a couple of bouquets of gladioli, girl ushers in gray and white, and with every seat occupied, it's no wonder Moe Mark of New York and Walter Hays of Buffalo smiled with satisfaction when they glanced in at the reopened American in Troy the other day. It has been decided to run a serial on Wednesday, Thursday and Friday of each week, or at least so says the placard in the lobby.

Lew Fischer of Fort Edward has five or six theatres these days, largely because he isn't afraid to work. In shirtsleeves and wielding a broom, Mr. Fischer has been hard at it during the last week or so, getting everything in readiness to reopen the Bradly in Fort Edward, the fore part of this month. And maybe Mr. Fischer isn't as proud as a peacock of the house. And he has a perfect right, for the improvements, costing about $6,000, represent money well spent.

Someone along Film Row was unkind enough last week to suggest that Nate Robbins of Utica engage his sleeping car reservations between Utica and New York a month in advance, and three nights to the week. It seems that every time a film salesman journeys to Utica Mr. Robbins is either on his way to New York or just coming home.

Bert Griffin, who has the Lyceum in Red Hook, is a regular human dynamo. He couldn't be otherwise. In addition to running his theatre, he is employed daytimes in a chocolate manufacturing concern, runs a confectionery store, and is likewise proprietor of a dance hall and soft drink emporium. No, he is not taking a vacation this year.

Earl Flack of Potsdam is just itching these days to rejoin the ranks of exhibitors. His place was sold some few months ago and since that Mr. Flack has been driving over New York State trying to unearth a good theatre that is for sale.

John M. Gillies is to take over the Star in Salem on October 1, as L. L. Conners has definitely decided not to renew his lease at that time.

While Mrs. Robert Fonda, who runs the Grand in Scotia, is doing her booking these days in Albany, she is generally accompanied by a member of her family. Said member is just a little over a year old and is beginning to walk and naturally enough is the center of attraction around the exchanges.

A couple of hustlers, Feldman and son, have lately acquired the Lincoln in Schenectady and who, despite the difference in their ages, look like brothers. They are planning to install a new organ in their house and the son, who has been heard in Albany and Troy theatres, will preside at the console.

Harry Hellman of the Royal in Albany, owner of a beautiful summer home at Crooked Lake, is now talking of entertaining the film men of the Crystal City on some Sunday afternoon. The film men will see that Mr. Hellman does not forget his promise.

Claire Windsor, wearing a gorgeous coat in Tiffany's "Souls for Sables."

The Albany Theatre in Albany, taken over on August 31 by the Strand interests, is to be closed for two or three weeks and thoroughly renovated and redecorated. Tony Veiller, who will manage the Mark Strand in Albany, will also handle the newspaper advertising and publicity for the five houses in the Strand group.

The cat is out of the bag. Ben Apple's secret is known. The other day while Walter Roberts, manager of the Troy Theatre, was rummaging around what used to be Mr. Apple's private office at the American Theatre, he dug up a set of twelve books entitled "How to Reduce for Health, Beauty and Efficiency." Ben must have been a poor student, for he still tips the scales around 250 pounds.

Back from New York, Jake Golden of the Griswold in Troy is all set for the fall with amateur nights to prevail once a week. In connection with his Old Home Week, Mr. Golden, featuring amateurs on Thursday, played to the biggest business since last January.

Once more every exhibitor in New York State is invited to the annual outing of the Albany Film Board of Trade at Luther's Hotel on Saratoga Lake on Monday, September 14. The film salesmen, exchange managers, as well as the Albany Film Board of Trade and the Albany Zone, have the tickets.

Mrs. Francis McGraw, now the manager of the Rialto in Little Falls, made a very nice speech when the theatre was reopened a short time ago. "Slaves of Fashion" was used as the opening. Mrs. McGraw spoke from the stage.

The $250,000 theatre being erected in Ilion by Young, Whitney and Pierce, and which will accommodate 1,600 persons, will be opened on October 15 and will be known as "The Capitol" and will pattern its entertainment after the well known New York house. Mr. Whitney, who is new to the business, has a large stock farm outside of Ilion and recently received $35.000 for one prize bull.

After Charles Sesonske of the Grand in Johnstown dropped a matter of $30 at the Saratoga track the other day, he made bold to inquire of some of the exhibitors who frequent the race course how they were faring. And this is what Mr. Sesonske got in the way of an answer:

"I'm a couple of grand to the good," or "I'm three grand ahead of the game."

And that came from exhibitors whom Mr. Sesonske knows never played more than a couple of dollars on a horse. So from now on if Mr. Sesonske talks in large figures and frequently refers to "grands" he may well be pardoned.

The past week brought Bob Yates of Lake George to town, on his way to New York City to arrange his vaudeville bookings for the fall and winter. Mr. Yates has been helping his mother-in-law this summer to run her theatre, and business is said to have been top-notch.

What is described as a real community theatre is being run at Averill Park by the Faith Knitting Company, and which is handled by Manager Butler. The best pictures are shown and all the company wants to do is to make expenses and entertain their employes.

The past week found Oscar Perrin handling the Capitol in Albany, which will play burlesque the last three days of each week, an announcement that makes certain that pictures will continue at Harmanus-Bleecker Hall throughout the fall and winter. For a portion of last year burlesque held forth at the Hall, being later supplanted by pictures.

Buffalo

Plans have been made and bids called for on a new motion picture theatre which the Schine Theatrical Corporation will erect in Fairport, N. Y., and which will be named The Capitol. The house will occupy the site of the Bucher property in West avenue, which was purchased some time ago by the Schine interests. Charles E. Clark will be the manager. Mr. Clark has been associated with the Schine company for several years.

An old-time song fest was staged in the Rialto Theatre, Erie, Pa., the other night when Manager Partos arranged for slides of a number of Dixie and popular melodies. With Mrs. Partos at the piano, the audience joined heartily in the songs. The event went over so big that Mr. Partos has decided to make it a regular feature at the Rialto. This is a good idea, for community houses especially, and it puts the folks in an amiable mood for the rest of the program.

The Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., operated by Charley Hayman, reopened for the season Sunday, August 30, with "The Ten Commandments," to be followed by Harold Lloyd in "The Freshman."

Workmen are installing signs on both the north and south sides of the marquise of the New Family Theatre supplanting the signs that were installed when the theatre was reconstructed. The new signs are much larger and of the latest design. Two rows of colored border lights inclose three lines where electrically lighted letters advertising the pictures may be placed.

Frank Cruikshank of Boston has been appointed manager of the Teck Theatre, Buffalo, succeeding Edgar Healey. The Teck opens for the fall season on Labor Day. Eddie McBride, former Fox salesman, will again be in the box office.

J. C. Hilman, manager of the Peoples Theatre, Binghamton, N. Y., is the grandfather of a bouncing baby girl. That's the reason Phil Gentile of First Graphic had his pockets filled with cigars when he got in from the Southern Tier.

Janice Peters, a new screen "discovery," has her first important role in the Gotham production, "The Part Time Wife."

Canada

Manager Bert Crowe of the Capitol Theatre, Peterboro, Ontario, obtained good notice for his presentation of "Cheechacos," the Alaskan production, by inviting the general public to submit advertising displays on the feature for subsequent use in the daily newspaper. An assortment of prizes was offered for the best advertisements, details of the feature having been given by Manager Crowe in an advance newspaper announcement.

Nearly 1,000 real, live, human babies were entered in the third annual baby show which was recently staged by H. M. Thomas, manager of the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, as an extra attraction for the house. The judging was done on the stage in view of the audiences, babies of various ages and weights being shown on respective afternoons, the grand championship being awarded on the Saturday.

For years the Palace Theatre, Toronto, has had a lady orchestra, this feature having been maintained by Manager Charles Querrie as a distinctive detail of the Palace. Recently Mr. Querrie got quite a scare when he learned that Marjorie Stevens, the pretty and popular conductor of his orchestra, was to be married. Marjorie relieved his anxiety, however, by informing him that she would continue as the orchestra director. Before the ceremony came off the Palace Theatre staff gave her a wonderful kitchen shower and there were many presents besides from patrons and friends.

John Arthur of Toronto, noted as the director of presentations at the Hippodrome Theatre, has been gaining special attention with his big orchestra through a radio tie-up. Every Monday night for weeks past he has broadcast orchestral numbers and has taken advantage of these occasions to say a word about film attractions at the Hippodrome and the Regent Theatres, Toronto. During the week of August 24 Mr. Arthur staged a broadcasting stunt from the stage of the Hippodrome in plain view of the audiences with a party of artists called "Jack Arthur's Canucks," this being a stunt which was carried out during the current Toronto Industrial Exhibition.

B. J. McKilliem, former photoplay and dramatic critic of the Hamilton Herald, has been appointed manager of the Strand Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, by Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto. Mr. McKilliem succeeds H. E. Wilton, who was placed in charge of the Savoy Theatre, Hamilton, when it reopened August 17 after being dark some months.

Pete Egan, well known moving picture theatre manager of the Canadian West, has been reappointed manager of the Strand Theatre at Calgary, Alberta, after a few weeks in Winnipeg. Mr. Egan had previously made a big name for himself at the Calgary Strand, which is under the direction of Famous players.

Texas

Contracts for the construction of a new $45,000 theatre building at Lamesa, Texas, has been let to H. O. Allen and for immediate work and completion.

J. R. Rainey will open his new theatre at Clarksville, Texas, in the near future.

The Majestic Theatre at Canadian, Texas, has opened in a new, remodeled location.

All motion picture theatres, the Cameo, Liberty, Strand, People's Pearse, Green Tree and Victor, were taken over at Port Arthur, Texas, by the Jefferson Amusement Company.

The Crescent Theatre at Temple, Texas, has closed for repairs.

Nebraska

A. R. Hanson is building a new moving picture theatre, which will probably be called "The Dundee," at Forty-ninth and Dodge streets, Omaha. It is to have a capacity of 600 and will be decorated and equipped in a manner in keeping with the elite class of trade to which it will cater in that exclusive section of the city.

L. D. Hendricks has sold the Garden Theatre at Lisbon, Ia., to Gilbert Goff of Washington, Ia. Mr. Goff is just entering the moving picture game.

The Strand Theatre at Mount Vernon, Ia., has been completely overhauled this summer. A slight increase in the seating capacity has been effected by the work, and the lobby has been completely remodeled and redecorated.

The new suburban house, The North Star Theatre at Twenty-fourth and Ames avenue, opened late in August. The theatre is under the management of J. E. Kirk, owner and operator also of the Grand Theatre at Sixteenth and Locust streets.

Frank Houston has sold the Moon Theatre at Tekamah, Neb., to Frank Reinert, Jr.

Joe Smith has sold the Majestic Theatre at Fort Dodge, Ia.

R. A. Jones has sold the Hyland Theatre at Des Moines, Ia., to J. A. Veenshooten.

A. L. Hess has sold the Lyric Theatre at Yankton, S. D., to O. C. Johnson.

Pruscha & Bean have sold the Princess at Parkersburg, Ia., to W. R. Gurney.

Mr. Coons has sold the Majestic at Seymour, Ia., to A. Madison.

C. M. Corbin has sold the New Casino at Glidden, Ia., to E. Goeler.

Elmer Irwin has sold the New Theatre at Faulkner, S. D., to Levi Roberts.

M. J. Herrick has sold the Princess Theatre at Kiester, Ia., to W. Snakenberg.

Rose Blossom, recently signed Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer player, who is to appear in important forthcoming productions.

Chicago

There has been several changes made in the managers of the theatres of the Balaban & Katz circuit. Manager J. T. Knight of the Chicago Theatre will be assisted by W. Elmerman and E. O'Donnell from the Central Park Theatre where he is succeeded by A. Halperin, formerly treasurer of the Chicago. M. Turner will continue as manager of the Central Park Theatre, with Halperin as assistant. L. A. Shead continues as manager of the Roosevelt Theatre and R. L. Davis has been named as his assistant, coming from the Chicago Theatre. R. E. Crabill has joined the staff of McVickers Theatre, assisting Dave Balaban, and R. Bruder from the Tivoli Theatre has been named as second assistant manager. M. Concannon continues as manager of the Tivoli Theatre, and G. R. Fouche from the Roosevelt Theatre has been named as his assistant. E. T. Leaper has been named as manager of the new Uptown Theatre, assisted by H. W. Blair. Both were formerly with the Riveria Theatre.

Joseph Hopp, formerly managing director of the Fort Armstrong Theatre at Rock Island, Ill., and later field representative of the Illinois Exhibitors Association, will be the head of the newly organized American Theatres Corporation that will book pictures for quite a circuit of smaller houses, according to the announcement. The National Theatres Corporation, of which the Cooney Brothers are the leaders, will be a member of the circuit. The offices of the new circuit will be located in the Strauss Building on Michigan avenue.

The Riveria Theatre will be opened as a combination vaudeville and picture house on September 6 by the Orpheum Circuit and Manager Williams, coming from Minneapolis, will be in charge of the house for the circuit. This will make the corner of Broadway and Lawrence one of the liveliest in the city as the Uptown Theatre, which is on the northwest corner, and the Riveria will have a combined seating capacity of eight thousand.

Russel V. Wright has resigned as manager of the Gayety Theatre at Ottawa, Ill., and will announce his new connection in a few days.

Ben Paley has been made musical director of the Senate Theatre of the Lubliner and Trinz Circuit and Eddie House solo organist. House was guest organist at the Chicago Theatre at last Sunday noon's concert.

Polka Brothers Circuit's new house at Sycamore, Ill., is being pushed to completion by a large force of workmen and it is now expected to have it ready for opening early in the fall. Polka Brothers recently repurchased the Melrose Park Theatre which they sold a few months ago.

R. C. Williams of St. Francisville, Ill., has leased the Lyric Theatre at Flat Rock, Ill.

Michigan

Nicholas J. Pappas, proprietor of the Dawn Theatre, Hillsdale, is expending $15,000 in new fixtures and decorations for his house. A new organ is being installed at a cost of $10,000, as well as new seats and new carpets.

The latest of the Henry S. Koppin theatres was opened last week. It is the Piccadilly, situated in a new section at Livernois and Fenkell avenues. This brings the Koppin string to 24 theatres.

The Capitol Theatre's new $60,000 organ has arrived and will be installed during the next two weeks. It will be necessary for the mechanics to work mornings and nights after 11 o'clock during the next few weeks.

JACK DUFFY

Mr. Duffy, prominent character actor in Educational-Christie Comedies, is a YOUNG man who specializes and has been most successful in playing old man parts. He will be seen with Walter Hiers in the Educational-Walter Hiers comedy, "Off His Beat."

Ohio

H. S. Hurlbert, who looks after the Odeon Theatre, Canton, Ohio, is vacationing in Canada, where his family have already spent several weeks.

Tommy Davis, the jovial manager of the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, has temporarily thrown his cares to the winds and is sojourning somewhere in Kentucky, where he expects to find a much needed rest.

On the return list we find that Art Buck, manager of the Colonial Theatre, Fostoria, Ohio, is back at his desk after a month's auto trip through Yellowstone Park. William Raynor, managerial head of Read's Hippodrome, Cleveland, is also back on the job after combining business with pleasure for a short time along the Great White Way.

The Community Service Traveling Theatre, Cincinnati, which has been playing at various locations throughout the city for the past several months, has added pictures to its list of entertainment.

Ward Jackson has acquired possession of the Liberty Theatre, Geneva, Ohio, from Miller and Bly, the former owners.

Minneapolis

Special lobbies have been arranged by all Finkelstein and Ruben houses in Minneapolis and St. Paul to exploit Greater Movie Season. The lobbies are a sequel to the Greater Movie Parade last wek.

H. W. McCall, prominent Oklahoma theatre owner, has reopened the new Palace on Hennepin avenue. The theatre will play musical comedy stock, with feature pictures as added attraction.

Frank W. Burke, for the last seven years a member of the editorial staff of the Minneapolis Tribune, has joined the publicity staff of the Orpheum Circuit. Mr. Burke will handle the publicity and exploitation of the Seventh Street and Hennepin-Orpheum Theatres, Minneapolis.

Edward Furni, former Duluth Orpheum manager, succeeds Clarence S. Williams as manager of the Palace-Orpheum, St. Paul. Williams goes to Chicago to become manager of the Riviera.

Finkelstein & Ruben's new theatre at Sioux Falls, S. D., will open about January 1, it was announced at the Minneapolis offices this week.

Lovely Norma Shearer in an attractive fall coat trimmed with white fox. Miss Shearer is now playing in Victor Seastrom's "A Tower of Lies," in which she is starred with Lon Chaney. This Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the Selma Lagerlof novel, "The Emperor of Portogallia," has been adapted to the screen by Agnes Christine Johnston and is scheduled for release in mid-October.

Kansas City

Excavation began on the site at Thirty-eighth and Main streets, Kansas City, Mo., for a large suburban motion picture theatre, to be operated by the Blackstone Amusement Company, under the management of Jack Roth. The house will cost $200,000 and it is expected that its doors will open New Year's night. A 25-year lease has been obtained on the theatre by the Blackstone Amusment Company, which also operates the Isis Theatre, suburban house of Kansas City.

Just as the Orpheum Theatre, Kansas City, opened up for what is expected to be a big winter season, the fates decreed that Lawrence Lehman, manager, should be confined to his bed on account of illness. But he has assured friends that he will be on the job in three days, which is taken as being a rather short order.

Not only has Adolph Eisner, manager of the Circle Theatre, Kansas City, been able to increase patronage each week for the last six weeks, but he also has found time to make hurried trips to St. Louis, Wichita and St. Joseph in the interest of booking his "wild Indian," Chief Red Fox, as a specialty number at theatres.

The Hall Theatre, Columbia, Mo., is undergoing an extensive alteration program. Ornamental glass, reshaping and repainting of the ceiling, a new orchestra pit and a "revamped" front are the principal changes to be made.

Never has a theatre in St. Joseph, Mo., had a more auspicious opening than the new Rivoli last week. The house, owned by the Sun Amusement and Realty Company and managed by Ben Greensburg, was constructed at a cost of about $75,000 and is the most modern theatre in that city. The admission price will be adults 25 cents, children 10 cents.

"A new significant chapter in the social and business history of St. Joseph is begun, for a GOOD theatre is socially and commercially an inspiration to the community it serves," reads the opening statement on the program.

Massachusetts

The annual outing of the motion picture industry of Massachusetts took place Tuesday, August 25, at Pemberton Inn, near Boston, and was attended by more than 200 persons.

Miss Carrie Jones of the Boston First National exchange won a prize of $20, leading all other contestants for popularity. First prizes in swimming were won by George Schaefer, district manager for Famous Players at Boston, and Joseph Kennedy of the same company. Edward J. Farrell of the Metro-Goldwyn Boston exchange won the obstacle swimming race.

J. L. "Kid" Harris kept the spectators in an uproar with his burlesque of fancy diving stunts performed in the pool by Miss Alice Eldridge.

Miss Kitty Archibald of the Boston office of the M. P. T. O. A. was awarded the title of "Milk Baby" and her prize was a box of "hankies." The title was for a contest to see who could drink a pint of milk the fastest. The three-legged race for girls was won by Mildred Sweeney and Martha Ferris. In a similar contest for men the honors went to Fred Shehay, manager of the Exeter Theatre, Boston, and Jacob Lourie, head of the circuit that includes the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston.

Winners of the ball-throwing contest were Stanley Sumner of the Community Theatre at Newton and Miss Mildred Sweeney of the New England Film Board of Trade.

The judges of the various events were Nathan Yeamans, leading exhibitor of Fall River; Charles Harris, manager of B. F. Keith's Boston Theatre at Boston, and Mrs. E. V. Corbett. Ernest Horstmann of the M. P. T. O. A. was chairman of the committee in charge of the outing.

The selectmen at Ware have announced their decision that it was considered inadvisable at the present time to permit Sunday motion picture shows. They based their view on the industrial conditions in Ware and lack of immediate prospect of improvement. The group of citizens who petitioned for the Sunday shows apparently are satisfied for the present. The selectmen indicated they might reconsider the matter at some future date.

The Goldstein Brothers of Springfield may erect a large office building and theatre in that city. It is reported they have purchased a valuable piece of property for a price said to be $175,000. Samuel Goldstein, while refusing to confirm the report, admitted he and his brother, Nathan, had been interested for some time in the property in question and that he considered it an excellent location for a theatre.

The Theatrical Workers Union and other defendants of Springfield have filed a motion in the Superior Court asking that the temporary injunction against them be annulled on the ground that the status of the plaintiffs, who secured the injunction has changed since the action was brought, inasmuch as Burnham and Roberts, a partnership which owned the Rialto Theatre in Westfield has been succeeded by a foreign corporation, the Rialto, Inc. The injunction restrains the defendants from picketing the Rialto.

R. A. "Al" Somerby, general manager of the Bowdoin Square and Old Howard Theatres in Boston, is wearing the well-known happy smile these days. All this is because of the arrival of an eight-pound baby girl, who has been named Joan Evelyn Somerby.

The Goldstein Brothers, in their plans for improving the Strand Theatre in Holyoke, are seeking a permit to erect a marquee.

Wisconsin

Setting a new record for construction speed, the new Allis Theatre will open to the public in West Allis, suburb of Milwaukee, on September 4, just three months after work was begun tearing down the old showhouse on the site.

Whereas the old structure had a seating capacity of only 500, the new Allis will seat 1,000. All of the seats will be on one floor. A Barton organ, two Motiograph projecting machines and Stafford seats are included in the equipment which Eugene Phalen, owner of the theatre, has installed.

Sid Lawrence, for almost a year the manager of Saxe's million dollar Modjeska Theatre, on Milwaukee's South Side, has resigned.

Milton Harmon, for almost four years employed at Saxe's Princess as assistant manager, has been promoted to fill the vacancy.

Lawrence, it is understood, will assume the managership of an Orpheum house at Champagne, Ill.

Arkansas

C. N. Jenkins will open his new theatre at South Hot Springs, Ark., in the near future.

The Lyric Theatre at Charleston, Ark., has opened after being closed for several weeks for repairs.

The new Capitol Theatre at Paragould, Ark., will open in the near future.

R. E. Pullen will open his Airdome at Foreman, Ark., in the near future.

Kentucky

The Jacobson Amusement Company, Louisville, capital $6,000, has been chartered by Sol Jacobson, Ben Jacobson and Hyman Jacobson.

The Phoenix Amusement Company, at Lexington, Ky., has recently filed amended articles of incorporation, enlarging its corporation powers, which were rather limited as to business lines in which the concern could enter.

A newphotograph of ZaSu Pitts and the baby of which she is so justly proud. Miss Pitts has won critical acclaim for her work in the leading feminine role of Monta Bell's "Pretty Ladies," in which she plays opposite Tom Moore. Ann Pennington is featured in this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production of the Adele Rogers St. Johns story with Moore and Miss Pitts

San Francisco

George Mann, who conducts a chain of moving picture houses in Northern California, with headquarters at San Francisco, has moved his main offices from 191 Golden Gate avenue to 298 Turk street. The change was made necessary by the removal of the Producers Distributing Corporation to the Golden Gate avenue location, where it occupies the entire building. Mr. Mann recently added to his circuit by taking over the theatre at Scotia, Cal.

Horton Kahn, house manager of the California Theatre, San Francisco, recently drew a vacation and spent this on an automobile tour of the southern part of the state.

Byard Brothers have disposed of their moving picture theatre interests at Arcata, Cal., to Mrs. J. Matthew, and at Ferndale, Cal., to Mrs. J. Shaw.

The New Wasco Theatre has been opened at Wasco, Cal., by A. W. Thresher. The house has a seating capacity of 600 and is well equipped throughout.

The Crown Theatre on Union street, San Francisco, has been taken over by Joe Carrara, who for a time operated the Rex Theatre in this city.

Los Angeles

The little suburb of Southgate will have its first moving picture theatre September 4 when the new Southgate house will have its opening with a seating capacity of 300. The house will be situated on State street. While no announcement has been made thus far as to the name of the manager, it is understood that he will come from Long Beach.

The new theatre to be built by West Coast at 87th street and Vermont avenue will be completed and ready for occupancy by December, according to the announcement of R. B. Crunauer, general manager of the South Side theatres affiliated with West Coast, in charge of the theatre. The theatre will be built of reinforced concrete and steel and will seat 1,500 persons, including the 350 luxurious leather loges. The architecture will be of Spanish design.

C. L. Langley, president of the West Coast Langley theatres, is making preparations for a gala opening of the new Alexander Theatre at Glendale September 4. The new house seats 2,200 persons and Langley is planning on having a regular New York or Hollywood opening as far as class is concerned when the first picture is thrown on the screen.

Laura La Plante, the Universal star, is preparing to start work on her next picture for Universal's "White List" of better pictures.

Washington

George D. Srigley, owner of the Cameo Theatre, White Center, Wash., just a stone's throw outside the city limits, is treating patrons to first-run pictures, which he is able to book as promptly as exhibitors in other small towns. Mr. Srigley is fixing up his lobby front, which will be much improved by the addition of glass panels in the doors, glass front bulletin boards, new lighting effects, etc.

O'Keefe and Duncan, owners of the Regent and Babcock Theatres, Billings, Mont., have bought out E. J. Myrick's Myrick Theatre, changing the name to the Lyric. Ed Myrick, who is well known in the Pacific Northwest, through a number of years' experience as manager of Jensen-Von Herberg houses, before purchasing his own house, has gone East to teach in Paramount's new school for managers.

When Ray Grombacher opened with "The Desert Flower" at his Liberty Theatre, Spokane, the thermometer registered 90 degrees in the shade. So excellent had been his exploitation that a long line stood out all afternoon in the sun to get in to see the picture. Ray gave 'em the desert stuff on the outside, and cooled 'em off when he got 'em in. Capacity business was done for the entire run.

William F. Code has demonstrated that a weekly offering of vaudeville pays, when properly conducted. It was over a year ago that Mr. Code first staged four vaudeville acts one night a week at his Paramount Theatre, Seattle. Interested bystanders said Mr. Code could not maintain an even quality in his performers. In spite of predictions, however, the house is always filled to capacity on vaudeville nights. Mr. Code has plans all completed for the installation of a balcony to increase seating capacity, which was doubled last spring, by extensive remodeling. The house will not be closed for a single performance during alterations.

Manager Carl Reiter, with the reopening of the new season of Orpheum vaudeville, announced a reduction in matinee prices, exclusive of Sundays and holidays, making available 1,000 seats at 25 cents. Many of these are downstairs. There is every prospect of a brand new Orpheum theatre here before long. Marcus Heiman and Joseph Finn, president and vice-president of the Orpheum Vaudeville Circuit, were in Seattle last week and admitted that Seattle is one of the cities included in their new building program. The trip was in the nature of a tour of inspection of Orpheum theatres in the Northwest territory.

Manager Robert Bender of the Columbia Theatre is having excellent success with broadcasting of organ numbers at the luncheon and dinner hours. The Columbia is always mentioned by the announcer.

Work has begun on a new 650-seat theatre in Longview, Wash. G. W. Swope, formerly of Marysville, Cal., an experienced theatre operator, will own the house, the estimated cost of which has been named as $24,000. The house will be dressed in Chinese colorings and designs and will be called the Peek-In. It will be a popular priced family theatre, and will have five dressing rooms under the stage, equipping it to handle roadshows and vaudeville. The house will occupy a site 100 by 50 feet. It will be ready in ninety days.

Manager Johnson of the Liberty staged a Pioneer Party, tying up for the publicity with an evening paper. Many reminiscences of the old-timers who had traveled West on the first transcontinental railroad were printed, keeping up the interest in the picture, which is now in its third week to big business. Over two hundred old-timers were entertained. An excellent "Iron Horse" ballyhoo was used both in the Greater Movie Season parade and on Seattle streets throughout the engagement.

Antonio Moreno, one of the best known of screen leading men, is now in Europe for six months, during which he will play the title role in Rex Ingram's picturization of Blasco Ibanez's novel, "Mare Nostrum." Alice Terry will play the feminine leading role.

Eddie Rivers, formerly connected with the Heilig staff in Seattle, as publicity chief, is managing the Spokane American, just reopened by John Danz. The house is playing pictures and musical comedy, with one change a week.

Floyd E. Wesp is manager of the Tacoma Kay Street Theatre.

St. Louis

Since the Loew's State Theatre, Eighth and Washington avenue, St. Louis, opened August 21, 1924, there has been a distinct revival of realty holdings in that section of the city. Skouras Brothers are building their $4,500,000 Ambassador Theatre and office building at Seventh and Locust streets, the city has just completed a $1,000,000 market building on Sixth street, while the Nugent Dry Goods Company is gradually putting up a $6,000,000 department store group on Broadway and St. Charles, one block east.

The St. Louis Amusement Company is dickering for the Cinderella Theatre, 2731 Cherokee street, it has been learned. It is possible a deal will be concluded this week.

Freund Brothers own the Cinderella, Woodland and Kingsland in South St. Louis. The Cinderella has about 1,750 seats and is one of the leading show houses of that section of the city.

The St. Louis Amusement Company is said to have made a very good proposition to Freund Brothers for the lease on their theatre. The deal, however, does not affect either the Woodland or the Kingsland.

Shelbyville, Ill., votes September 3 on Sunday shows. Despite the opposition of one prominent minister local exhibitors are confident of the result.

O. W. McCutchin of Sikeston, Mo., has decided to test the state labor law under which local authorities have declined to permit him to hold Sunday shows.

On Sunday, August 23, McCutchin opened his theatre and gave a public performance. He was later arrested on a charge of violating the state law which prohibits the employment of labor on Sunday. He intends to carry the fight to the Missouri Supreme Court if necessary.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

F. B. O.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. The best Thomson to date. Played to two days' good business. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

BANDIT'S BABY. (5 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. About the best picture that Thomson has made. The horse is really wonderful, and the baby caused many laughs. A good entertainment for every class of people. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

BLOODHOUND. Star, Bob Custer. Another good Custer, as all his pictures are good for anybody that likes westerns with action. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday or as special. Draw working class, city 13,000. Admission 15-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

BROKEN LAWS. (6,413 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. A picture that will do a world of good as it has a good lesson and with it good entertainment. Three days to good business. Charles Peterson, Windsor Theatre, Hampton, Iowa.

DANGEROUS COWARD. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. This is the poorest Fred Thomson picture I have ever played. If you have it booked, say no more about it. Fair tone. Appeal 50 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw town and farm class, town 400. Admission 10-25, 15-35. A. H. Higley, Rushmore Theatre (260 seats), Rushmore, Minnesota.

JIMMIE'S MILLIONS. (5,767 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Just another of those good Talmadges. Good tone. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw conservative class, city 23,500. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

LADY ROBINHOOD. (5,560 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. My favorite star. May they all be as good, as I am commencing to bet a hundred per cent. in this neck of the woods with this star's pictures. Evelyn, if you will give us more as good as this one, everybody in this community will be an Evelyn Brent fan. Tone O. K. Oodles of appeal. Yes for Sunday. As special—yep! Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

LOVE'S BARGAIN. (6,000 feet). Star, Marjorie Daw. A program show with a different twist at the end from the average run of shows. Good tone, fair appeal. Not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

MIDNIGHT MOLLY. (6,000 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. This was a better picture than "Silk Stocking Sal." Brother exhibitors will not make a mistake in playing these two pictures; they pleased my patrons so much I contracted for the rest. J. E. Dowling, Ark Theatre, Logansport, Indiana.

NAPOLEON AND JOSEPHINE. Star cast. A good show, but not the kind for most small town audiences. It is too high class and has not much action. It has a foreign cast which is fair. Good tone. Fair appeal. Maybe for special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

ON THE STROKE OF THREE. (6,757 feet). This is the first time I have ever written a report of this type, but I cannot keep still on this picture and if all the F. B. O. product is like this one I will be more than pleased. The film was in A. 1. shape. The picture deserves better paper as it is surely a knockout; a feature from every point of view. I had ever so many leave my place and say, "It is the best picture I have seen in a long time." That always makes an exhibitor feel good and I just felt like passing it along. Martin Theatre, Villisca, Iowa.

ON TIME. (6,030 feet). Star, Richard Talmadge. Good entertainment for audience that likes action and excitement. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

RICHARD TALMADGE PICTURES. They do well with us. He needs better stories. Just stunts are not good enough, if his popularity is to continue. E. A. McKibbin, West End Theatre, Belfast, Ireland.

SCAR HANAN. Star, Yakima Canutt. A very good western. Tone, O. K. Appeal, good. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw mixed class, town 1,500. Admission 10-25. John McGill, Community Theatre (500 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

SILK STOCKING SAL. (5,367 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. Another good picture from this star, who is fast growing popular. Evelyn sure knows her stuff. Print good. Good tone and very good appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SPIRIT OF THE U. S. A. (8,312 feet). At one time this was a great picture—but the PRINT WE GOT had so many misframes in it it spoiled the show. Good tone. Appeal, with good print, a hundred per cent. In such a case, yes for Sunday and as special. Firkins and Laws, Crystal Theatre, Moravia, Iowa.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. This was not as well liked as the previous Thomson's. Business only fair. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre, Easton, Pennsylvania.

THAT DEVIL QUEMADO. (4,720 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fine stuff. Some comedy, which was good: two good scraps; fast riding, and good love story. My patrons ate it up. About the best of the Fred Thompsons I have shown. Wish I could get more pictures like this one for my Saturday crowds. Lots of good comments on this. Fine prints and dandy photography. Good settings. F. H. Miller, Dayton Theatre, Dayton, Pennsylvania.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,913 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Good western that drew below average Saturday night crowd. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (5,280 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. Fred and Silver in another humdinger of a picture; if this don't knock the hardboiled movie fan in the creek it can't be done, as my bunch sure like Fred and Silver. While this one, in my opinion, may not register quite as good as "Bandit's Baby" it is a real picture just the same. In tone, for Sunday and as special, yes. Appeal 100 per cent. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

First National

AS MAN DESIRES. (7,650 feet). Star, Milton Sills. This is a good program picture that is two reels too long; however, it has the things your average crowd is looking for and will please them. Not big enough to stir anything up about, though, so don't go after it in such a manner. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No as special. Draw from industrial town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

CHICKIE. (7,000 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A good bet, even in hot weather. Ran against an open air, free band concert and did business. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw conservative class, city 23,500. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

CYTHERIA. (7,400 feet). Stars, Irene Rich, Lewis Stone. Just a little above program schedule but very interesting and worth seeing. Rental asked for this entirely too much for the size of the town. No profit for me. Good tone, fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered, town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ETERNAL CITY. (7,800 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. A very good picture that should entertain a great majority of people. Picture seems to come to a conclusion with a clinch and fade-out and our people started to leave but waited for two more reels. Watch your print. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. Mixed class, town of 3,500. Admission 15-30. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

FLOWING GOLD. (8,005 feet). Star, Milton Sills. An extra good picture that will please any place. Acting good and a good story. Tone, fair. Sunday, no. Special, no. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

FURY. (8,709 feet). Stars, Richard Barthelmess, Dorothy Gish. A story of the high seas, and far above in interest and merit the usual picture of this sort. It's different. Of course, with these two stars, any picture would be good and this is no exception. It is a fine screen entertainment and has a punch in more senses than one and better than "Tol'able David" and with as great an appeal. Dick as the boy adds to his laurels and Dorothy as Minnie the Waif is a treat. Tyrone Power as the Skipper plays a wonderful role. Get it by all means. Draw city and country class, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

GIRL IN THE LIMOUSINE. (5,630 feet). Star, Larry Semon. We have played lots of Semon comedies, and this one drew large crowds and pleased all who came. Draw small town class, town 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

HEART OF A SIREN. (6,705 feet). Star, Barbara La Marr. Was disappointed in picture as well as in attendance. For me not up to First National's standard. Barbara never will be popular here on account of the pictures they give her. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

HER NIGHT OF ROMANCE. (7,211 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. An average Talmadge subject that failed to draw for me. Constance Talmadge doesn't mean much here any more, for some reason. If you have played her pictures you know what to expect from this one as it is neither any better nor any worse than her average. Fair tone. Appeal 75 per cent. No as special. Draw from industrial town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

HIS SUPREME MOMENT. (6,565 feet). Stars, Sweet, Colman. Pulled exceptionally well, despite very hot weather. Had numerous favorable comments; no kicks. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. G. M. Pedley, Empress Theatre (750 seats), Owensboro, Kentucky.

INEZ FROM HOLLYWOOD. Star, Anna Q. Nilsson. Lots of tears and other "sob stuff." Good acting. Didn't appeal to the masses. Tone O. K. Appeal 50 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

LILIES OF THE FIELD. (8,500 feet). Stars, Conway Tearle, Corinne Griffith. One of the finest pictures we have ever run. Yes for Sunday and special. Appeal 99 per cent. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

MARRIAGE WHIRL. (7,672 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. Pretty jazzy, and lots of drinking, but a good picture of its kind. Pleased about fifty per cent. here. Not much tone. Fair appeal. No for Sunday. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

MY SON. (6,582 feet). Star, Alla Nazimova. A fine picture that will please all who see it; however, not so strong at the box office. Star doesn't mean much any more. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday. Draw from industrial town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

SCARLET LILY. Star, Katherine McDonald. A very good program picture. Has several pretty scenes in it. No great amount of action but is a fair story that will get by. Reels good. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Town and country class, town of 700. Admission 10-20. W. F. Denney, Electric Theatre (250 seats), Lowry City, Missouri.

SILENT WATCHER. (7,576 feet), Very good entertainment and action. Not good for children. Hardly a Sunday picture. Draw from small town and country community. James Neste, Rialto Theatre, Lake Mills, Iowa.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. You've got to hand it to Colleen for her remarkable work in this one. Great story that pleased all adults but not all the kids as there wasn't enough action. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, ninety per cent. High class, town of 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Many called this the best picture of months. Gave fine satisfaction. Business ordinary. Tone, O. K. Appeal, high. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw better class, city of 14,000. Admission 10-35. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

TALKER. (7,861 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Too long drawn out. Fair, that's all. Pleased some. Did not draw here. Good tone. Not much appeal. Yes for Sunday. Fair special. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

THIEF IN PARADISE. (7,321 feet). Star, Ronald Coleman. This is one of the best pictures in weeks and will please any audience, anywhere, highbrows and lows alike. It is almost one hundred per cent. entertainment. You cannot say too much for it. Go after this one in a big way and you will be pleased with the results. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw from industrial town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Such steadfast tip-sending as the exhibitors do deserves praise.

That's why I am tickled to get a letter from an exhibitor who tells in strong terms how much this unselfish help means to him and to his theatre.

Read it, folks, on the next page; and see what one good friend thinks of your unselfish and voluntary aid.

What he says a host feel though they do not come out in so many words to tell about it.

We want to keep this dependable tip department going strong and growing stronger. You folks who are doing your share can see that it is appreciated.

There are others whose help would go far on the way to making the tips more numerous. How about starting right now?

—VAN.

WHITE MONKEY. (6,121 feet). Star, Barbara La Marr. I'd say you will disgrace your theatre forever if you should run this one. Fair tone. Audience appeal none here. No for Sunday or as special. Draw all classes, city 12,000. Admission 10-20. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A crackerjack western and as good a picture as Jones has ever made. Pleased everyone, western fans and all the rest. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star, Reed Howes. Plenty of comedy and thrills in this one. Went good in our towns. We need more like this. Tone O. K. Appeal practically a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

FOX PICTURES. Wish I could see one good Fox special! Tom Mix and Jones O. K. That's all, here, Fox has. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Four days to only fair business. Our regular patrons didn't come to see this one. They are tired of race track stories. Draw general patronage, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

GOLD HEELS. (6,020 feet). Star cast. Just a good program picture sold to me as a special. See one race horse picture and you see them all. Print fair. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star cast includes Hobart Bosworth. This is a real picture: the only trouble I had, they would not turn out. They took one look at the title and the advertising (?) that Fox put out, turned up their noses and passed me by. Tone, appeal and for Sunday, yes. No as special. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

IN LOVE WITH LOVE. (5,677 feet). Star cast. For me, rotten—not even a program picture. Tone none. Appeal, for Sunday and as special, no. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. A fairly good adaptation of the novel by Zane Grey. No complaint to make. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw farmers and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This is a knockout from the box office and one of the best subjects Mix ever appeared in. Good star and title, backed by a fine story and a good production, make it one of the best pictures I have had in months. Go the limit on this one. Fair tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw from industrial town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

LAST OF THE DUANES. (6,942 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This is the best one that Mix has made in a long time. A real western that should please anywhere. Plenty of action and no hokum stuff to it. Play this one and it will please everyone. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw railroad and farm class, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

TRAIL RIDER. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Good picture. Mr. Fox, your westerns and comedies are all O. K. but your specials here don't draw and that's why for me they're no good. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

Metro-Goldwyn

CHEAPER TO MARRY. (5,921 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Print good. Worst picture that I have shown in my ten years' experience. People walked out. No more. Appeal very poor. No for Sunday and by no means as special. M. J. Daly, Liberty Theatre (1,000 seats), Hartford, Connecticut.

GREED. Star cast. Played this four days to good business. It pleased about half of our patrons. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

GREEN GODDESS. (9,100 feet). Star, George Arliss. Too high class. Did not please. E. A. McKibbin, West End Theatre, Belfast, Ireland.

HIS HOUR. (6,300 feet). Star cast. Very good picture that pleased nearly everyone. Perhaps a few men didn't care for it, but the women did and they are the ones who do the most boosting. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

LITTLE OLD NEW YORK. (10,000 feet). Star, Marion Davies. This is a most interesting story of the early days of New York city, this period faithfully transferred to the screen, with an historical cast of characters true to life of John Jacob Astor dealing in real estate, Cornelius Vanderbilt and his Staten Island ferry, Delmonico, the young caterer, Washington Irving, the novelist, and Robert Fulton, with his new invention, the Clermont, steaming up the Hudson River. Marion Davies masquerading as Patrick O'Day, an impudent Irish lad, is a fine performance, and her jig in the prize ring is a peach. This movie should fill every house from coast to coast and is not only enjoyable but a splendid picture of little old New York as well. Draw town and country class, town 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

bad. No for Sunday or special. Draw conservative class, city 23,500. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

SCARAMOUCHE. (9,600 feet). All star cast, includes Alice Terry. A romantic and historical story of the French Revolution with colossal mob scenes and revolutionary uprisings and contrasts between the palatial homes of the aristocrats and the dirty hovels of the starving rabble and the causes that started the fires of the Reign of Terror and the downfall of the French nobility. A big picture by Rex Ingram, almost as good as "The Four Horsemen" with a superb cast including Alice Terry, Ramon Novarro, Lewis Stone and George Selgmann. If your people like quality, get this one. A most artistic production in every detail. Draw city and country class, town 3,000. Admission 20-50. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

Paramount

CONFIDENCE MAN. (6,500 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Good picture of the crook type, which seemed to please eighty per cent. Small town class, town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

CROWDED HOUR. (6,508 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Did not get to see this one but it did a nice business and pleased those who saw it. Bebe Daniels seems to be coming back again. Tone O. K. Good appeal. No as special. Draw all classes, small town of 3,000. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

EVE'S SECRET. (6,208 feet). Star, Betty Compson. This is a good picture. Nothing heavy and nothing outstanding but nothing to be ashamed of. Tone and for Sunday O. K. No as special. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Le Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

EVE'S SECRET. (6,225 feet). Stars, Betty Compson, Jack Holt. Jack Holt always a drawing card. Fair tone. No as special. Draw general class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smooths, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

FIGHTING COWARD. (6,501 feet). Star cast. A dandy picture. Well liked here although costume type. Tone, okay. Special, no. Good audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

HER LOVE STORY. (6,736 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Didn't do as well as most of her pictures do with us. Maybe hot weather; maybe too much foreign uniforms—who knows? Draw all kinds, city 100,000. Admission 10-20. S. H. Borisky, American and Royal Theatres, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,883 feet). Zane Grey story. This is a very fine western. It has a story and beauty of scenery, dramatic action and a lot of life. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday and as special. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS. (6,850 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Zane Grey special. Very good. Pleased a hundred per cent. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,650. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LILY OF THE DUST. (6,811 feet). Star, Pola Negri. This seemed to give general satisfaction but, like all Negri pictures, failed to draw them in. She is no good for us. Fair tone. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday, hardly as special. Draw better class, city 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (700 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is full of action and comedy and makes a good program. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

LOCKED DOORS. (6,621 feet). Star, Theodore Roberts. This is the worst Betty Compson ever made; absolutely nothing to it. Also, film rental too high. Theo. Roberts' acting held it up here. If they keep this kind up—MINE will be Locked Doors! Good tone. Appeal 50 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw railroad and farm class, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

LOST—A WIFE. (6,420 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Just another strip of celluloid. Poor tone. Audience appeal here none. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, city 12,000. Admission 10-20. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

MADAME SANS GENE. (9,904 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. A real show, but one that positively must be seen by all audiences from the very start or they'll pan it. Bill it a ten-act comedy drama. Tone, O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw family and student class, town 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Did well and picture pleased. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Draw all kinds, city of 100,000. Admission 10-20. S. H. Borisky, American and Royal Theatres, Chattanooga, Tennessee.

MANICURE GIRL. (5,959 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A pleasing picture that will keep audience in good spirit. Had good comedy touches. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Fair audience appeal. Better class and ranchers. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MARRY ME. (5,526 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. A small town comedy drama. Ran it on prize night and came out okay. Print good as all Paramount prints are. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. Better class and ranchers. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MARRY ME. (5,526 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Patrons well pleased. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

MARRY ME. Star, Dorothy Devore. Very fine picture, well produced and directed and appealing to the better class. It is a James Cruze production, which means a lot. My audience liked it. The price, however, was fifty per cent. too high. Tone, good. Sunday, no. Special, yes. Appeal, seventy-five per cent. All classes town of 6,000. Admission 10-20-30. Frank H. Wotton, Park Theatre (600 seats), Lebanon, New Hampshire.

MEN. (6,564 feet). Star, Pola Negri. This show came to us half gone: several of the reels were about half full, which we believe accounts for patrons howling about skips in the show. No tone. No for Sunday or special. Draw small town class, town 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. A good program picture. Meighan is good, as usual, but the support is not so great. The book is well known and it will draw well on account of this. Your crowd won't rave over it, but won't be disappointed. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer class, town 412. Admission 10-25. John C. Leveck, Benoit Auditorium (100 seats), Benoit, Mississippi.

NEW LIVES FOR OLD. (6,796 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Just fair: nothing to get excited over. Fair tone. Appeal none here. No for Sunday or as special. Draw all classes, city 12,000. Admission 10-20. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Played two days to very poor business. We struck a hot spell but we did extra advertising and did not get them in. A very unsatisfactory showing. Good tone. Special, yes. Appeal, good. Better class town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

NORTH OF 36. (7,908 feet). Star cast. Using the gauge habitually applied, it is fully as good as "Covered Wagon." In territory like ours, most people drive to County Seat towns to see specials like this, so that they do not draw much more patronage than average features, when price permits the smaller towns to run them. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. All star cast. Very fine production. A miserable failure at the box office. Failed to make expenses after the biggest advertising campaign ever attempted here. Fine tone. Can't tell appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

THUNDERING HERD. (7,187 feet). Star cast. Here is a picture equal to "The Covered Wagon" and "North of 36" only instead of droves of steers you have a thundering herd of buffaloes, and real Indians. It is a wonderful piece of camera work—how do they do it? It's marvellous. The story is full of thrills of the days of 1876 up in Montana and Wyoming, and the plot is excellent, finely interpreted by Jack Holt and Lois Wilson and Noah Beery and Raymond Hatton. If you want for your patrons a picture on a gigantic scale of the pioneer days of American history, get this one. Draw from tourist city of 3,000. Admission on this 20-50. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

Pathe

PERCY. (5 reels). Star, Charles Ray. A dandy Ray show. Murray as "Holy Joe" was a scream. Plenty of good clean laughs in this show. Did extra advertising on this but did not get it back. Good tone—a family picture. Good appeal, not a special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

What Ireland Thinks of Your Tips

"Dean Van: I have wanted for a long time to ask you to convey to the American exhibitors in your paper my most sincere and heartfelt thanks for the splendid help I receive from their Straight From the Shoulder reports.

"I depend on them much more in booking pictures than on the reviews: I find that the same picture that appeals to your small town exhibitor in America in nearly all cases appeals equally to the working class audience in the districts in which our houses (four in number) are situated.

"Your exhibitors have a wonderful way of conveying in a few words exactly the information most useful to a fellow exhibitor.

"I enclose reports of a few pictures that have done well with us.

"With sincere thanks for your very practical help, yours sincerely, E. A. McKibbin, West Side Theatre, Belfast, Ireland."

Is It This Way With You?

"Dear Gang:—I have had it on my mind for several days that I should be sending along some tips . . . so here they are.

"I am wondering just how business is in small towns, as a whole; I find that it is harder every year to get them in, and yet to the best of my ability I try to select pictures that will have sufficient variety and entertainment to please the majority. (I have found out that no picture would really please every one.)

"There are so many good pictures on the market now, and prices are as near a happy medium as they have been since I started in my small way—it seems that houses ought to make money every night; but that is where you turn on the sob stuff. They don't! (Mine, I mean.)

"Summer is here now, and business is much better than earlier in the season, but I could seat a few more natives if I had the chance.

"Your department has surely been a help to me. I find it better to show older releases that are reported good by the majority, than to buy newer stuff that is doubtful to the B. O. and the public.

"It is too bad that more readers of Moving Picture World who, if they were honest enough to admit it, turn first to Straight From the Shoulder, when the paper comes, do not reciprocate by sending in their estimate of the pictures they are showing in their houses."—Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

HER OWN FREE WILL. (6 reels). Star, Helene Chadwick. Very tame; too slow for our patronage; they want and need pep. Fair tone. Appeal 50 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw middle and working class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (360 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

HOLD YOUR BREATH. (5 reels). Star, Dorothy Devore. Don't let them kid you that it's as good as "Safety Last." Very good little picture that will please. Tone O. K. Appeal 74 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

HOUSE OF YOUTH. (6,650 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Very good, entertaining picture, which seemed to please all. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3.500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

RAMSHACKLE HOUSE. (6,287 feet). Very good. Audience liked it very well. A first class picture for any house. You're not taking any chances on this one. William Dabb, Lyric Theatre, Shenandoah, Pennsylvania.

ROARING RAILS. (5,753 feet). Star, Harry Carey. I did not care for this picture myself, but our folks were delighted with it. In very warm weather it pulled up our house and did three excellent days' business. Pushed it on the recommendation of reports from a mining town. E. A. McKibbin, West End Theatre, Belfast, Ireland.

TRIGGER FINGERS. (4,775 feet). Star, Bob Custer. Bob is getting better and better. He will soon be where he is an A-One drawing card for me. This one is a knock-down, drag-out western. It will please all your western fans. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw railroad and farm class, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

Universal

RIDIN' PRETTY. Star, William Desmond. This is a fair program picture. Have run better ones than this with same star. I run two reel Keaton comedy last to help out and to satisfy them. Appeal 75 per cent. No for Sunday or special. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre (180 seats), Kadoka (town 200), South Dakota.

SADDLE HAWK. (4,419 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Somebody, somewhere, went to sleep when this picture was being made and did not wake up until it was very nearly over, as it has not got the action that Gibson fans look for. Yes as to tone. Some appeal. No as special. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,500 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Pleased about everyone. A good picture for small town theatres. Gibson is popular here. Tone O. K. Appeal practically a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

SAWDUST TRAIL. (5,500 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. I overheard one ardent Gibson fan proclaim it best Hoot film ever done. All the western stuff is done inside a wild west show, and Hoot's transformation from a tenderfoot to a real He-Man is highly entertaining comedy. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

SIGNAL TOWER. (6,714 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. We had a good many patrons to see this show a second time—which proves that it's a crackerjack. Tone, and for Sunday, O. K. No as special. Draw small town class, town, 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

SMOULDERING FIRES. Star cast. Went after this one strong; result, standing room only, and the beauty of it was they went away well satisfied as this is a wonderful picture. Appeal 100 per cent. Tone, for Sunday and as special, yes. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

STORM DAUGHTER. (5,302 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. This is a dandy program picture. This is a great sea thriller. Have played several Dean pictures before, always drawing good crowd. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre (190 seats), Kadoka, South Dakota.

TAMING THE WEST. (5,304 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Two days to satisfactory business. Picture was well liked. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

UP THE LADDER. (5,922 feet). Star, Virginia Valli. This is a pip of a picture, showing what a red headed woman can do. A dandy, but sorry to say did not make film rent on it; if some of these advertising experts would only get wise to themselves and stop putting out posters showing the shero and hero clinched in a loving kiss, and fond embrace!!! Such posters are driving patrons from the theatre. As soon as the average theatre or movie fan spots one of these so-called posters he decides that it is one of these "sassiety (?)" and loving sheik stories and beats it over to the next village where they are showing, and displaying a poster giving the adventures of Dead-Eye Dick or some other desperate character, and gives that gentleman his two bits. Tone good. Appeal—you bet! Yes for Sunday and special. Draw from small town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

WESTERN WALLOP. Star, Jack Hoxie. Below the average, as all the Hoxies have been so far this season. Tone O. K. Small appeal. No for Sunday or as special. Draw farmers and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

Vitagraph

BAREE, SON OF KAZAN. (6,988 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Was rather disappointed in this picture. Stewart was good but didn't seem to show up so well as in society. Tone, good. Sunday, yes. Special, no. Average audience appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

FEARBOUND. Star cast. Good picture but somehow it didn't get anything extra. Good fighting toward the last as you ever see. Special, no. Poor appeal. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

HAPPY WARRIOR. (7,885 feet). Star cast. Good program picture. Holds the interest from start to finish. Tone, okay. Special, no. Appeal, below the average. Small town class town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (315 seats), Greenfield. Tennessee.

SANTE FE PETE. Star, Pete Morrison. Not much to it; but westerns go over for me. Fair tone. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw working class, city 13,000. Admission 15-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

STEELE OF THE ROYAL MOUNTED. (5,700 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. This is good enough for anybody. We had lots of good comments on this picture. Tone, and for Sunday, O. K. No as special. Draw small town class, town 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

Warner Brothers

THIS WOMAN. Star, Irene Rich. "Very good entertainment" was the general opinion. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

Comedies

BLACK OXFORDS. (Pathe). This is a good comedy; in fact all of the Pathe releases are very good. Print new. Appeal good. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

COMEDIES. Mermaid (Educational) and Century (Universal) comedies have been excellent. Also Harold Lloyd and Larry Semon very popular. The latter have gone off lately. E. A. McKibbin, West End Theatre, Belfast, Ireland.

FARES, PLEASE. (Educational). Star, Al St. John. This is an A-One two-reel comedy; in fact, it is a pip, a whiz knockout, or whatever you want to call it, take it from me, and deserves a report. I like to hear them laugh when I run a comedy, and they roared when I ran this one. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

KID SPEED (Educational). Star, Larry Semon. This was great and brought the youngsters out in droves to see him (Semon), and pleased them besides. His name has a drag here. Good tone and appeal. Yes as special. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

LIGHTNING LOVE. (Vitagraph). Star, Larry Semon. Good slapstick comedy. Kept them laughing, and that is what we want. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday. Draw farmer and small town class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

MOTOR MAD. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Another Mermaid that rung the bell for us. It had plenty of laughs in it and with the feature (Ray in "Percy") it made an all-laugh program. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

SEMON 2-REEL COMEDIES. (Vitagraph). We have played nearly all these and without exception they are fine. Beat anything new we have found and think we have tried almost all the comedies. Tone and for Sunday O. K. Draw small town class, town 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

STEP LIGHTLY. (Educational). Star, Lige Conley. Lige pulled off his usual run of slapstick stunts in this one and made everybody get in good humor for the feature following. Good tone and appeal. Draw better class, town 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Angelmire, "Y" Theatre (404 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

UP ON THE FARM. (Fox). This is a real good comedy and the kind that will help a weak feature. Print new. Yes for Sunday. Very good appeal. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

Serials

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Star, Allene Ray. A fine serial that's interesting from first to last. You should buy this if you run serials; if not—buy it anyhow and try it out as I did. You can't go wrong. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

INTO THE NET. (Pathe). Where serials are popular, "Into the Net" is doing extra well with us and keeping business above average for summer. We could run more serials if they were up to this standard. Given interesting stories combined with action, and serials would again become as popular as they used to be. E. A. McKibbin, West End Theatre, Belfast, Ireland.

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Business on opening episode broke records of other serials. Now up to tenth episode and business very good. N. Levin, Victor Theatre, Steelton, Pennsylvania.

Not only in America, where a host of readers profit by your good services, but abroad as well, these dependable tips are helping exhibitors to buck the conditions that work against full houses.

If you run a feature a week or if you show six or seven, send in tips.

Report—and include your short features too. The shorter subjects often save the show.

Whatever you report—REPORT NOW!

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe). One every week for over six months and still they howl at every screening. For genuine humor and unnatural posturings there is not a better cartoon made. Henry W. Nauman, Moose Theatre (700 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

LEATHER PUSHERS. (Universal). Stars, Denny and Sullivan. While these are running our people did not inquire about the big feature, they simply asked was there an "L. P." on. Audience appeal a hundred per cent. A short-subject special—yes. E. A. McKibbin, West End Theatre, Belfast, Ireland.

STEREOSKOPIKS. (Pathe). By use of colored glasses, objects on screen take on depth and when a pie is pushed out toward audience it appears like one could just lean over and bite out a piece. It's purely a novelty—very short, and just gives people an inkling of what may be accomplished along this line. Price too high. Tone o. k. Appeal just fair. Yes for Sunday. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

Independents

ALWAYS RIDIN' TO WIN. (State Right). Star, Pete Morrison. Another case of director being asleep at the switch; not enough action and they very nearly forgot to put any comedy in it at all—and then they have the nerve to advertise it as a comedy western. Tone all right. Appeal doubtful. For Sunday, nope. As special—help! Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

BAREFOOT BOY. (C. B. C.) Star cast. A good picture. It's old, but we had several requests for it, so played it. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

FAST FIGHTING. (Artclass). Star, Buddy Roosevelt. This feature does very well, but it is not up to the rest of the series to my way of seeing it; in my opinion it is an ordinary western. Yes as to tone. Some appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

FEARLESS LOVER. Star, William Fairbanks. A good police story and Fairbanks is well liked here and goes over. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Drawing working class, city 13,000. Admission 15-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

FIGHTING SHERIFF. (State Right). Star, Bill Cody. This star is getting better every picture. This one has plenty of action and lots of comedy. Print new. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday or as special. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FIGHTING THE FLAMES. (Columbia). Two days to poor business. These shows from some Independents don't get in any money, due to poor advertising material. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

FLATTERY. (State Right). Good acting; but a disappointing picture to our people. Tone O. K. Small appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

ONE GLORIOUS NIGHT. (State Right). Good acting; but did not appeal to our people. Tone O. K. Small appeal. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

TWO FISTED SHERIFF. (Arrow). Star, Yakima Canutt. Fair western but this fellow is not going the way he should as he is getting worse. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday or as special. Draw working class city 13,000. Admission 15-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

WESTERN PROMISE. Star, Lester Cuneo. Not much to this one, but Cuneo can make good pictures if they give them to him. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday and as special. Draw working class, city 13,000. Admission 15-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Edgar Hart Employs Bathing Beauties To Create Business for a War Picture

ALTHOUGH Edgar Hart knows that a "real" war picture is not apt to be a draw in midsummer, no matter how heavily backed, he also knows that a hook-up with a local veteran's organization is not to be treated lightly. He pondered these two facts recently when the local post of the Veterans of Foreign Wars asked him to run a war picture for their benefit, at William P. Gray's Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H.

Naturally he consented, but he discounted the drag the society thought it could exercise. Even the Vets could not get the town in to see a war picture in mid-August.

He figured that he needed something big to put the affair over to proper business.

Picks on Bathers

It did not take him long to figure that in August the bathing girl was the best bet. And he figured that he could make it something more than a local stunt with hired models.

There are five nearby beaches, York, Maine; Wallis Sand, Rye and Hampton Beaches, N. H., and Salisbury, Mass. The boards of trade in those five towns were asked to send teams of four girls. That would have made twenty, but only 12 girls turned up; which was ample.

Meanwhile Edgar had sent to Pathe, and from them he received a number of old Mack Sennett bathing girl three sheets, from which he made cutouts with his own copy.

He interested the newspaper, and each of the five beach resorts held meetings.

Made a Production

He arranged a marine setting, hired a little dancer and arranged for the loan of bathing suits to those who required them.

From the Navy Yard he obtained two trumpeters, and stationed one either side of the stage. They were disclosed at the rise of the curtain. The first bugler sounded a call and the first girl appeared, coming down centre as the pianist struck up a waltz, making two revolutions in the centre of the stage and taking her place beside the trumpeter who had sounded her call.

Then the other bugler sounded a different call, a second girl appeared and so on until eight had been introduced. Four, meanwhile, had been posing in a tableau at the rear of the stage. They now came down in a body and as they parted to go to their places with the other girls, they disclosed the dancer, who had come on behind them, covered by their evolution.

As the dance ended, the girls had moved upstage and the light was centered on the bowed figure of the dancer as the screen came down and the picture started.

Gave Seven Shows

In the two evenings the girls appeared seven times and at the close of the performance they were judged by applause, stress being given to the fact that the town of Portsmouth was merely host to the girls, and was not playing favorites, to which end there was no announcement as to the beach they represented until the final announcement that Rye Beach was the winner.

There was a prize to the winning group and a special prize to the "queen" of that group.

A Nice Effect

The girls were all well connected, and although Portsmouth is a Naval Station, there was not the slightest discourtesy shown them. Edgar was all set to throw out anyone passing remarks, but there was no call for the services of a bouncer. The appearance of the girls was their own best safeguard. The audience instinctively realized their claim to consideration; which might not have been the case had hired models been employed.

The people liked the show, the attendance was well toward capacity and the newspapers not only gave advance space but took a pride in calling attention to the fact that Portsmouth was right in line with Atlantic City, Asbury Park and other centres of physical culture; only they did not put it in quite that light.

And it is about the best stunt that Edgar has put over since he came East, in that it works a permanent good for the house and the circuit.

Routes Displays

The lobby displays originated for the Rialto Theatre, Denver, are routed to the smaller houses playing the same picture, and the cost is laid off to the circuit, which permits really fine displays to be made at a small cost.

A display for Black Cyclone did much to help business at the Sterling Theatre, Greeley, Col., and C. T. Perrin got the last possible nickel by treating kids to ice cream cones at the opening matinee. They went home and told the grownups about the wonderful horse, so the adults came in the evening.

Triangular Stage Fills in a Corner

Utilizing a corner of the lobby of the Temple Theatre, a nice display was made for I'll Show You the Town, with a triangular stage and painted set, the feature of which was a miniature billboard for the picture, lighted with the usual reflectors.

A Universal Release

THE MINIATURE STAGE

The setting is in proportion, as are three girls with Denny, cut from the paper, but the toy automobile is too small to be a part of the picture and somewhat spoils the effect.

The house did very well with a contest for amateur photographers in which a local concern offered a $50 camera for the best collection of local points of interest: a photographic showing of the town. At its own cost it mailed out 1,000 announcement cards, and got some fine window material, as well as selling a lot of extra films.

Hot Stuff

Selling by sample, the Knickerbocker Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., got up a display board for Barthelmess in Soul Fire with chiffon flames back of his head. A strong fan and red lighting completed the flame effect, the fire playing about Dick's head very realistically.

A Paramount Release

A DISPLAY FRAME FROM THE PALACE, SAN MARCOS, TEX.

Suggested by Paramounteer Putnam to Manager F. W. Simmerman. The chariot race is a cutout from the 22x28 lobby card. The chief effect is due to the liberal use of stills. Nearly 2,000 heralds were taken by people who stopped to look at the stills.

Pass Bombs Were Better Than War

Dropping throwaways from an airplane is always a good stunt if you did not do it the week before. Making some of them passes is better, but if you can find a real reason for the stunt, that's better still.

Keith's Palace Theatre, Cleveland, used 25,000 airplane cards on Havoc, one side imprinted: "This card fell from an airplane. If it was a bomb Havoc would be created during a war. See this greatest photoplay ever made, now playing at B. F. Keith's Palace Theatre."

The copy is a little stiff. "Was thrown" would be better than "fell" or perhaps "was dropped."

Better copy would be: "It would be as easy to drop a bomb as this sheaf of cards from an airplane. Think of the Havoc that an enemy plane could create in Cleveland. But these are peace times and the biggest sensation in town is the tremendous Fox production, Havoc, now showing at Keith's Palace Theatre. Don't try to dodge this. It's a knockout."

About one per cent. of the cards were overprinted in red with: "This ticket is good for one admission." Advertisement of that fact caused them all to be read.

Backing up a good newspaper and poster campaign, the stunt helped to put the picture over to extra money.

Gains Good Will With His Slides

Using a stunt not altogether new, M. W. Larmour, of the National Theatre, Graham, Texas, is getting a lot of good will and says that so far he has been getting not less than three tickets per, and often as high as a score of sales.

He lets the local photographer make him up a slide from his negatives of babies, first obtaining permission of the parents. He uses two or three of these with each change of picture, and with some such captions as: "The child grows older, the photograph dearer. Miller's Studios" or "In the years to come the photographs of your little folks as they are today will become one of your most valued treasures." Sometimes the straight name caption is used, with a credit line.

A couple of days in advance of a change of slides, the parents are notified that little Willie or Jane or whoever it is will be shown on the screen on certain days and offering them the slide itself after the screen use.

He epitomizes the stunt with: "It pleases the photographer, it sells a few tickets, it makes a few friends and it costs nothing. What more could a fellow want?"

We know the answer. Get the photographer to throw in a few press photos of the National's lobby stunts. He can well afford to. And Mr. Larmour's stunts are good. For instance he used the Oh Doctor thermometer cutout with the tube bursting at 100 degrees. He added the legend: "It's 110 degrees cooler inside." That beats the usual 20 degrees bromide.

A lot of people made bets on the temperature to be decided "by the theremometer in the National lobby" and led their victims down to see the cutout. That helped, too.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

The James A. Fitzpatrick Famous Music Master Series, "George Frederick Handel," and the Mark Strand Topical Review were the two film subjects which augmented the feature photoplay, "Kiss Me Again," the new Lubitsch-Warner production. The balance of the program was made up of two other stage presentations, one being Harold Stern and his Brighton Beach Band, and the other being a soprano in Victor Herbert's selection, "Kiss Me Again," just preceding the photoplay of that name.

The three films were timed as follows: Kiss Me Again," 1 hour and 15 minutes; the Topical Review, 8 minutes; and the Handel music film, 12 minutes. The band did its stuff for 25 minutes and the soprano required 4 minutes for her solo, bringing the whole show to a total of 2 hours and 4 minutes.

Each deluxe performance was opened with the Handel music film, scored with Handel compositions including the "Largo" and the "Hallelujah" chorus from "The Messiah." This accompaniment was played by the famed Mark Strand Orchestra of thirty-five pieces. While the film was being run, 2 purple Mestrum floods of 150-amperes fell on the musicians from the projection room. The large stage had blue foots and borders, and a deep orange and light green spots crossed on the ceiling drapes immediately above the musicians.

After the Topical Review came Harold Stern and his Brighton Beach Band of twenty musicians, presented on the production stage and augmented by the famed Mark Strand Orchestra. The members of the band, dressed in spotless white, were seated on two half-round platforms, one being three feet high and the second six feet high. The black cyclorama was hung in back of the platforms in a semicircle, and two silver transparent cloth columns rose from the second platform to the flies. Inside the base of each column were light green spots shooting upward and showing through the fabric.

The opening was "March of the Toys," starting with dark stage with the silver transparent draw-curtains closed in front of the band. At first only the electric bulb in the director's baton was visible and gradually lights behind the curtains came up deep blue and purple on the musicians, continuing until the end of the selection. The second number was Tschaikowsky's "Overture 1812" by both the band and Mark Strand Orchestra under the direction of Harold Stern. The soft lights gave way at the end of this overture to dazzling white. To break the heaviness of the repertoire, a brief popular melody was dropped in at this point and then came "The Evolution of Dixie," arranged by M. L. Lake. The presentation then closed with "Stars and Stripes Forever," the Sousa composition, by the band, augmented by the orchestra.

The concluding presentation was the soprano solo, "Kiss Me Again," sung on the apron of the large stage. A rosepink spot from the dome covered the soloist. On the concluding notes the picture was flashed upon the screen, hooking up the song with the introductory titles of "Kiss Me Again."

IT COST THE HUNTINGTON THEATRE, HUNTINGTON BEACH, CALIF., JUST ONE DOLLAR

Comes pretty cheap when you can dress three girls on a dollar bill, even with the present skimpy dresses, but that is what F. L. Kelly, assistant manager, put into this three-girl stunt for The Desert Flower. The girls are his ushers, the costumes gunnysacks and the bangle ornaments are bottle caps. Most of the cost was for three hats. On the right they advertise The Lost World.

ANOTHER GOOD MECHANICAL IDEA FROM ROSCOE FAUNCE

The manager of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., realizes that the animation of a display increases its value as a sales agent many times. A moving searchlight was the high point in this cabinet for Paths to Paradise. Read about it.

Paths to Paradise Had Traveling Spot

A high silk hat with policemen on either side was the lobby attractor of D. Roscoe Faunce of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, on Paths to Paradise. It was mounted on an easel to permit the hat brim to flare properly and was provided with a rather deep shadow box.

The opening to this box was faced with two layers of black screen wire; not too close together, and on the back of the box was a painting showing Griffith and Betty Compson taking the necklace from the safe.

A strong three-cell spotlight was fastened to an oscillating fan, which was concealed by the solid portions of the hat. This was placed at such an angle that at one of its periods of rest it was directly on the group by the safe. Part of the time it was "off stage" and in between it traveled slowly across the room.

It was very simply done, but one of the most effective displays Mr. Faunce has had.

Life Helped

The week that Carl Maple, of Barney's Theatre, Point Marion, Pa., played Old Home Week, Life put out an Old Home Week number. The entire issue played on the idea.

Mr. Maple bought up all the copies in town, stamped each page with his advertisement, and put the copies in places of resort. You could not buy a copy, so you had to read one of Maple's with its red ink message about Tom Meighan.

Swanke Gets Profit on a Lobby Display

Here is a design from Arthur Swanke, exploitation man for the Rialto and Mission Theatres, El Dorado, Ark., that cost only $3.50 and which was sold off to a neighboring manager for $10, which is reasonable enough when the labor cost is added. Most of Swanke's displays are sold after use in his own houses, and sometimes even before they are made.

SWANKE'S DISPLAY

The color scheme on this lobby piece for The Lady has a black base with white play title. The pillars are marble effect with lavender drapes held with gold cord, the second plane is red with black cord and the third is dark blue with white cords. The back drop is green to match the floor. Four 50 watt lamps give a footlight effect to a cutout of the star. The top cross piece is lavender with the star name in black outlined in white. This sounds as though Swanke had spilled all the paint he had into the color scheme, but the right tones really gave a pleasing and striking effect.

Mr. Swanke writes that he almost switched to a big town recently. He had a signed contract in his pocket, but returned it. He'll hit the cities yet.

The fountain pen tie-up was also used on this latter picture.

MAKING IT EASY TO TAKE THE PATHS TO PARADISE

Guns and burglars' tools (or are guns burglars' 'tools, too?) were displayed on a front board by C. B. Stiff, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C. There was a small safe and a searchlight at the base. On the left was a compo board high hat.

High Temperature Brought Standout

Before The Ten Commandments was released to Southern Enterprises as a part of Greater Movie Season, it was decided to try out the pull of the picture against the temperature, and Houston, Texas, was selected for this test, which was made in July, with the mercury around 102 degrees.

It was put on at the Queen Theatre with a two weeks' advance campaign, starting with a lavish display of paper.

With the consent of the local authorities, the lobby was extended to the curb line the week in advance. This structure was two layers of compo board on battens, which not only gave heat insulation, but permitted both street and sidewalk faces to be decorated. It cost more than twice as much, but it was worth its cost as a display stand, for the lobby was crowded all day with people who inspected all of the pictures.

A special newspaper contest was inaugurated, co-ops were used, and everything was done that Harry Van Demark could think of with the assistance of Paramounteer Curtis Dunham.

In spite of the baking heat there never were enough seats to supply the evening demand, and it was decided that it was safe to let the picture open the season, and it has held up well practically everywhere.

AN IMPRESSIVE FRONT FOR THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

Planned by C. W. Hallock, of the Victory Theatre, Denver. With an increase of only ten cents it played to three times the normal receipts. All ministers were invited to the opening matinee and there was an auto parade to mark the opening day.

Tied the K. of P. to Old Home Week Sale

When Earl Cuuningham, Paramounteer, dropped into Iola, Kans., to help the Kelley Theatre put over Old Home Week, he found that the Knights of Pythias were planning to hold a street fair and carnival.

That's poison to small towns, so Cunningham persuaded the K.-P. to sell tickets for Old Home Week on a 50-50 basis, which the theatre could well afford to do to forestall the threatened opposition. The Knights had their own tickets printed and got more money than they would have had after the carnival promoters had gotten through with their "expense" bills. Also the theatre had more money and all the crowd.

The chief selling factor was a newspaper contest for the best short articles on former residents who had made good in other places: a sort of typographical old home week. The Knights contributed the first prize of ten dollars, which made it easy to get ten merchants to come in with other offerings, and the newspaper ran ample space, not only because it was good reading matter, but to please the fraternal society.

A COMBINATION CUTOUT AND PAINTED BANNER

This is five by fifteen feet and was used in the lobby of the Strand Theatre, Milwaukee. The wheels of the car revolve and a flasher makes the light in the lantern blink, the chicken hops up and down and Griffith's hat bobs on and off. Suggested by Paramounteer Corcoran.

Local Celebration Helped Home Week

Because Sarnia, Ont., was having an Old Home Week, the Imperial Theatre hustled to book the Tom Meighan picture of the same title and put it over for a wow, with the aid of Paramounteer John E. McInerny.

The perambulaor was a farm wagon with a 24-sheet board, pasted on both sides, down the center. Every afternoon and night John Myers would load the truck with young people, give them horns and his blessing and start the truck around town back of the parade. Back of this came an animal act playing the vaudeville part of the bill, an unridable mule and two trick ponies, with the rest of the bill, in make up, following.

For a newspaper hook-up a hunt was started for the oldest inhabitant, and it did not hurt in the least to discover that the first settler was an inmate of the poorhouse. He not only got a season pass, but Mr. Myers sent out a truck and brought the entire crowd of 35 down, adding another to the series of four front page stories.

The classified ad stunt was used for four names a day, and the theatre ad was painted on the floor of the public dancing stand erected for the celebration. This was gained through a donation of passes for prizes.

The telephone was kept going all day to advise the subscribers to compare their own celebration with Meighan's reception, and a tie card was freely distributed printed on one side "This is a warning" and on the other: "Don't you dare miss Tom Meighan in Old Home Week at the Imperial Theatre," with the dates added.

It lifted the curse from the celebration and helped them to get more business instead of losing money.

Wreckage Won

Because the streets of Greeley, Col., are too steep to make it practicable to tow a wrecked car around town, C. T. Perrin merely borrowed an old car, took off one wheel and propped it up against the curb in front of the house. It cost him $1.50 for a card reading that The Lucky Devil or anyone else could have his car fixed at Phelps' Garage; the garage man having the same name as the character played by Dix in this picture.

The car attracted so much attention that an insurance agent paid to be permitted to place his own casualty insurance ad on the car. That's real testimony.

Nobody Winked at Forty Winks

Copying Pat McGee, of Oklahoma City, J. L. Williamson, of the Superba Theatre, Raleigh, N. C., offered to refund the admission to anyone who could prove that they had slept through the showing of Forty Winks. No money had to be returned, but the offer attracted no end of attention.

Another good seller was a winking moon face. This was made double and hung so that it faced up and down the street.

This was made of two circular pieces of compo board, held apart by wooden strips. Each side was painted in gold and black to represent a smiling moon. Both eyes were cut out and overpasted with yellow crepe paper, on which the eyeball was painted. One eye was backed by a 40 watt steady-burning lamp and the other by a 60 watt bulb on a flasher, so that the man in the moon seemed to wink. As the same lamps worked for both sides, one side winked the right eye and the other the left, but it made no difference. It got a smile that sold the ticket in most instances.

Sally Sells Strong Without Billboards

Because The Ten Commandments was showing at the Melba, and sister house, John J. Friedl, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, Texas, was asked to give his billboards to the Melba for the week. He not only had to face strong opposition, but he had to do it without his usual stands, which were working for that opposition, even though the money all went into the same eventual till.

That put Friedl and his publicity man, Raymond B. Jones, on tiptoe. They had Sally and felt that they should make money with it. They partially offset the lost stands with fifteen cutouts from the threes posted in the best locations they could find, mostly against stores in the business district.

But the thing that brought cold weather business in August was the telephone stunt that no only advertised Sally, but Excuse Me, which was an underline.

The telephone list was called and in each instance the question asked "Is Sally there?" Generally she wasn't. In that case there came a sweet "Excuse me" and the next victim was called. After a while people began comparing notes and located the play titles.

The gumdrop counting contest already has been mentioned, and Jones was especially careful with his newspaper ads to put the punch over.

Good Advice

There was a real thought back of the idea of George T. Cruzen, of the Palace Theatre, Lockport, N. Y.

He sent out as perambulator the most artistic old beggar he could fake up, with pencils and a small tin cup. He displayed a large sign reading: "Blind and Crippled. But before you give me money see The Street of Forgotten Men at the Palace."

It cost only $7 and was worth a lot of money to the B. O. People wondered why and went to find out.

Hunchback Still Runs Up Records

Here's an interesting little tribute to exploitation of the right sort. William Mueller, of the Miller Theatre, Jefferson City, Mo., made more money with The Hunchback of Notre Dame at forty cents top than he has grossed with any other picture with admissions as high as $1.65. For the first time in the two years his house has been open he needed the S. R. O. sign, and with Miller Brothers 101 Ranch for opposition in a town where western stars are the money makers.

Maurice Davis, the Universal exploiteer out of St. Louis, helped to put the stunts over. His chief drive was on the churches. Both Protestant and Catholic approved the picture and called it to the attention of the parishioneers, including six Catholic parishes in the outlying towns.

A newspaper ran a critic's contest to help along, but the steady plug is what filled the 1,230 seats. It's not the age of the picture, but its value, plus the way you sell it.

Had Trimmings for Paths to Paradise

Anything that moves is a good lobby stunt. Automobiles are of general interest. Montagu Salmon arranged for a demonstration of an automobile snubber in the lobby of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., during Paths to Paradise, with a sign telling that with the snubber on your car Raymond Griffith and Betty Compson declared you could ride the Paths to Paradise. The demonstration was with working models, and a lecturer was on the job, with the result that the lobby was packed all day long.

A map showing all of the roads leading to Paths to Paradise was widely distributed, and a man in a high hat rode a bicycle all around town for three days.

But Mr. Salmon did not rest there. He had a motorcycle back stage to run during the big chase scenes, with a small boy shooting blank cartridges now and then to suggest backfires. It had the more excitable standing up in their seats and greatly heightened the effect of the picture.

A NICE DISPLAY THAT COST OSCAR WHITE ONLY $9.50

Greenwood, S. C., is not familiar with such elaborate fronts, so this drew crowds to the Liberty Theatre. It is made mostly from old scraps. The cottage front is 10x6 feet, by 30 inches deep, and is covered with natural vines. It stood all day Sunday in advance.

A Paul Revere

Puyallup, Wash., has a population of about 5,000 and 21 churches. After the contribution plates are all supplied there are not many quarters left for the Liberty Theatre, but a Universal exploiteer helped Mike Barovic get them in for I'll Show You the Town at the Liberty, and a lot of others followed him there.

Cooled Them

Ollie Brownlee, of the Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, put up such a cold lobby on The White Desert that he played to above average on a four day run. Imitation snow on the lobby cards and compoboard icicles on the marquise were the chief factors, saving the cost of the usual snow hut.

Local Pride is a Splendid Seller

Once, for a little while, Laura La Plante lived in East St. Louis, which is just across the river from the big town. It was not very long, but it was long enough to suit Phil Cohn, of the Lyric Theatre.

Maurice Davis, Universalist, discovered the interesting fact and passed it along to Cohn along with the booking for Dangerous Innocence.

Cohn started off with single column teasers of three or four inches with such copy as:

"Did you know East St. Louis had a new movie star of its own?"

"What new movie star claims East St. Louis as Home?"

"What East St. Louis girl has just made good in the movies?"

"Not the Gishes, not Tom Mix, but a new movie star from East St. Louis. Who is it?"

Then the East St. Louis Journal broke a two column cut under a three column head to tell all about it, and ran along with daily stories for the run of the play, while Cohn shot out 8,000 throwaways, 100 block ones, stripped ten 24-sheets with block streamers and whooped up his advertising space.

He got the best three-day run he has had in four months. Local pride did it.

Orange and Black

George E. Brown got the second best receipts in ten weeks at the Palace Theatre, Memphis, Tenn., and did it with a nice colored combination. He gave an orange drink to all persons who came to see Black Cyclone. The horse ran a close second to The Ten Commandments.

The drink company bannered their ten trucks, and Brown posted the auto routes out of town.

houses. We met Sinclair three years ago at the Capitol Theatre, Vancouver, where he was doing the art work for Ralph Ruffner, and he very frankly admits that it was fine schooling. It shows in his work, for all of the displays sent in are directed to selling the picture and not the artist, though in this the artist gains greater credit than where he egotistically smears himself all over the space. We are glad to be able to show some house art work that is real advertising and not merely art work. The best of the three examples we have selected is that for Sally, though the likeness of Miss Moore is not as good as in the other selections. But the fluffy skirted damsel will sell whether it is Colleen or someone else. Not much sales argument is offered here. Sally is known, and it is not necessary to argue with the average patron about the play. The fact that it is on the screen is the important point, and that circle does ample selling. Probably you cannot make it out, but between Sally's legs and the figure of Leon Errol are the names of the specialties, and among them Edna Covey. This picture probably ran some time in the Spring. About the middle of July Miss Covey appeared at the Rivoli, here in New York. The next week she was in the Follies and the week after Flo Ziegfeld was taking costly extra space in the New York papers to advertise her as his newest sensation. It just goes to show that if you have the goods—and the luck—you can "make" Broadway without a pull. The second example gives most of the space to Gilda Grey "herself—in person," playing some vaudeville dates during the New York padlock period. This is the same size as the other, a three tens.

Under ordinary circumstances this figure would dominate the space and completely blank Constance Talmadge, whose Learning to Love was the feature. But Sinclair knows his book of tricks and you will notice that a black heart throws the face into a prominence equal to that given Miss Gray's face by the black circle. It is a good enough portrait not to need a label. This is Sinclair's own work, and not from one of his staff. He nicely plans his proportions. The third example is the best portraiture, and also gives more to the picture than the other examples.

There is a good cross-line at the top and an inserted press comment, while the drawing gives a good suggestion of the trend of the story, backing up the cross-line. This practically tells the story of Soul Fire. This is a smaller space than the others, 110 lines by two as against 140 by three, but we think it the most effective display of the three. All of them are practically type ads. There is no small hand lettering to waste opportunity, and the minimum of lettering is done where type would not serve as well. This is the outstanding fact in all three spaces. Sinclair has the rare gift of being able to tell when to use type and when not to. That is something that is worth a lot to his employers, for he does not waste their money with illegible appeal. Every line is so well displayed that you can read it all.

Type and Picture Are Well Combined

This two sevens from Salt Lake City on Head Winds is a nice example of how to combine type and picture and give the type the best of it. It seems to be house work. In most displays the bulk of the selling is done with the type, and in about half the displays the type does most of the selling and the cut gets most of the display. Here the cut serves its proper purpose of getting attention for the type, and does it nicely. There is strength to the simple sketch, the black base is nicely carried down to frame the type appeal, and the selling talk, including the announcement of the short features, is all in real type, clean cut, eligible and convincing. There is more sales value to those six lines of type below the title than there would be in a page of illustration. It sells you an idea that the story must be interesting. It is particularly nice work.

Unusual Designs On Up the Ladder

Maurice Davis, of Universal exploitation, sends in a couple of odd designs from the Kings and Rivoli theatres, St. Louis. One is the opening display and is shown in the original size. It offers a minimum of hand work and that only where hand work does better than type. The K.-R. artist is obtrusive at times, but here he follows the best practise and comes in only where he is needed. Davis writes that playing up the tele-visionphone idea was a fine box office bet. Quite apart from the story people were interested in "the new invention" and came to see how it fitted in. The small cut supplied a fine kick to the idea carried in the four line description of the story. You can imagine a situation in which a wife can both overlook and overhear. It will be noticed that the title is staggered to give the effect of an ascent, but the longest word comes at the top and partly defeats the idea, though it gets over in a way. This is better carried in a later space as shown in the second cut, which also is in the original size. Here a rule work ladder is used that more graphically gets the idea over.

A RULE WORK LADDER

This last idea is an adaptation from the press book where the design is suggested for a snipe. It works just as well in the newspaper column and takes only thirty lines. Miss Valli has brought money to the Kings and Rivoli before but never as much as on this title, so Davis sapiently concludes that the ads must have helped. Perhaps the greater proportion of type face helped, too. At any rate if you can get them in St. Louis this time of year, you're good. The Kings and Rivoli are two houses, by the way, and not a double title single.

will be watched with interest. If sold from the same angle as any other play the picture is liable to do a terrible flop, but if the manager will start well in advance to sell the idea of oddity, to advertise in fantastic ways and to prepare his patrons for something wholly different, he should be able to show a good profit. The Beggar is entirely a matter of exploitation, and the crazier you can make your exploitation, the better you can sell your patron the idea that he is going to like it. Get your patrons in cold and they will wonder what it is all about and probably be sore on the house. This style of cut will do much to help.

ping episode, feeling this to be the big moment in the play. Eleven window displays were gained in New Kensington, Pa., with K, the Unknown, through the device of putting one letter of the title into each window and offering a single pass to all who turned in the correct answer. To prevent guessing, the competitor had to mention the window in which letter was found, which means that he had to look into many stores.

Hundreds of others who were not willing to do all that work to save the price of a ticket were sold on regular admissions to the Liberty Theatre.

REQUEST FOR NEW DEVICES

WE are receiving requests constantly for new ideas in stage settings, in scenic treatments and in lighting effects. It seems to us that there are many excellent ideas available which have been developed in presentation work, and if we only had the contact with the producers of such devices or appurtenances, we would be glad to put these producers in touch with interested parties. Today, the entire system of scenic and lighting equipment has undergone a change and various effects have been developed in keeping with the basic advancement. Theatres are reconstructing their stages and lighting equipment is being installed in various parts of the houses, all of which means that the art of presentation has reached a point in its development whereby attention must be given to its position as a modern factor in the general program make-up. The pages of this department are open to any producer who has a new idea to advance.

WORLD'S LARGEST SWITCHBOARD

THE new Uptown Theatre, Chicago, recently built by Balaban & Katz, boasts the ownership of the largest stage switchboard in the world. It is an F. A. Major System Board, 24 feet long and 10 feet high. It is built on the Major Remote Control System, containing only pilot switches and is operated by one man stationed at one point of the board. 10 scenes can be set up at one time and any combination of lighting can be set up or arranged and controlled entirely by the action of one switch. Scenes may progress forward or backward and in any rotation desired.

COONEY BROTHERS, Manager of the Capitol Theatre, Chicago, have completed negotiations with Bert Williams of the New Grand Review Theatre, Detroit, whereby the Capitol Theatre Stage Creations, as produced by Francis A. Mangan, will be roadshowed intact between the two theatres.

ROTHAFEL TO EUROPE

S. L. ROTHAFEL will sail, shortly, for a brief sojourn in Europe, where he is expected to secure many new features for his theatre, which opens next year. It has been announced that as an exploitation stunt for the new Roxy, that Rothafel will use the concert platform for propaganda. Duke Yellman's Orchestra which "Roxy" discovered, will be a musical feature in the new theatre, and plans are being made to tour the orchestra in concert sometime in November. A new "gang" is being organized along the lines of the one famed at the Capitol.

ASH PRESENTATIONS DEMANDED

PAUL ASH, whose popularity and excellent programs have sent business at McVickers, Chicago, up into the smiling areas, will appear five times daily, presenting his entire presentation program at the extra show which will open about the "supper hour." The attractiveness of his programs have resulted in long lines of patiently waiting patrons, and it has been decided as solution to the long tedious wait, that the extra show will take care of the over-flow and enable more new patrons to see the first show at night.

ROBINSON LEAVES CAPITOL

CLARK ROBINSON, who has been Art Director for several years at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, has resigned to join Rothafel in his preparatory work for the new Roxy Theatre. Mr. Robinson will also accompany Rothafel when he sails the latter part of September for Europe.

ZURO APPOINTS ASSOCIATE

JOSIAH ZURO, musical director for the UFA film-epic, "Siegfried" at the Century Theatre, New York, has appointed William Kautzenbach to alternate with him as conductor of the orchestra of sixty picked musicians that accompany the picture. Mr. Kautzenbach has been associated with Dr. Karl Muck in Boston and was previously associated with Mr. Zuro as assistant conductor of the Criterion Theatre orchestra.

NEW RADIUM PROCESS

A NEW process for the application and treatment of radium for costumes and scenery has been perfected by Lew Beck, electrican, Chicago. The process will undoubtedly popularize the use of the substance as it reduces the cost to a point where numerous producers can employ same. The radium is sold in liquids, pastes and powders, the phosphorus effect being secured with a spotlight equipped with a special lens. It is possible to apply seven colors to one costume with the cost including the lens at a very nominal figure. One treatment by this method has lasted an entire season.

PATHE PRESENTATION AIDS

PATHE has incorporated two excellent presentation suggestions in its press book for Harold Lloyd's "The Freshman." The press book is sponsored by Barrett McCormick. The page devoted to this subject give a concise outline of the two numbers, and illustrated with artists' sketches and costume plates. This is a valuable aid to the exhibitor as it gives him something tangible upon which to devise his presentation feature when he runs this particular picture. He has been given unlimited aid heretofore in the work of exploitation, with voluminous information as to how, why, and when of "getting the people into the theatre," but the program suggestions are usually passed by with a few brief suggestions. The program is the thing, and to keep the folks coming back is the big idea.

THEATREKUNST PRODUCTS IN U. S. A.

IT is reported that arrangements have been made with a well known New York firm for the sole American representation of the famous Theatrekunst products which is internationally conceded to be superior in design, workmanship, quality and completeness, to that of any other manufacturer. A complete stock will be carried, and every known model and design of sword, dagger, cutlass, gun armor, chain mail and like accessories may be found among the various importations.

Big First Run Presentations

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Seven Days" (Producers Distributing Corp.)

Music

The Colony Melody Masters with E. Charles Eggett conducting, "Rendered morning, noon and night" with Suppe. Dr. Edward Kilenyi has scored the picture effectively and John Priest is at the console.

Ada Forman

Seldom have we seen a solo dancer with such dominant characteristics and working in a setting which correctly interpreted the atmosphere. Miss Forman is one of the few dancers, whose interpretation of various ceremonial dances of the Far Southeast reflects a genuineness of interpretation. If Miss Forman should be presented in any other Motion Picture Theatre, the setting which serves as a background at the Colony should be required. It is as indispensable as her startling makeup. The setting was made entirely of "stock" materials, and while simple in its construction, the arrangement is highly artistic. Four black plush legs form the basis of the drop. A plush leg is hung right and left in two. The other two legs are placed side by side at center on the same set of lines. This leaves an opening at right and left center of about eight feet between the center section and the end sections. About four feet from the floor snap hooks have been attached to the edge of the material. These are brought together and fastened to a standard. In bringing the drops together in this manner, an arc is achieved. The effect is of an inverted oval topped window. The heavy black folds form a rich background to the pagan altar piece which consists of a six foot unit of five steps, painted black and stippled with bronze, leading to a boxed pedestal, upon which a large gold Buddah is placed. In the hands of the idol, an urn is fixed, in which the smoke of burning incense is seen. Hanging, over the Buddah statue, is an orange tinted fabric, in the form of an inverted fan, hung against the top of the center section of the black plush. A sky drop is hung back of the plush. A blue strip tones the drop and through the sweeping openings of the black plush can be seen one steel blue star at right, and at left, three stars are visible. Black plush borders and returns are hung in one. In the area over the altar, six border spots are hung with an even distribution of greens, orange—amber and purple. Two light blue spots are placed off stage at left, and at right a blue spot, with a magenta spot to follow the dancer. An amber spot, cut down to about half, is thrown on the dancer from the front. A gong from the orchestra pit announces the opening of the action. Curtains are slightly drawn, revealing Miss Forman posing on the steps before the altar. She descends to the floor and proceeds through the wild and weird gyrations of a Hindu ceremonial. Her entire body is painted with oil paints. Red, green and bronze colors are distributed in a fanciful design over her form. A gold cloth band which is wired to form the effect of two protruding panieres is worn at her waist and two long streamer trains are attached to the ends. Her headdress is an ornate creation of oriental design studded with rhinestones. During the various movements of the dance, the colors painted on her body shine and glisten in constantly changing forms as they blend with the effective lighting treatment. Jerry De Rosa, who conceived the setting, is to be complimented on the artistry which fairly shouts for this number, and Howard McCoy, the managing director, is to be complimented for his showmanship in securing this excellent interpretive dancer.

Paul Zimm's Chicago Orchestra

This musical organization presents the feature: "School Days to Jazz." A fabric background is used, which consists of three sections of the light fabrics hung in two, with two long panelled windows, bearing a black line design placed right and left center. Fabric draw curtains are placed directly over the window panels to mask the opening between the fabric settings. Red and amber foots highlight the foreground. The drop is toned rose with green and magenta highlighting the folds. The fabric returns in one are toned magenta at right and amber at left. A cylindrical chandelier, composed of fabrics, is hung from center with a gilt painted cable. The chandelier is toned green and magenta from the sides. Black plush borders are used. Attractive tinting is given the windows from the back, with blue-greens, reds and ambers distributed in an effective blend.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Coast of Folly" (Paramount)

Music

The overture played by the Rivoli Orchestra is "Pique Dame," by von Suppe. Another version of Riesenfeld's Classical Jazz is presented and Harold Ramsbottom presents an organ feature entitled, "Pal of My Cradle Days."

A Seaside Frolic

The presentation this week is atmospheric in its suggestion and forms a good background for the introduction of several bathing beauties and beach habitues. The setting consists of a cut palm tree drop hung back in two, the fronts of the palms forming a border, the legs representing the tree trunks. In front of each leg, right and left, are placed large set palm trees. Down left the front of the bathhouse is visible, the entire side being composed of an orange and yellow striped canvass. At right, a beach umbrella is placed over a bench. Sky drop used to back. A screen is hung down in one. The action opens with dark stage. The lights are gradually brought up on the back drop revealing, in silhouette, the forms of bathing girls. August Werner, baritone, dressed in a naval officer's uniform, appears at right, being highlighted with a blue spot from the side. The lights are brought up slowly as the bathing beauties, who, in this instance are winners of a local bathing beauty contest, appear through the opening of the set house at left. They wear white silk beach shawls, which are emblazoned with colorful floral designs. Light blue and green from the sides highlight the trees and the upper part of the set, while amber and canary are brought in from the sides to flood the foreground. "The Four Locust Sisters," dressed in colorful afternoon frocks, render two quartette selections. They are followed by four of the Rivoli dancers, who enter in attractive beach costumes, carrying Jap parasols. For the general parade of the bathing beauties, a platform has been erected at left of the proscenium opening. An archway in the left alcove is used by the various girls, who appear on the platform, revealing their shapely forms. They pose an instant, then walk down the steps from the platform to the stage and form a line as a background. White and canary is brought up for the lighting on the spirited finale, which employs all members to the party with the introduction of a ukelele player dressed as a life guard.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Love Hour"

Ben Bernie and Rialto Gang

Bernie takes the Rialtoans into the "Swiss Alps." The orchestra enter the pit dressed in Alpine costumes, brown corduroy knickers, white blouses, green and brown Alpine suspenders, grey Swiss hats and green and brown Alpine suspenders, grey Swiss hats and green woolen stockings. The curtains are drawn, revealing the stage setting, which consists of a drop hung back, on which is painted an Alpine scene. The low runway extends from off right to center. A flat is placed extreme left and painted to represent the front of an Alpine house. At right, a sapling tree with green foliage top is placed. Below it, a table with chairs are set, and another table and some chairs are placed up left. Black plush legs and border are used to mask and carry off. Amber foots and flood are used to highlight the setting and canary spot on performers. The snow effect is worked for the finale, the paper flakes being highlighted with white through the opening right and left up stage. The various artists introduced this week consist of Paul Van Dyke, who proves to be an excellent yodeler. Johnnie Dove does some excellent acrobatic work on roller skates. Miriam Lax, who was unprogrammed, renders a vocal selection and Joe Rose, acrobatic dancer, who was unannounced Monday afternoon, injects much pep into the finale of the program with some sensational acrobatic dancing. Joe Rose should be given a better spot as he is clever. Bob Miller, baritone, sings "I Miss My Swiss." Eight charming dancers, dressed in blue, winter carnival costumes are introduced in the finale. The orchestra, of course, renders excellent selections both before and after stage numbers with the usual Bernie comedy.

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Mystic"
(Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer)

Overture

The Capitol Grand Orchestra renders "Marche Slav" by Tchaikowsky. David Mendoza conducting and alternating with Eugen Ormandy, concert master and associate conductor.

Caroline Andrews

Miss Andrews sings "The Wren" by J. Benedict, with a flute obligato by Arthur Brooks, first flutist of the Capitol Orchestra. The setting is an exterior, comprised of drops used in previous productions. The cut drop of a flowering tree is hung in one, the trunk at center, with the branches extending to fill the balance of the opening. Back of this drop is hung another cut drop, which consists of tree trunks and surrounding bushes, right and left. A sky drop is hung back which is tinted a green-blue, and a water rippler with canary medium is worked at center of the drop, the rippler being visible through the opening of the second cut drop. Blues from right and left tone the back cut drop, and red and blues from the sides tone the foreground to treat the painted flowers and other foliage in their natural pigments.

Divertissements

Three numbers are offered under this heading.

(A) Mlle. Gambarelli and Robert Mebrano

These two artists present a number entitled "Modern Tango," with a sub-title, "Creole Tango." The setting represents a corner of a ballroom overlooking Broadway. A drop is hung back painted with a view of upper Broadway, looking from Longacre Square, with myriad lights, twinkling signs and the familiar skyline. In the foreground, two transparencies are hung in folds, with about a ten-foot opening in center. Directly back of the transparencies, a one-step platform is placed and the opening is backed with a cut-out balustrade. A marble bench is placed left center. The transparencies hung in two are toned a deep blue, which is highlighted with green foots. The back drop is given a leaden-grey and blue tone, with a yellowish red glow above the painted skyline, giving the effect of a glow from other lights up the street. The window and lamp cutouts of the various signs and in buildings are treated with amber. A canary spot is worked on the dancers during their number.

(B) Julia Glass

Miss Glass renders a piano number, "Ballet Music from 'Naila'" by Delibes, the piano arrangement by Dohnanyi. A very simple set proves an ideal background for this number. Dark fabrics hung in heavy folds in two, with a large window with a series of Colonial panels at center, the bottom of the window coming to a point about six feet from the floor. The tips of tree branches are seen in silhouette at the upper left hand corner of the window. The backing in three, visible through the window, is toned green. A large four-paneled screen with characteristic designs upon a gilded base is placed right center above the piano bench. A dark grand piano is placed right of center. The fabric drops are toned a dull blue from the sides, the edges of the folds given a metallic or glistening appearance. The screen is highlighted amber and blue from the sides and the artist works in a canary spot.

(C) William Robyn

This popular soloist is assisted by the Capitol Male Quartette in a rendition of "Dreaming of Tomorrow," by Sanders. The setting represents a landscape, which is a "copy subject" for some artists who are grouped at right. A cut drop with sappling birch trees is hung in two. Large foliage banks, with rose and yellow flowers, placed up left and up right center next to the drop. A heavy foliage border hangs in one. The sky drop hung in three is toned a warm blue. A two-foot platform is back of the cut drop. This platform extends across stage. The five men are dressed in artists' costumes, the soloist standing before an easel placed right center. At the finale of the song, a man and woman dressed in costumes of the romantic period appear on the platform from left, visible through the trees, engage in a bit of amorous pantomime and exit right at the conclusion of the song. A canary flood headlights the singers at right center. Canary foots, with reds brought in to tone, give the entire set a very light treatment. Amber from the sides back of the cut drop highlights the characters who appear on the platform.

Neptune's Daughters

Mlle. Gambarelli and the Capitol Ballet Corps of six present an "undersea" specialty. A scrim is hung at the curtain line. A drop painted to suggest the cavernous depths is hung back. A platform covered with light blue material which blends with a suggested light blue rocky set piece is center. The border hung in one is cut to suggest seaweed. A figure dressed as "Neptune," holding the forked sceptre, stands on the platform at center. The dancers are dressed in green filmy costumes. The entire set is flooded green from the sides, with a blue tone added. Water effects are operated from down in one. A swimming fish effect is operated from left. The undersea illusion is very good. The water effects are so placed that the ripplers are reflected at intervals on the costumes of the dancers.

WARNER S THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Limited Mail"
(Warner Brothers)

Herman Heller makes his debut with an orchestra, which is much larger than the one previously employed at the Piccadilly. The composition presented is programmed "Melodies You Know," which is a compilation by Mr. Heller of various classical and popular numbers. This composition was of sufficient breadth to hint at the versatility of what Mr. Heller and his orchestra will be able to offer during the season.

Divertissements

(1) "Sweethearts"

Miss Edith Thayer and Alan Adair appear in a group of songs. The scenic investure is very simple. A black drop with a circular opening is hung in one. The tips of a strand of yellow foliage is visible at the upper right section of the opening and four strands of flowers hung in severe alignment drop from the lower portion of the opening over the front of the drop. The two singers appear back of the circular opening, only the upper portion of their figures being visible. A blue tab sky drop is used to back. A canary spot from front masked down to fill the opening highlights the soloists. Miss Thayer dressed in a quaint costume of the play sings "The Love Song" from "Blossom Time." Mr. Adair dressed in an Irish costume sings "When Irish Eyes Are Smiling." The two artists finish with "Sweethearts" from "Maytime."

(2) Virginia Bacon

A dancer who renders "Valse Bluette" by Draigo. Red foots and borders tone a dark plush hung back. A large lighted candle in a bronze base is painted on profile board and cut out. This set piece is placed at left

"'ROUND A WORLD OF SONG"
Introducing a Multiple Scenic Screen Device
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

ONE of the problems confronting a small theatre in the production of presentations is the lack of sufficient space to permit of several changes in settings. The revolving stage was devised primarily to allow a shifting of scenes not only instantaneously but in limited areas where rigging lofts and a limited depth forbade the installation of the regular equipment. There are many stages that cannot use a revolving stage even with their limited proportions, and a request was made recently, of this Department, for some mechanical novelty that would permit a change of scene on practically any stage. As a result we are offering an arrangement of a screen to be known as a MULTIPLE SCENIC SCREEN. This device may be constructed so that any number of scenes can be presented as backgrounds for songs, dances, etc. In the presentation for this week we are suggesting the use of this screen for the background of a cycle of songs—the songs of people in ths far North, the Tropics, the Orient and in a chosen section of Continental Europe.

ROUTINE

The routine consists of a cycle of four songs or two songs and two dances, as desired by the producer. The scenic panels of the screen are painted to represent the country with which the song or dance is identified. In Plate 1 is given the general scenic setup of the screen and its surroundings. The first characters can be discovered standing on the platform. Towards the conclusion of their song they come down the steps and make an exit right or left. The two following numbers should be worked on the floor with the last number finishing on the platform.

GROUND PLAN

In Plate 3, Fig. 4 is found the ground plan of the set which consists of an angular platform placed at center of the stage. Two steps lead from the stage floor to the platform. The frame of the MULTIPLE SCENIC SCREEN is placed at the upstage section of the platform with the sides of the screen at the right and left of the platform. A back drop either in black plush or black patent leather should be hung, upon which a decorative motive of vividly colored flowers may be painted. The flowers should be of large design. If black patent leather is used it is suggested that the flowers be painted on beaver board and that the design be cut out and hung over the patent leather. Plush returns should be used right and left.

CONSTRUCTION DATA

The MULTIPLE SCENIC SCREEN is very simple to construct. Particular attention should be given to the placing of the panels which swing so that same will mask properly when brought into place in the panel boxes on either side of the platform. The screen should be constructed of a frame which not only serves as a backing but will permit the various changes to be made in a manner eliminating any movement of the screen during the changes. The frame should be braced to the platform and floor. The sides of the frame right and left should have a boxed top and end. The end should be sufficiently wide to mask the ends of the panels when they swing into position. The scenic panels which should be cut to fit may be swung from the corners of the screen being attached to the frame itself. In Fig. 5 is shown an outline of one of the panels being swung into position. In Fig. 6 is a detailed description of the method of hanging the panels. (A) represents the panels; the panel should be placed on pivots at the bottom and top of the frame and advanced in flush position at an angle one above the other so that one panel will not interfere with the other when it is opened. The panels may be made of beaver board with a battan attached to the top and bottom, or the entire piece of material framed. The top of the screen can embody a decorative scheme with a cut out design, this being optional with the producer. The method of opening the various panels of the screen depends entirely upon the space allotted for the setting. Cords may be attached to the lower part of each panel and run through eyes to pulleys down-stage with the cord being controlled off stage; or, the panels may be balanced in such manner that when they are released from back of the frame they swing down into position. They can be held in place until ready for use by cords and can be tripped back of the frame. The method of the scenic treatment with the various panels is described under the following heading.

SCENIC TREATMENT

In Plate 2 are suggested two motifs which may be used as scenic backgrounds. Fig. 1 represents a tropical scene and Fig. 2 a northern scene. The motifs have been divided according to the panels. In Fig. 3 is shown the art arrangement of the panels. For instance, at the opening Scene 1 is revealed on the screen; at the conclusion of the number the two panels at the center of the frame open and swing down to position covering the previous scene as painted on the sides, thereby revealing Scene 2. In like manner Scene 3 and 4 are depicted.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

The foreground should be given a treatment of orange amber and green with a subdued vari-colored treatment on the back drop. The flower design being highlighted to bring out the color of the pigments used. Bridge spots should be set to highlight the scenes of the screen with mediums used to bring out the beauty of the scenic panels center and is toned amber. The dancer works in a canary spot. She is dressed in a shell-pink ballet costume.

(3) Sam Herman

A Xylophone Virtuoso is introduced, playing two numbers, first being "East Is West" lullaby and second "Nola." He appears before gold curtains hung back, which are tinted blue from borders and foots. The artist works in a canary spot. A black border and legs to mask are hung in one. For the second number the lights are brought up. The gold curtains are toned red from the top, with white being shot in from the sides, revealing the faint traceries of what appeared to be an oriental design on the drop. White spot on the artist.

EDITED BY CHARLES S. SEWELL

"The Merry Widow"

Von Stroheim Produces for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Masterful Version of Savage Stage Success

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Erich Von Stroheim has surpassed all his previous efforts in the production of "The Merry Widow," adapted from the Henry W. Savage stage success and featuring Mae Murray and John Gilbert. It is a beautiful and rythmical interpretation which he has given this classic, and one which will be remembered when hundreds of other pretentious pictures have gone to their last resting places on storage shelves. The picture has a poignant story to tell, tells it in distinctly dramatic fashion and embellishes it with exquisite backgrounds and perfect photography.

It is with no intention of raking up a dead past but only to emphasize a point that we say that a previous Von Stroheim picture found critics because of a couple of unpleasant incidents and what was decidedly a morbid tone. No such criticism can be attached to "The Merry Widow." The romance is one of virile love, but Von Stroheim has handled it in exceeding good taste and without missing an iota of the drama. He drives his incidents home with telling effect, aided by the superb acting of the two featured players and Roy D'Arcy as the crown prince.

The story is of the love of a foreign prince for an American actress, of his ultimate decision against marriage because of pressure brought to bear by relatives, of his later meeting with her when wealth has put her on a social plane equal to his, of crises caused because neither can believe the other really in love. Figuring largely in the skein of events is the crown prince, a cousin and a dastard, who jealously seeks possession of the actress.

The story of "The Merry Widow" might have been compressed into five reels but it could not have been so charmingly told, with such wealth of incident and beauty of background, as Von Stroheim has told it in ten reels. The Viennese settings are works of art, the mobs picturesquely clothed and exceptionally well directed and the story reasonably compact. Audiences will marvel at the number of sets. One exquisite conception after another is flashed on the screen, and without detriment to the story-telling.

The positive character of the prince makes the role not difficult of delineation and John Gilbert scores repeatedly in his interpretation. He makes the prince a gallant, dashing chap with a penchant for the ladies, one who laughs at denials and goes daringly and ruthlessly toward the objective. He has never appeared to better advantage. Where other players might have invested the early scenes of promiscuous lovemaking with crudities, Gilbert manages to surround them with something of the fire of irresponsible romance. Later, when the actress brings love into his life, he rises to real heights in portraying the sorrow of a love that seems hopeless.

Mae Murray, it also may be said, at least equals her best previous endeavors. She, too, gets a depth of feeling into her part. The breezy actress of the early scenes becomes the woman tortured with love. Incidentally, Miss Murray has never appeared more beautiful on the screen.

Without the work of Roy D'Arcy as the despicable crown prince the picture could not be what it is. His is a character study of real power, in which the direction of Von Stroheim shows, for the character is repulsive in a distinctly Germanic way. While there are hundreds of people in the picture, these three players dominate it at all times.

The picture has fire and dash. After a slow beginning it gains impetus and moves along rapidly to a dramatic conclusion. It is thronged with events spiritedly acted, such as an exceptionally well staged duel in the mists of the early morning. The concluding scenes of the coronation are marvels of composition. They have been done in colors and cannot fail to send a thrill through the beholder.

"The Merry Widow," then, is a very fine picture that should find a universal welcome. In theatres able to utilize the famous operatic music it should prove a pronounced hit; in the smaller houses it should be voted one of the best ever.

Story

The Prince, who has a penchant for the ladies, endeavors to seduce a young American actress visiting in Vienna. He lays his plans carefully but abandons them when he discovers that he loves her. Despite his high rank he determines to marry the actress. The King, Queen and Crown Prince prevent the marriage at the last moment, and the actress believes she has been jilted. She weds Baron Sadoja, the wealthiest man in the kingdom, and he dies on the wedding night. The actress goes to Paris, where she is nicknamed the merry widow. The Crown Prince follows later to marry her and revive the resources of the kingdom. The Prince follows also, still in love with her. The Crown Prince and the Prince have a fist fight over the widow and arrange a duel. The Prince lets his cousin shoot him, believing the widow in love with him. She flies to the side of the wounded man. The lovers are reunited. The king dies and the Crown Prince, on his way to the coronation ceremony, is shot by one he has wronged. The Prince and the actress succeed to the throne.

"Siegfried"

Splendid Narrative Music Photo-Drama, Produced by Fritz Lang, From the Norse Sagas, for UFA

Reviewed by Charles Edward Hastings

"Siegfried" should receive the attention of the smallest, as well as the largest, theatres. Whether with a great orchestra in a vast auditorium, or with an organist or pianist in a small house, Wagner's music will sustain the massive picture. And it is a pleasant duty we owe ourselves to see this picture.

Herr Lang, working in his colossal studio near Berlin, had all of his scenes done indoors. The effect is little short of marvelous. Herr Hunte shows great imagination with his "sets."

The director selected his actors with great care, apparently. As "Siegfried," Richter covers himself with glory. Schlettow is great. Loos does well. Not so much can be said for the women, the "Kriemhild" being merely beautiful and the "Brunhilde" failing to impress us. Smaller roles were in the hands of great masters of the art of acting.

And the director won great concessions from his photographic experts. Hoffman and Rittau demonstrate high craftsmanship at the cameras. The Icelandic scenes (the Aurora Borealis effects; the Sea of Flames, etc.,) arrest attention and compel admiration. The great bridge; the cathedral scenes (inside and out) and the hunting scenes, all are well done.

The narrative form of photo-drama construction chosen by Herr Lang precludes any thought of suspense, but to see "Siegfried" is a liberal education. By and large, it is a great work to come from a German (or any) workshop.

Sets Designed by Otto Hunte.
Length, 9,000 feet.

Story

Siegfried, son of King Siegmund, of the Nederlands, having mastered the art of forging a sword at the shop of Mime, sets out for home, but is diverted by tales of Kriemhild, princess of Bergundy, and sister of King Gunther. Siegfried, seeking the royal palace on the Rhine, is sent by Mime, jealous of his prowess at the forge, in the wrong direction. In the deep woods, Siegfried encounters Fafnir, the fire-spitting dragon; slays the dragon, bathes in the blood of the beast, and becomes invlunerable against deadly attacks, except in one part of his left shoulder where a leaf had clung while he was bathing. Siegfried discovers where the treasure of the dwarfs is hidden, and proceeds to Bergundy, where he meets Kriemhild. He goes with King Gunther to Iceland; aids the latter in winning Brunhilde to wife, and in turn marries Kriemhild. Brunhilde plans to have Siegfried slain, after telling Gunther a falsehood and Gunther's uncle, Hagen Tronje, on discovering from Kriemhild just where Siegfried is vunerable, hurls a spear at the hero, when hunting. Siegfried is carried home, dead. Brunhilde kills herself at the bier of Siegfried, after confessing to Gunther that she had spoken falsely about Siegfried.

"Hell's Highroad"

A Cecil B. DeMille Supervised Drama of Love and Luxury Starring Leatrice Joy, for Pro.-Dis.-Co.

Reviewed by Charles Edward Hastings

Leatrice Joy's American public is sufficiently large to guarantee the box-office value of "Hell's Highroad." Miss Joy rises to unusual heights of emotion—plumbs the depths. Whether the character is drawn with any adherence to values, psychological or otherwise, it fits Miss Joy perfectly. It may be that she never had a better role. Splendidly directed by Mr. Julian, and supervised by Mr. DeMille, this offering omits very little that lovers of the DeMille-Joy combination delight in.

That Miss Joy is a perfectly natural actress, and compels our attention almost to the point of fascination, are points we have hitherto expressed in cold type. And truly, type is cold. As the poor girl, in the opening sequences, battling against the rain, Miss Joy remained natural, and there was never a suggestion of anything artificial when, arrayed in a gorgeous gown in the closing sequences, she visits the home of the banker to discharge her obligation. Between these opposites, Mr. Julian has scattered new, and deft touches of a Miss Joy we seem not to have noticed before.

You exhibitors are perfectly safe in promising, in advance, that your patrons will like Miss Joy in a great role. It is the role of a girl who gets off to a poor start, and, ultimately discovering that her husband is following in her very footsteps (and perhaps bettering the instruction), she brings about his financial ruin in order to hold him and his love. But whether "Judy Nichols" has, ever had or ever will have, a counterpart in the life of any living woman, the author has furnished a role that give us Miss Joy, again, just as we like her best.

The supporting cast is excellent. Mr. Edeson makes the banker a human being, and never too heavy for the "heavy." Not weighted down by absurdities. Miss Faye is stepping out. We've been watching Miss Faye for lo, these many months. It may be that Mr. DeMille will find larger opportunities for her in the not distant future. We trust that this is so. Miss Sullivan is just her own, rare self again. Mr. Burns plays "Ron."

The photography is very good, and the sets meet every requirement.

This, the first "personally supervised" DeMille production, tempts us to look for big things from Mr. DeMille in another little while.

Story

Judy Nichols, a poor Chicago girl, decides that marriage without money would be folly. Ronald McKane, a struggling young civil engineer in New York, urges her to come to "the Big City" and marry him. Judy comes to New York to receive a sum of money under a will, and disappointed because the sum is but $8.35 a week for life, she refuses to marry Ronald. After a quarrel, she goes to the home of Mrs. Anne Broderick, a former girl chum, who lends her gowns, shoes, hats, etc., and introduces her to Sanford Gillespie, the banker, whose friendship plays a part in putting Ronald on the road to riches. Judy and Ron marry, and Ron climbs the ladder and adds to his wealth, until Dorothy Harmon, a very rich widow, meets and wants him, and offers Judy to gamble, the stakes being $1,000,000 vs. the young husband. Judy scorns the offer, but finds Ron interested in the widow. Ron seems so enthusiastic when Judy suggests that she divorce him, Judy runs to Gillespie and begs him to bring about Ron's financial ruin. Gillespie agrees, after Judy promises she will do anything he asks in return. Ron's fortune is swept away, next day, and Judy visits the banker to pay her bill. While she is there, Ron calls, to punish the banker for the part the latter played in bringing about the former's ruin. Gillespie tells Ron that Judy is in the next room and Ron attacks her, and is choking her when Gillespie breaks in. There is a reconciliation between the lovers and all ends well.

"In the Name of Love"

Delightful Love Theme with Excellent comedy Touches Should Register Hit for Paramount

Reviewed by Tom Waller

Ricardo Cortez, Greta Nissen and Wallace Beery, aided by a supporting cast including some well known names, furnish one of the box office angles for "In the Name of Love." The theme itself, essentially one of romance interspersed with much well timed comedy, is of a category that should make the picture a general favorite. It is described as being an adaptation of Bulwer Lytton's story, "The Lady of Lyons."

Cortez, as a Chicagoean returned to his native province in France in search of his childhood sweetheart, opens the story. Rustic village scenes overshadowed by imposing chateaux are realistically portrayed.

The story takes a true-to-fiction and highly entertaining turn when the naturalized American, upon learning that the girl of his dreams has become a society snob in search of a titled husband, assumes the cognomen of a Latin prince.

Hatton and Beery, as men of inherited and bought titles, respectively, seek to avenge the slurs of the beautiful snob of lowly birth by persuading Melnotte, played by Cortez, who also was subject to a slight, to play the royal imposter.

In princely garb Melnotte is married in a magnificent chateau just before the true prince, middle aged and in civilian attire, arrives on the scene. Greta Nissen gives an admirable interpretation of the snob who finally succumbs to true love with a modest business man.

Length, 5,904 feet.

Melnotte returns from Chicago to the French town of his nativity in search of the sweetheart of his childhood days. He finds that she is a wealthy social climber in quest of a titled husband. She slights him when she learns that he is just a business man. Marquis de Beausant and M. Glavis have also been denied the hand of Marie Dufrayne, the snob. To avenge themselves they persuade Melnotte, when they learn his story, to masquerade as a prince. Melnotte does and marries the girl while still an imposter. After she learns he is nothing but a business man she becomes infuriated. But later, when his identity as her childhood sweetheart is unveiled, she becomes a dutiful wife.

"Havoc"

Rowland V. Lee Produces for Fox Intense Drama of the War Days with Fine Cast

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

In "Havoc," a Fox production, Director Rowland V. Lee has supplied a picture of war days both in and behind the lines. The story, which is taken from the stage success of the same name, deals with the hysteria of the times. Buddies lose their heads and fight each other in the trenches, while in London drawing rooms a siren alternates in showing preference for two men, and they too, later, figure in a catastrophic ending of their friendship.

This is really the story of two close friends, played by George O'Brien and Walter McGrail, who loved an unworthy woman, played by Margaret Livingston. Her fickleness leads the weaker character, McGrail, to twist orders at the front and leave O'Brien to what seemed sure death in a German attack. He escapes, however, McGrail kills himself and O'Brien finds a truer understanding of life in a character played by Madge Bellamy.

The picture has been well directed and much stress is laid upon some excellent battle scenes. These, it is said, 300 veterans of the Allied forces assisted in making, and they are realistic and dramatic enough to suggest that real soldiers were used. A night attack by the Germans is put on in especially effective fashion. The story is sound and wholly plausible as well as indisputably dramatic, and the action moves at a good rate of speed. Furthermore, the players do good work, especially O'Brien and Miss Livingston. There is some comedy relief.

It seems that "Havoc" will go well, especially with ex-soldiers who will never forget the greatest moments of their lives. The picture is too long, however, and will be improved by careful editing.

Story

Violet Deering, beautiful and unscrupulous, tells Capt. Roddy Dunton she loves him. He goes to the front determined to distinguish himself. Later Violet meets Dick Chappell and convinces him she loves him. He, she says, must tell Roddy. Dick is a lieutenant in Roddy's company. Undermined by the strain at the front, Roddy leaves Dick in a front-line trench when the Germans attack. Dick escapes and Roddy kills himself, Tessie Dunton, Roddy's sister, cares for Dick on his return, blinded, to London. "The Call of Courage"

Art Acord a Lazy Cowboy in Dramatic Universal Blue Streak Western Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Art Acord, his horse and his dog dominate "The Call of Courage," a Blue Streak Western produced by Universal. It is a love and adventure story of a lazy cowpuncher and teems with action based on a false accusation of murder. Art's escape from various posses are thrilling examples of fast riding.

The opening scene is a corker, showing the star, his horse and dog all dozing in a heap on a beach. Ort's head is pillowed on the horse's head and the dog reclines on the horse's neck. They seem a very human and congenial family.

After interesting characterization the picture swings into drama. A ranch owner is murdered and Art is framed by his own brother. In attempting to flee the state he commandeers a stage coach and is captured as he meets the girl he loves. The scenes of the stage coach racing and the riding of the posse are very effective. Art's horse does some clever work at this time by going into hiding with the dog. Later the horse and the dog rescue Art from jail.

"The Call of Courage" is a rather conventional western, but it is well acted, the events progress swiftly and dramatically and the horse and dog will make huge hits with all people who like animals. All the players do good work.

"The Mystic"

Tod Browning Produces Interesting Story of Fake Spiritualists For Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

The employment of fake spiritualism by a band of crooks to win money from an heiress is the chief point of interest in "The Mystic," a Tod Browning Production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. The cast is an excellent one, consisting of Aileen Pringle, Conway Tearle, Mitchell Lewis, Robert Ober, Stanton Heck, David Torrence, Gladys Hulette and Dewitt Jennings. There is also a strong love interest to the story.

Of greatest interest is the disclosure of the methods that are or might be utilized to fake spiritualism. The little band of crooks has set the stage to trick the heiress out of her money. The audience clasps hands, the end men gripping door knobs, thus forming a circuit for an imperceptible electric current that signals on a dial when police unclasp hands to disclose the deception. Wierd things happen in the dark but the police are frustrated.

This scene is intensely interesting because of the tricks it discloses—so interesting, in fact, that it threatens to slow up the drama of the picture.

The picture opens on a fortune teller's caravan abroad. The opening has a distinctly foreign flavor. Then the action is transported to the United States and proceeds along conventional lines, with the gang influencing the girl to intrust her money to their keeping. Love interest follows when the chief crook feels compunction at robbing her and the mystic accuses him of losing interest in her. In the end he escapes the police and the gang is deported. He rejoins the mystic abroad and assures her of his love.

This picture has elements of strong drama because of its renunciation theme, the love interest and the jealousy and distrust of the minor crooks. Thus it should please most audiences. But certainly it seems that its most fascinating feature is the detailed expose of fake spiritualistic methods.

Sensational Railroad Melodrama With Train Collision and Much Heart Interest Is Warner Offering

"The Limited Mail" is a crashing, racing and whistling melodrama, with a love story and mysterious career underlying the rushing of many giant mogol engines, armored mail cars and luxurious pavilions on wheels. Warner Brothers have provided Monte Blue with a vehicle second to none in its class.

The fast mail with its hundreds of passengers plunging head-on into a wildcat freight train, tearing down a treacherous mountain pass, will double the pulse beats of the most sophisticated fan. The thrill is highly accentuated because real cars and monster locomotives are seen actually derailed and smashed to bits on the side of the dizzy precipice.

The wreck is this melodrama's dazzling climax when Monte, as a new engineer on the Limited, loses a pal but gains a wife.

No point has been overlooked in the heart interest and intensity of this story. It is crammed full of everything from escaping convicts, fistic encounters, loyal and faith-

Story

Bob Wilson, erstwhile wanderer, is taken aboard the Limited Mail after preventing train from being wrecked in a mountainous pass during a storm. Jim Fowler in the mail car gets him a job with the railroad and a few years later he is assigned to engineer the Limited. Prior to the trip Bob has fallen in love with a waitress who lives at Jim's boarding house. Jim has seen a blonde woman caress Bob at the crossing and he thinks she is Bob's girl.. This confuses things and makes Jim believe the waitress is in love with him. A runaway freight train crashes into the Limited. Jim is killed but his boy and Bob are saved. Bob later saves the Limited from again being wrecked by stopping it before it passes through a tunnel, the sides of which have given way. A convict friend of Bob's rescues the boy from being drowned in a stream. The waitress happens to be in the Limited at the time and everything terminates with a perfect understanding.

"The Love Hour"

Vitagraph Offers an Odd Combination of Melodrama and Slapstick That Should Please Most Audiences.

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Although "The Love Hour" suggests an hour of stolen love, that's "just audience stuff." The only attempt at a clandestine affair gets it, not in the neck, but squarely in the seat of the pants. That's no figure of speech, but a record of fact. This is an original story, built by Bess Meredyth to please the audience, and to perpetuate summer with the critical writers. It evidently was argued that it would be better to please several million paying patrons than to cater to a handful of professional deadheads.

The plot is "number three, in the old book;" the one in which the loving heroine must yield herself to the villain to send poor hubby or poor old mamma away to regain health. In this instance it is the husband. So Hubby starts for Switzerland, where lives the one surgeon who can perform the necessary operation, and the wife puts a gun to her head and says "Foul fiend, you have bought my body, but you cannot buy my soul!" but before she can pull the trigger the door is kicked in and the villain gets arrested.

In this development about two reels are given to Venice, the Los Angeles shore resort, where the heroine meets the hero. It's great "audience stuff." There is more of the same in a dinner scene where Willard Louis tries to chew a rubber ball in the belief that it is a boiled potato. But scenarist and producer rise to the heights in the "big" scene, in which Louis and Louise Fazenda boot the villain until Miss Fazenda's right stocking parts from its garter. In between kicks John Roche, the aforesaid villain, does falls over davenports, tables and smaller articles of furniture.

Mack Sennett's entire bag of tracks are compressed into this one scene, and yet the tensity of the situation is upheld. That's the surprising thing. It's a Keystone Comedy in one act and yet the big dramatic moment of the play. It's one of the finest collections of sure-fire hokum ever gathered into a single script and it's going to make a pot of money for exhibitors outside the top of the first-run class.

Don't let this plain statement of facts mislead you into the belief that you don't want to play this. You do, and you'll please a very large percentage of your patrons. Willard Louis and Louise Fazenda get as many laughs to the foot as does Harold Lloyd. Huntley Gordon plays seriously and pleasantly his impossible role and Ruth Clifford is appealing as the heroine. John Roche is a capital villain and an even better acrobat. Some of the locations are of unusual beauty and the beach resort shots include a ride on the merry-go-round and another on a roller coaster that are unusually good, while the distorting mirrors never were used to greater advantage.

"The Live Wire"

Johnny Hines' Initial First National Picture Good Box Office Entertainment

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

In "The Live Wire," his initial First National production, Johnny Hines has turned out a picture that should prove a distinct box office asset for exhibitors. While not the best of this star's pictures—we liked "The Crackerjack" a little better—"The Live Wire" combines rich humor, good acting and a dramatic story against colorful backgrounds. At its Hotel Plaza showing last week, a trade audience unmistakably voiced approval of it.

The story is based on "The Game of Light," by Richard Washburn Child. The beginning shows Hines cast as "The Great Maranelli," whose daring head-slide down a sixty-five-foot wire makes him the star of the show. He suffers an injury to his neck and then goes down the ladder of success, until, in company with "Sawdust" Sam, his circus pal, he becomes a knight of the road. Then Hines is bouncer in a tough cafe and, later, electric light and power salesman. These varied roles afford him the fullest opportunity for his comedy talents and he does not disappoint, playing with dash, spontaneity and feeling. One of the high-lights is where Hines does the Charleston dance. In another excellent bit Hines, Edmund Breese, J. Barney Sherry and Mildred Ryan do a dance in an office. Other laughable scenes deal with acquiring the pig-selling angle and the tramp and pawnbroker sequences. A battle with gymnasium paraphenalia also is well put over.

The work of the cast is beyond reproach. Besides those mentioned above, Flora Finch and Bradley Barker appear to advantage. The titles are clever. Two of the best are: "Puppy love often leads to a dog's life" and "Let's drift. Absence of body is sometimes better than presence of mind."

"The Coast of Folly"

Gloria Swanson Does Remarkable Acting in a Fine Paramount Production by Allan Dwan

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Advertised as a dual role presentation, Gloria Swanson really enacts three characters in "The Coast of Folly" and throws in a capital impersonation of Mary Pickford in "Pollyanna" to boot. The outstanding feature of her work is that she makes mother and daughter show a family resemblance without looking like the same actress in different dresses. Her young Nadine Gathway is remote from the young Joyce Gathway of twenty years later, and this distinction is not merely a matter of dress, though here there is distinction enough, since she goes back of 1905 for the leg-of-mutton basque and a 1900 automobile.

This character is briefly sketched in a few scenes and does not again enter the play until she has become the Countess de Tauro, considerably older than the 38 to 40 years the time of the action would indicate. This is a weak spot in the development, but probable ages are lost sight of in the enjoyment of Miss Swanson's very fine performance as the rheumatic old belle who seeks to keep perpetually young to hold the love of a husband who asks in his heart only the privilege of growing old comfortably.

In this role Miss Swanson shows flashes of that genius which never has been fully

"Wild West"

New Patheserial Has Interesting Plot and Picturesque Circus Locale
Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Wild West," the new Patheserial, with Jack Mulhall and Helen Ferguson, promises splendid entertainment, judging from the first three chapters shown reviewers last week. It was produced by C. W. Patton on the famous 101 Ranch with Miller Brothers' Wild West Show, and thus affords, besides an interesting plot, highly picturesque backgrounds of a circus and open western country.

The first chapter depicts the race for homesteads on the Cherokee Strip in 1893 and introduces the characters of Joe, Zack and George Miller, cowboys, and Dr. Powers' cheap medicine show. Ruth Hardcastle deserts the show, taking her baby, on the intimation that her husband has been unfaithful. At the depot she forgets her traveling bag and into it another mother places her baby. Powers is the father of two boys, one white and one half Indian. A half-breed changes the babies. Powers wounds Hardcastle during the land rush, and the latter puts the half-breed child, which climbed into his wagon, in the care of Joe Miller, and swears to "get" Powers if it takes the rest of his life.

The next scenes show a lapse of twenty years, with Bob Miller, the real half-breed, in the circus. Polly Breen is the star. She learns that she is Hardcastle's daughter and begins a search for him. Bob, a dissolute man, makes love to her. Jimmy Whitehawk, the other child, who believes himself half-Indian, trails rustlers on the Osborne ranch. He meets Polly at the circus and they fall in love, but Jimmy cannot forget that he is a half-breed. The circus goes bankrupt and Bob buys it, so that Polly again meets Jimmy at the ranch.

The principal players are Jack Mulhall, Helen Ferguson, Eddie Phillips, Virginia Warwick, Milla Davenport, Fred Burns, Ed Burns, Dan Dix, George Burton, Inez Gomez and Larry Steers. All of them are skilled artists. Robert F. Hill directed from a scenario by J. F. Hattsford and Joe Brotherton and Harry Cooper handled the cameras.

"Tricked"

Here is a good two reels Mustang with Edmund Cobb. It has a real story and it teems with action and humor. The plot centers around the appearance of a pretty school teacher in Lariat. Competition for her hand is keen, with all the cowboys finally enrolling as pupils. Bob Keene has the edge on the others. He starts a brush fire to lure the others away from the teacher. They swear to get even and dress up "Shorty" as the teacher. Bob embraces "her." Later the boys pretend to abduct the teacher and Bob rides to the rescue, and is madder than ever in discovering the deception. In the end the boys aid him in his quest.—S. S.

"Off His Beat"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Off His Beat" is a Walter Hiers two-reel comedy in which the police force off and on duty predominates. Hiers and his mate are in the midst of their snoring when the alarm clock summons Hiers to the door to receive the milkman's gift. Instead of the bottle it is an abandoned baby. Hiers and his chum decide to adopt the waif and the raucous wailings of the infant float over the telephone to the ear of Hiers' girl. That only starts troubles for the batchelors. The landlady is next to arrive with a sign: "No children allowed." One of the most ludicrous situations is when Hiers falls in the police parade with the child under his arm. He shifts the little one around until she finally is settled in the mouth of his huge brass horn. On traffic duty the child again furnishes Hiers with much material for comedy. As a whole this offering should prove to be highly amusing in the average theatre.—T. W.

"Wild Beasts of Borneo"

(Educational—Special—Two Reels)

"Wild Beasts of Borneo" is one of the most thrilling and complete two-reelers of big game in their native haunts that has ever been caught by the camera's eye. It is a depiction of the experiences encountered by Mr. and Mrs. Lou C. Hutt in their travels through the wilds of the Far East, particularly Borneo. The objective point of these explorers into the field and jungle of remote civilization was not to kill but to study and preserve. As the result they have recorded on film some action which would be hard to duplicate. Snakes, tigers and elephants go squirming, whirling and pacing on the screen. The method of capturing these animals in traps and pits used by the natives is highly instructive as well as entertaining. The roping of a live leopard and the capturing of a giant boa constrictor entwined about a limb high up in a tropical tree are two scenes which in themselves would provide any audience with a superabundance of thrill material. The camera at work in a thick jungle prying into the domestic life of a herd of white elephants is another outstanding scene included in this Hutt presentation. Every inch of the picture should prove a genuine box office hit with every audience in the country.—T. W.

"No Father to Guide Him"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The action in this two-reel comedy is just the reverse of what the title, "No Father to Guide Him," would imply. On the contrary, little Mickey Bennett, as the son, is under the constant supervision of his father despite a separation decree obtained by the wife because of a disgruntled mother-in-law. The picture is one of Chase's fastest and best. It is packed with mirth, particularly those "shots" of the seashore and Chase running around in a barrel and later pilfering the clothes of a private detective. The arrest of the mother-in-law on a phoney charge of beating the boy results in a reconciliation between the young couple. The cast is well diversified. Duke Kahahamoku, famous swimmer, plays the part of a lifeguard. Katherine Grant essays the role of the wife.—T. W.

"The Fight Within"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

This Mustang Picture features George Larkin with a good supporting cast including the charming Josephine Hill. It tells the dramatic story of regeneration in the Northwest. Jerry Burke, a mounted policeman in love with Rose Raymond, warns her brother Jack to avoid a rascal named Hogan. He is taken in by the wiles of Ruth Royce, an intimate of Hogan, and eventually Jerry has to jail him and incur the hatred of Rose. She aids Hogan in a jail delivery during which Jerry is wounded but continues pursuing. Jerry captures Hogan and Jack and Rose but faints from his wound. Hogan is for escape but Jack and Rose decide to go straight and cover him with their guns. Hogan is jailed, Jack paroled to marry the regenerated Ruth Royce and Jerry and Rose are married.—S. S.

"Madame Sans Jane"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Glenn Tryon and Jim Finlayson provide a lot of fun in "Madam Sans Jane." This two-reel comedy is exceptionally snappy and should prove welcomed material for the program of any theatre. Glenn as the ardent suitor makes up as an attractive female attendant in order to distract Finlayson as the watchful father of a beautiful daughter. The latter role is essayed by Fay Wray. Most of the action takes place aboard an ocean liner. Tryon's makeup is so good that even the captain of the vessel falls for "her" wiles. A rip-roaring situation is provoked by father trying to make love to the attendant and the captain breaking down the door to save "her." Then Tryon tears off his wig, and while father is recovering from his swoon, hastens the marital ceremony.—T. W.

"On the Go"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Here is a Sid Smith comedy built along conventional lines but so effectively acted that the gags ought to go over well with most audiences. Sid is a postman in a hilly country. He climbs a long set of steps only to find that the family is on vacation. Then a mother calls him up another long flight to tell her child she'll put him in the postman's bag if he isn't good. Sid finally gets home and relaxes for a good vacation. But wife thinks otherwise and forces Sid on a hike. They meet up with their in-laws and hike some more. All in all, Sid gets no rest for his weary feet, even after they arrive at the cabin, for rain floods the place and the occupants have to flee.—S. S.

"Marvels of Motion"

(Red Seal—Magazine—One Reel)

Issue D of the Fleischer-Novograph process shows horses galloping in a pasture and in a steeplechase. Legendre, the broad jumper, the strange splash a lump of sugar makes when dropped into milk and other interesting scenes. Slow and stop motion work by the camera enables the audience to appreciate these effects to their fullest value.—S. S.

"My Bonnie"

(Red Seal—Song Cartoon—One Reel)

This Max Fleischer Ko-Ko Song Cartoon offers "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" for audiences to sing. It is a clever bit of work. Where formerly the clown danced over the words to emphasize the rhythm, now a bright dot does the marking to keep the audience in time. The subject should sell on sight.—S. S.

developed in any one of her screen plays. There are some bits in this play that rank with her best work; with the best work of any screen player. As the young Joyce she is charming, but just the screen personality we know; a little finer in quality, but a personality rather than a player of parts. The greater interest lies in the mother role. But this interest does not rise wholly from the playing of an aged character. There is inherent appeal in this story of mother-love, and a most refreshing absence of the usual maudlin sentiment. This old woman is human, real, gripping. All your interest is with this faded belle, fighting for her long-neglected child, and risking her own happiness in a belated fight for her offspring. Here the author, adoptor and director share equally, for the story has been well prepared for screen production and as well produced. It is not spoiled with a lot of double exposures. Only once, in a brief scene, are mother and daughter on the screen in the same scene, and here the use of a double with her back to the audience avoids the shock of setting the same player twice. Alec Francis makes a charming old count, Anthony Jowitt an acceptable Larry Fay and Dorothy Cummings a thoroughly despicable villain. All of the characters are well assumed, but only these stand out. "The Coast of Folly" is sound entertainment throughout.

Length, 7,001 feet.

Nadine Gathaway, unable to stand the pomposity of a priggish husband, elopes, leaving her little daughter. After a spectacular career in Europe she drops from sight. Meanwhile Gathway, dying, leaves his fortune to his daughter on condition that she is never concerned in a scandal. Joyce, a thoroughly modern young girl, with the income from eleven million dollars and only the chaperonage of her old nurse, thoroughly enjoys life until she finds that she likes Larry Ray over-well. Larry asks his wife to divorce him. She spitefully declines, but does institute suit against Joyce for alienation of affections, which of course will deprive her of her heritage. In Paris the Countess de Tauro hears of the scandal. Her own past safely buried, she is loath to disinter the notorious Nadine Gathaway, but mother-love, long suppressed, surges up. She comes to America and at the risk of her own happiness forces Mrs. Fay to discontinue the suit and consent to a Paris divorce. Then she bravely goes to face the music only to find that the Count has known all of the time, and to complete her happiness, Joyce at last finds a place in her mother's arms.

"Seven Days"

Christie Scores With Fine Cast in Highly Humorous Producers Distributing Comedy

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Al Christie's feature comedy, "Seven Days," with Lillian Rich, is assurance that the blues can be dispelled. Transferred to the screen, this stage farce scored decidedly and guarantees over an hour of genuine fun for the theatregoer. The incidents are really funny, the acting has spirit in it and there are no draggy moments.

The story revolves around a group of society people quarantined by small pox in the home of a man entertaining his aunt. She is rabid on the subject of divorce, he is separated from his wife and another woman is posing as his wife. With a situation like that there is plenty of opportunity for comedy and Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood, who wrote the stage play, turned out a success. The motion picture is just as funny, if not more so. The prisoned people seek to escape the house, which is heavily guarded by police, as do a policeman and a burglar also confined.

The best part of the picture utilizes a dumb waiter for a comedy-making device. Eddie Gribbon, who is the funniest person in the cast, rides up and down on this while the policeman, played excellently by Tom Wilson, frantically pursues. The other players are peppy in their roles, especially Mabel Julienne Scott as a woman who thinks she has spiritualistic powers and can make screens and tables dance. Each time she commands the screen, Gribbon, hidden behind it, obliges her by trotting it around the floor.

The gags and cracks in "Seven Days" aren't new to most theatre-goers for many of them have been borrowed from this very play, but there are so many of them and they are so well acted that merriment will be unrestrained. Aiding also, and immensely, in tickling the risibilities are the subtitles. Some of these are gems. Producers Distributing Corporation ought to have no trouble at all in booking this picture everywhere.

Jim and Bella Wilson have agreed to disagree. Aunt Selina, who is opposed to divorce, shows up at Jim's home and Kit Eclair, a friend, poses as his wife. Dal and Anne Brown are guests. The house is quarantined for small pox. All try to escape and fail. Also caught in the house are a policeman and a burglar. Anne Brown makes the cop's life miserable by making him a party to her spiritualistic experiments. Then the cop discovers the presence of the burglar and pursues him up and down the dumb waiter until exhausted. At last caught, the burglar tells the aunt of the frame-up. At that moment the quarantine is lifted and auntie relents.

Three Educational Stars Draw Down Great Praise

THE greatest enthusiasm has been aroused, not only among Educaitonal officials but among disinterested critics, over the first performances of the three new comedy stars who are making their debuts under the Educational Pictures banner this Fall. The stars are Lupino Lane, making a series of six two-reel Lupino Lane Comedies at the Educational Studio; Johnny Arthur, signed up for featured roles in the six Tuxedo Comedies being produced at the same studio, and Billy Dooley, brought from vaudeville to play stellar parts in Christie Comedies.

Arthur's first picture has already been shown to New York and other first run audiences, and Lane and Dooley will be seen in the first run houses before the month is over.

"We had high expectations for these three comedians," says E. W. Hammons, President of Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., "and their work is certainly bearing out these expectations. The reception that Arthur received from the critics and the reports from the producers concerning Lane and Dooley, as well as the reaction at previews, certainly all indicate that we were not counting too high when we looked to these stars to make the biggest hits in their first season as regular stars in two-reel comedy series."

"The Tourist" introduced Arthur as a two-reel comedy star to Broadway crowds at the Rialto Theatre. There is no question about the immediate hit he made. One New York newspaper critic greeted him as "a real find—a real star" and declared "The Tourist" altogether "a real knockout that any house should welcome with open arms."

Lanes' introductory comedy, though not yet titled, is being cut and will be titled and shipped to New York within a few days. Unbiased critics who have had an opportunity to watch this master of pantomime work in the studio and to see the picture in its present form, are just as enthusiastic as the studio people in their praise of his work. The distinctive character of his work, placing him in a unique position as a film comedian, is especially commented on.

Lane begins the series of comedies under his own name with a considerable screen experience, following an unbroken record of successes on the stages of both Europe and America.

Dooley's first Christie Comedy, "A Misfit Sailor," which is being shipped to all Educational Exchanges and will soon be available to first runs, is said to bring out the best of Dooleys' work which made him famous on the vaudeville stage as "The Misfit Sailor." So much have the Christie forces been impressed by Dooley's work that Al Christie promises that his first appearance is going to register a real comedy sensation.

Special efforts are being made by the Educational organization for the finest exploitation on the pictures made by these new stars. A press sheet carrying complete advertising and publicity helps has already been issued on "The Tourist," and press sheets will soon be ready on the Lane and Dooley subjects. The feasibility of the exploitation stunts suggested in these press sheets is illustrated by the fact that with the first showing of "The Tourist," the Rialto put one of them over in the form of a smashing tie-up in an automobile display window on Broadway near the theatre.

AILEEN PRINGLE SNAPPED IN HER NEW HOLLYWOOD HOME

On the left, Aileen is wearing a negligee made from the wedding veil of the late Czarina of Russia. On the right is a detail of her library.

Warners Theatre, Formerly Piccadilly, Is Opened With Gala Celebration

ONE of the big events in picture circles last week was the opening of the Warners Theatre, formerly the Piccadilly, at Broadway and 52nd Street, New York. This ultra-modern home of the photoplay was acquired by Warner Bros. recently to afford a permanent outlet for Classics of the Screen in the largest of key centers.

Immediately after the purchase plans were made and executed whereby the original stage was greatly enlarged, in order that the theatre's presentations should be adequate to accompany the important photoplay specials to be shown there during 1925-26. The orchestra pit also was made much larger.

The evening of the formal opening brought the culmination of an elaborate exploitation campaign, when a concert was given from the marquee of the theatre from 7:30 to 8:30 o'clock. At the same time the theatre broadcast through Stations WGBS and WMAF, the program in the auditorium and the private studio of Warners Theatre being relayed to the big Saturday night crowds in Broadway.

To accomplish this latter bit of exploitation, five cars were employed to carry radio sets through the streets and each set was tuned in upon the stations transmitting the program. Each set was cased to represent an old-fashioned hand organ, a novel touch that assisted materially in arresting attention.

The photoplay selected for the opening of the new Warner Broadway home was "The Limited Mail," the latest starring vehicle of Monte Blue. This picturization of Elmer E. Vance's melodrama, produced for the screen under direction of George Hill, created a decided hit.

George H. Dumond, general manager of all Warner Bros.' theatres, and Herman Heller, musical director, personally compiled and arranged the various divertissements forming the opening program. First, Mr. Heller led the augmented orchestra in the overture, "Melodies You Know," which he had especially selected for this occasion in order to demonstrate the versatility of his ensemble and its individual units.

Other contributions to the program given before the showing of the principal screen attraction included solos by Edith Thayer and Alan Adair, who sang, respectively, "Long Song" from "Blossom Time" and "When Irish Eyes are Smiling." These popular artists then gave in duet "Sweethearts," from "Maytime." Virginia Bacon offered an attractive interpretive dance, to the accompaniment of "Valse Bluette," and the special musical program ended with two xylophone novelties, "Lullaby," from "East Is West," and Felix Arndt's composition, "Nola," played by Sam Herman, who was featured recently in the "Vanities." Warners' News Weekly was shown and a cartoon subject, "Felix Dopes It Out," presented.

All the events of the gala opening week were directed by Myer Lesser, Warner Bros.' director of advertising, publicity and exploitation. On Sunday, August 23rd, the radio was impressed into service to inform the public of the approaching dedicatory celebration and the formal change of name of the theatre.

On Tuesday Warner Bros. made an effective contribution to the success of the Greater Movie Season by invading the New York financial district, and, with the special permission of the Treasury Department, presenting a program from the steps of the United States Sub-Treasury, in Wall street. These exercises were held at noon and a crowd of thousands filled the adjoining streets.

Harry M. Warner spoke pointedly on the importance of motion pictures in contemporary American life, and addresses endorsing the purposes of Greater Movie Season were made by Father Leonard, Dr. Isaac Landman, and the Rev. William L. Phillips, representatives, respectively, of the Roman Catholic, Jewish and Protestant faiths. Vincent Lopez and his orchestra and Vaughn De Leath, Mae Breen and Peter De Rose entertained with selections.

On Wednesday the press of New York was entertained at luncheon in the grand ballroom of the Hotel Roosevelt. Herman Heller made the principal address, telling what his policy will be as Warner Bros.' musical director. "Les" Stevens and his orchestra and Joe Moore, American Olympic skating champion, furnished entertainment which was broadcast through Station WRNY, the Hotel Roosevelt station.

Warners Devise Plan to Send Perfect Print to All Showmen

A PERFECT print for every exhibitor, no matter how large or small his house, is a plan devised by Warner Bros. that will be put into execution with the reopening of their eastern laboratory at the old Vitagraph in Brooklyn.

For a long time the exhibitors in smaller towns have complained of the quality of the prints they received from the various producing companies. While an effort has been made by all concerned to give the smaller exhibitor as good a print as the bigger showman, of a necessity in receiving the prints after they had been used over the country the smaller house owner got the worst of the wear and tear on the film.

Warner Bros. have devised a plan to remedy this situation by booking all prints, after they have been run a certain period, to their eastern and western laboratories for reconstruction. The plan calls for the booker to assign each film running east of the Rockies to the Brooklyn laboratory for inspection, and the western prints to the laboratory at the Hollywood studio. There all scratches, torn sprocket holes, etc., will be eliminated and repaired and the print put in as good condition as when it first left the laboratory.

The great throng massed in front of Warners Theatre, Broadway and Fifty-second street, New York, for the official opening of the house.

Grainger Signing Up Exhibitors On 1925-26 Fox Productions

EACH day brings word of new and important bookings of the Fox product from James R. Grainger, general sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, who is now making a nation-wide tour in the interest of his corporation.

At present Mr. Grainger is in Chicago. From there he plans to return to New York by way of Canada. While in California the Fox sales chief had a number of conferences with exhibitors in the southern part of the Golden State. In Los Angeles he closed arrangements for showing "The Iron Horse" at the palatial Criterion Theatre, its initial presentation there being on September 5. This will be a limited engagement of three weeks, and if the success of the attraction at Grauman's Egyptian in Hollywood can be taken as a criterion, it should play to capacity business during the entire period.

Following the showing of "The Iron Horse," the Fox screen version of John Golden's sensationally successful stage play, "Lightnin'" will open at the Criterion for a limited run, to be followed by "The Fool," the motion picture translation of Channing Pollock's celebrated stage triumph, which ran for two seasons in New York.

From Los Angeles Mr. Grainger went to San Francisco, where he signed contracts for exhibiting a number of the Fox successes. "The Iron Horse" already has opened at the St. Francis Theatre there, and, according to word from the coast, it shattered many existing records, both for attendance and for popularity. The San Francisco critics were unanimous in their praise, thereby agreeing with the press of numerous other cities where this screen story of the building of the first transcontinental railway has been presented.

Particular interest is attached to the San Francisco engagement of this attraction due to the fact that George O'Brien, who rose to stardom as a result of his work in the role of Davy Brandon, was born and reared in the Golden Gate city and his father, Dan O'Brien, the present chief of police, is one of the most popular officials in the city.

The "home folks" were loud in their praise of their "favorite son" who had gained such success in the cinema world. They swarmed to the theatre in droves, after being considerably wrought up because they had to wait so long before they could see "Smiling George" in the characterization that brought him national recognition.

Immediately following the engagement of "The Iron Horse," "The Fool" will play an indefinite run at the St. Francis. Other important bookings contained in Mr. Grainger's latest wire from California Theatre, San Francisco, and the showing of Tom Mix in his first picture since his triumphant European trip, "The Lucky Horseshoe," at the Granada Theatre, also in San Francisco, the home of all the biggest productions to be presented. The "Lightnin'" engagement begins on October 10, and "The Lucky Horseshoe" will start on October 17.

Mr. Grainger, during the past month, has also visited St. Louis, Kansas City and El Paso, where he succeeded in interesting a number of the larger exhibitors in the Fox 1925-26 product.

While in Los Angeles Mr. Grainger visited the Fox West Coast Studios and reported that every production unit was working at top speed. He saw the finishing "shots" being made on "The Silver Treasure," the screen version of Conrad's "Nostromo," under the direction of Rowland V. Lee, with George O'Brien in the leading role.

Work on Chadwick Special

Cast for "The Count of Luxenbourg" Now Being Assembled

Preparations for the production of "The Count of Luxembourg" are well under way at the Chadwick west coast studios. This production is scheduled to be one of the biggest special features on the coming season's Chadwick program. An all star cast is now being assembled for this picture and the announcement of the complete cast is expected within a short time.

With the acquisition of the Independent Studio by I. E. Chadwick, production on this special feature will be greatly facilitated. Studio space will be available for the big and lavish sets planned, and the many scenes in which hundreds of players will take part. This production will probably be the most ambitious achievement by Chadwick.

Edgar Norton Engaged

Edgar Norton, noted character player of both the stage and screen, appears in an important role in the Associated Exhibitors' feature production, "The Lady From Hell," directed by Stuart Paton with Blanche Sweet and Roy Stewart in the featured roles.

President Coolidge Sees "Gold Rush"

At the special request of President Coolidge, Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, sent to White Court, Swampscott, Mass., a print of Charlie Chaplin's new dramatic comedy, "The Gold Rush," which the President, Mrs. Coolidge and a party of friends viewed on the evening on Aug. 27.

"The Merry Widow" Proves Big Success at New Embassy; Has Brilliant Premiere

"THE most notable event of the current cinema year," writes Dorothy Herzog in the New York Daily Mirror, "occurred last night at the new Embassy Theatre when social and celluloid lights turned out en masse to view the premiere of Erich von Stroheim's 'The Merry Widow.' 'The Merry Widow' is a gem. This production unfolds with beautiful precision, artful subtlety and magnificent sets. Mae Murray and Jack Gilbert cover themselves with glory as hero and heroine of this rich romance. Mae Murray looks young and luscious and vivacious. It is von Stroheim at his best. It is throbbing love, enchanting action and superb suspense."

"Erich von Stroheim's pictures are peerless pictures," remarks Harriette Underhill in the New Yok Herald-Tribune. "Perhaps another director could have made as interesting and alluring a version of 'The Merry Widow' as the one Miss Gould presented last night, but we doubt it. It seems to be the first musical play that has been transferred to the screen successfully."

"What a picture!" exclaims Louella C. Parsons in the New York American. "There are touches that are so original and so brilliant we feel an impatience that von Stroheim has wasted his time without giving us more of this type of entertainment. Miss Murray is enchanting. She is not only beautiful, but she gives a fine, sincere performance that is not to be named in the same breath with her other film work. The whole thing is done with a deftness that commands our admiration."

"The first night audience," reports Delight Evans in the New York Morning Telegraph, "applauded to the echo. When the orchestra glided into the 'Merry Widow Waltz' the enthusiasm reached its height; and there was no doubt that 'The Merry Widow,' as conceived by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has found a home on Broadway as long as it cares to stay. Directed by Erich von Stroheim, starring Mae Murray and Jack Gilbert, it is a predestined success. Mae Murray is a revelation in the title role. She has never been so beautiful; and in this part, which seems made to order for her, she improves on all her past performances. Her grace will delight you. Jack Gilbert has lost none of his fiery appeal."

"The picture is one of strong passions," observes Mordaunt Hall in the New York Times. "The Widow is, of course, impersonated by Mae Murray, who demonstrates true acting ability in this effort. Both Mr. Gilbert and Roy D'Arcy as the two Princes acquit themselves with distinction, especially Mr. D'Arcy, who is seen in the role of the Crown Prince. And we must mention the skillful performance rendered by Tully Marshall. The closing scenes made in color are beautiful, as one perceives the colored uniforms, the glittering gems, the pearls and the ermine in the gold gown. And we might add that 'The Merry Widow' waltz has lost none of its charm."

"A captivating picture," testifies the New York Sun, "fraught with the exquisite beauty of a new Mae Murray and having further the charm of John Gilbert's restrained and intelligent, yet full-blooded and robust acting. It is a masterpiece of direction. It is a picture with an appeal to the mind; a thing done with sophistication, poise and intelligence. The picture is magnificently photographed. It is filled with wittily conceived close-ups, expertly massed panoramas and action shot with distinction. It is altogether directed with genius and—is excellent entertainment."

"The opening of the Embassy Theatre last night was both a social and a cinema triumph," declares Regina Cannon in the New York Daily Graphic. "'The Merry Widow' is von Stroheim at his best. In point of artistry, directing, acting and photography nothing better has ever been seen on Broadway. As an operetta, 'The Merry Widow' was extremely popular; as a motion picture it is a sensation! Not only is Mae Murray entrancingly lovely, her acting is beyond criticism. Never on land or sea have there been such ravishingly beautiful close-ups as the director and the photographer give us of Miss Murray. As for John Gilbert—words fail us! His characterization is beyond even our expectations—and we expected perfection at that. Always a splendid actor, as Prince Danilo, Mr. Gilbert has reached the heights and brought them down with him, so that from henceforth he need fear no rival."

I. E. Chadwick Buys Independent Studios; Big Program Planned

THE latest bulletin from the offices of the Chadwick Pictures Corporation announces the purchase by Mr. Chadwick, president of the entire interest in the property known as the Independent Studio, at Sunset Boulevard and Gower Street, Los Angeles, Cal. The consummation of this deal was made when Mr. Chadwick bought out the remaining half interest from Jesse J. Goldburg at the New York headquarters of the Chadwick organization and Mr. Chadwick is now preparing to leave for California for the purpose of making arrangements for the organization of an extensive studio staff to handle the future productions to be made by his company.

Chadwick Pictures Corporation is one of the most important organizations in the independent field and its 1925-1926 program, many productions for which have already been completed, is probably the most ambitious to be offered in the independent market. Several Chadwick special productions are scheduled for release in this program with all star casts and elaborate setting and the new studio will be of material assistance in the producing of these features. "The Count of Luxembourg," "Winning the Futurity" and others of a like calibre which are in this season's program will need an entire studio for production.

The entire Chadwick program includes "The Wizard of Oz," and "The Perfect Clown," featuring Larry Semon, "The Unchastened Woman," starring the famous Theda Bara, "Paint and Powder" and "Winning the Futurity," "The Count of Luxembourg," an all star special, "The Bells," in which Lionel Barrymore will be starred; six action comedy-dramas in which George Walsh will be starred; and two productions starring Charles Ray.

Saxton Joins Chadwick

Charles Saxton, formerly cartoonist with the New York World, is associated with the Chadwick Pictures Corporation. He collaborated with Leon Lee in titling "The Wizard of Oz." Saxton first became associated with motion pictures when Mr. Lee took him to the coast in the capacity of gagman for productions in which Mr. Lee was at that time interested. He later deserted the movie field to assume directorship of the Art department of the Vanderbilt Newspaper Syndicate, and later resigned this post to again work for Chadwick collaborating with Hampton del Ruth on the titles for George Walsh's first production for this corncern, "American Pluck."

Mr. Saxton has just finished titling Larry Semon's second feature length comedy for Chadwick. "The Perfect Clown." This production is said to be the comedian's best and the titles add a great deal to the humor of the picture.

Chadwick Postpones

I. E. Chadwick is remaining in New York to complete arrangements for an intense exploitation campaign on his forthcoming program for the 1925-1926 season. Progress on productions for the forthcoming year has forged ahead steadily and Mr. Chadwick will also arrange for more plays, books or whatever he deems suitable for further production. As soon as these arrangements are completed Mr. Chadwick will return to California and take an active part in completing production on the entire program.

Mae Busch, Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer stock player, in a new Erte creation. Miss Busch is now playing throughout the country to packed houses in "The Unholy Three," in which she is featured with Lon Chaney. Tod Browning directed this smashing success from the story by Tod Robbins.

Carrera and Medina Buys Chadwick Pictures for Cuba

IN addition to the extensive territory already closed for the entire 1925-1926 product in domestic and foreign territories, Chadwick completed arrangements with Carrera & Medina, one of the most prominent exchanges in Cuba, for the distribution of fourteen of its pictures in that territory. The pictures involved are "The Unchastened Woman," hailing Theda Bara's return to the screen after an absence of five years; "Paint and Powder," and "Winning the Futurity," two Hunt Stromberg special productions; "Some Pun'kins" and "Sweet Adeline," starring Charles Ray; "The Bells," adapted from the famous stage play of the same name, featuring Lionel Barrymore; a series of six pictures starring George Walsh, the first three of which are "American Pluck," "Blue Blood" and "The Prince of Broadway," now completed; also "The Man of Iron," with Lionel Barrymore.

Besides operating their important exchange, Carrera & Medina are also owners of a string of theatres in Cuba, and are planning an intensive exploitation campaign to put over these productions.

Arrangements have also been successfully negotiated with the China Film Syndicate of Shanghai for the distribution of these Chadwick productions in China.

MEMBERS OF STELLAR CAST IN "THE OTHER WOMAN'S STORY"
B. P. Schulberg has selected several stars for his forthcoming Preferred Picture. Left to right we see David Torrence, Riza Roy, Alice Calhoun and Robert Frazer.

Bachmann at Preferred Studios Arranges Schulberg Schedule Through Next April

AS a result of the production conference being held on the coast between B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures, and J. G. Bachmann, general manager of distribution, a comprehensive production and release schedule has been mapped out providing for the delivery of fourteen pictures by the middle of April, the balance of six to follow by the early summer.

With "Parisian Love" and "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work" already available for first runs, Mr. Bachmann has announced that the third release for the season will be "With This Ring" on September 5. Fred C. Windermere directed this story suggested by the novel by Fanny Heaslip Lea. Alyce Mills, Lou Tellegen, Forrest Stanley, Donald Keith and Dick Sutherland are included in the cast.

On September 25, a romantic melodrama, "Free to Love," directed by Frank O'Connor and featuring Clara Bow, will be delivered. Opposite Miss Bow is Donald Keith with Raymond McKee, Hallam Cooley, Winter Hall and others in the supporting cast.

"The Other Woman's Story," a Gasnier production of Peggy Gaddis' novel, comes on October 16. John Goodrich wrote the screen version of this problem play founded on a famous American divorce suit. Robert Frazer, Alice Calhoun, Helen Lee Worthing, Mahlon Hamilton, Riza Royce and David Torrence are the principals involved.

Following this production on November 16 comes "The Plastic Age," one of the highlights on the Schulberg schedule. Eve Unsell and Fredericka Sagor are responsible for the adaptation of Percy Marks' sensational novel of American youth which registered as 1924's best seller. Clara Bow and Donald Keith are heading the cast which includes also Henry B. Walthall, Mary Alden, Gilbert Roland, David Torrence, and other favorites. Wesley Ruggles is now completing the direction.

"Lew Tyler's Wives" on November 27 will be of special note as the second production of Marcel De Sano, new Schulberg director, whose first release, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," stirred critical interest to an unusual degree.

"The Lawful Cheater" comes on December 18. Again Clara Bow is featured in a romance of melodramatic flavor directed by Frank O'Connor from Adele Buffington's story. George Cooper, Raymond McKee and Edward Hearn play in support of Miss Bow's lead.

The first Schulberg release in the calendar year of 1926 will be "Horses and Women," a spectacular story of the turf based upon L. B. Yates' Saturday Evening Post novel, "The Biography of a Race Horse."

"Eden's Fruit," by John Goodrich, to be directed by Gasnier will furnish the Preferred release for January 28.

"The Romance of a Million Dollars," by Elizabeth Dejeans will be ready for exhibition by February 18. This will directly precede the big screen version of Bronson Howard's play, "Shenandoah," to be released on March 11. Both of these stories are now in preparation.

"Dancing Days," by J. J. Bell, which shows the feverish pursuit of continual excitement by a mother, father, son and daughter of a never-stay-home family will be shown on April 2. It is planned to make this a Gasnier production.

Larry Evans' story, "The Aristocrat," originally appearing in Hearst's Magazine will reach the screen on April 25.

The Schulberg program will be brought to a close with six other stories, release dates on which have not yet been decided upon. These properties include "Shopworn," by Patricia Wetherill, "Exclusive Rights," by Evelyn Campbell, "Studies in Wives" and "Shameful Behavior"—both stories by Mrs. Belloc Lowndes—"His New York Wife," by John Goodrich and "The Worst Woman," by Larry Evans.

Donald Keith and Clara Bow, who are appearing in B. P. Schulberg's screen version of "The Plastic Age."

Scenes in "Married Neighbors," a two-reel Century Comedy, featuring Constance Darling and Billy Engle. Charles Lamont directed this Universal release.

Columbia Pictures Official Says: "We Stay Independent"

PERSISTENT rumors have been current in the motion picture field and in Wall Street for the past two weeks that Columbia Pictures Corporation has been sold to one of the picture producing combines, which statements are vigorously denied by Treasurer Jack Cohn, who with Joe Brandt and Mr. Cohn's brother Harry, are the owners of this progressing producing company.

Mr. Cohn admits that a number of flattering offers have been made in the past few weeks, but denies unequivocally Columbia Pictures Corporation is on the market despite all the stories which have been published of late.

"Our growth," Mr. Cohn explains, "has been consistent and solid from the very start, and we are planning to make more, and bigger, pictures next year. Just at present our franchise holders are in the midst of the sales campaign of our 1925-26 productions, and we find that exhibitors are favoring us more than ever before.

"Next year we expect to make the best ever offered by any independent picture producer. Although last year the exhibitors were unstinted in their praises of our productions, today, on the strength of this year's bookings, we are encouraged to make offers to the biggest stars now available.

"Mr. Brandt, President of Columbia Pictures, with many years of experience in the production and distribution end of this business, as General Manager for Universal, has been the big factor in our lining up responsible distribution sources all over the country—as a matter of fact, all over the world. Today we have franchise holders everywhere and we consider our distribution channels as strong as those of any national organization.

"In his travels across the country Mr. Brandt has come into personal contact with thousands of showmen who have given him their direct assurances of whole-hearted cooperation and they have already backed up this assurance by booking Columbia Pictures.

"As proof of the fact that we do not intend to sell out, we are formulating plans for a bigger production season the coming year and we have completed plans for the acquisition of one of the largest studio units on the coast.

"We have acquired several plays, books and stories of wide circulation. And on top of this, because of the support of the exhibitors this year, we have backed up our promises by our cash in order to help the exhibitors make more money.

"In our next year's plans we undoubtedly will use a greater array of stellar talent than ever before and with our established distribution, both national and foreign, we are assured of responsible outlet wherever pictures are screened. We have successfully fought our battles as independent producers from the very first year of our entry into the business of producing pictures. With fifteen years of complete motion picture producing and distribution experiences we know we can offer as much to the exhibitor as a national organization. And we are going to stay independent in doing it.

"We have the support of the best exchange men in the country, men who know all the 'ins and outs' of picture distribution, to handle our product. They want us to continue making pictures for them. The backing which they have given to us is real proof. Such keen exchangemen as North, Charnas, Amsterdam, Ellman, Hyman, Sheffield, Oldknow, McConville and Montague, Rosenthal & Steinberg, Mayne, Grauman, Friedman, and H. & W. distribute Columbia Pictures everywhere successfully.

"We are in the business of making pictures as independents, and as long as we have the support of the exhibitors we will continue as independents and we will not consider any offer to sell out no matter how flattering it may be."

"Kentucky Pride" and "Havoc" In Fox Release List for September

CLOSE on the heels of "Lightnin'" and "The Lucky Horseshoe," released in August, come five widely varied supreme attractions on Fox Flm Corporation's September program. "Kentucky Pride," "As No Man Has Loved," "The Wheel," "The Timber Wolf" and "Havoc" run the gamut from a racing story of the Blue Grass country through historical romance, society drama and western thriller to a powerful drama of war-dazed women.

"Kentucky Pride," which opens on September 6 in first run theatres, is the autobiography of a racing filly. In producing this romance of the kings and queens of the turf, John Ford secured such sterling equine actors as Man o' War, Negofol, Morvich, Fair Play, The Finn, Virginia's Future and Confederacy to play the principal roles.

The merely human actors are Henry B. Walthall, J. Farrell MacDonald and Gertrude Astor. Dorothy Yost wrote the story, which is laid in the Blue Grass country. The picture includes two of the most thrilling horse races ever filmed.

"As No Man Has Loved," based on Edward Everett Hale's story, "The Man Without a Country," has already had a successful three months' run on Broadway. With the excellent literary material at his disposal, Rowland V. Lee fashioned an enthralling photodrama of adventure and romance against a background of American history. Edward Hearn enacts the role of "the man without a country," Pauline Starke is his sweetheart and Lucy Beaumont is his mother. September 13 has been set as the release date.

J. Farrell MacDonald, the "Corporal Casey" of "The Iron Horse," who portrays "Jerry, the Mailman," in the William Fox production, "Once to Every Man," directed by John Ford.

The second supreme attraction of the John Golden unit of clean American pictures, "The Wheel," by Winchell Smith, will be presented on September 20. Of this, his first picture under the Fox banner, Victor Schertzinger has made a vividly human story of high pressure life. The photodrama retains all the dramatic power and high voltage thrills of the original Golden stage play. Margaret Livingston, Harrison Ford, Claire Adams and Mahlon Hamilton head the cast. The diverting comedy titles were written by Montague Glass, creator of Potash and Perlmutter.

On the same date as "The Wheel," Buck Jones will appear in his first starring vehicle of the season, "The Timber Wolf," based on Jackson Gregory's thrilling novel. He essays a new type of role, that of a rich lumberman who is a champion of the weak and a terror to their oppressors. Elinor Fair is the charming heroine and Dave Dyas is the villain.

The mightiest picture of the five is "Havoc," based on the international stage success of the same name by Henry Walthal. "Havoc" is the story of the devastation wrought by a beautiful woman without a soul. The drama moves through the gay night clubs and homes of a London under the stimulating and demoralizing influences of war. The action of the picture takes the hero and the villain, George O'Brien and Walter McGrail, to the front in France in scenes of startling realism.

Madge Bellamy is the heroine, and Margaret Livingston is the heartless woman who laid waste men's hearts. Leslie Fenton, Bertram Grassby, Eulalie Jensen, David Butler and Harvey Clark have important roles. This is the second Rowland V. Lee production of the season.

Marion Davies in the role of "Fely" in her latest starring production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, "Lights of Old Broadway," a Monta Bell production for M.-G.-M.

DeMille Signs Schildkraut Who Will Give Up the Stage

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT, internationally famous stage star, who has just completed work in the featured role of Cecil De Mille's personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday," has been placed under a long term contract to appear exclusively in De Mille productions immediately upon the completion of his present starring contract with the producers of the sensational stage play, "The Firebrand."

The run of "The Firebrand," one of the biggest Broadway successes in recent years, was interrupted this summer to allow the players a vacation and to permit Schildkraut to appear in the De Mille special. It will now be resumed and run for several months with Schildkraut in the title role before the star will return to Los Angeles and again take up work at the De Mille studio.

"It is my belief," states Cecil De Mille, "That when Joseph Schildkraut devotes his entire time to motion pictures, the screen will have gained another outstanding personality.

"He has triumphed splendidly on the stage. A stranger from Europe, in four years he has won the highest honors offered by America's legitimate drama. He is a splendidly trained actor, vividly colorful, and I have in mind a number of roles which he should do magnificently.

"His performance is superb in 'The Road to Yesterday,' adapted by Jeannie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix. The role he portrays is an extremely romantic one, with scenes laid in both 1925 and 1625, and his handling of the characterizations exceeded all my expectations."

Although Mr. Schildkraut is a Roumanian subject by birth, he has taken out his first papers and will soon petition for American citizenship. He came to America after three triumphant years in "Liliom" in Vienna.

He was educated in Hamburg and Berlin and at the age of 13 created the role of "The Wanderer." He has played Shakespeare, Molnar, Hauptmann and Goethe plays all over Europe, alone, and with his father, Rudolph Schildkraut.

In this country he has played "Peer Gynt," "Liliom," "The Highwayman" and "The Firebrand." Under the De Mille contract he will now give up the stage entirely in favor of motion pictures.

Finish Two More Pictures

Advice from Hollywood state that Warner Bros. have added two more finished productions to their 1925-26 schedule. The two completed this week are "Hogan's Alley" and "The Clash of the Wolves."

EUGENE O'BRIEN

Appearing in the title role of "Simon the Jester," the first Frances Marion production to be released through Producers Distributing Corporation.

Stupendous Sets Built for DeMille's "Road to Yesterday"

IN filming the final sequences of "The Road to Yesterday," Cecil B. De Mille, this week is using the biggest set he has employed since his production of "The Ten Commandments."

A castle, 100 feet high, with accompanying walls and battlements, provides the biggest spectacle in this new De Mille production and hundreds of extras were used to portray the celebration of peasants upon the occasion of a gala wedding ceremony.

Two whole oxen and several suckling pigs were roasted to supply the proper touch to the dining arrangements. Huge hogsheads offered a continual flow of liquid refreshments, and the whole set was rendered particularly effective by being filmed at night.

The climax of these exterior castle scenes comes in a dramatic witch burning. It is from this scene that the audience is carried back to the twentieth century action of the story.

The cost of the concentrated illumination necessary for the taking of these elaborate night scenes is disclosed in a statement from Frank McGuire, head electrician of the De Mille Studios, that: "in one hour on the big castle set more electricity was consumed than is required for all the street lights in the entire city of Los Angeles."

"The Road to Yesterday" was adapted from the famous old stage play by Jeanie Macpherson and Beulah Marie Dix. It features Joseph Schildkraut, Jetta Goudal, Vera Reynolds, William Boyd, Julia Faye, Casson Ferguson and Trixie Friganza.

Leatrice Joy's Next

Paul Sloane, director of Rod La Rocque's first starring picture, "The Coming of Amos," is now making preparations at the De Mille Studio, to start the production of "Made for Love," starring Leatrice Joy immediately upon the completion of the star's work in "The Wedding Song," which is now in work under Alan Hale's direction.

Flynn Completes "Heads Up"

Maurice (Lefty) Flynn has completed "Heads Up," a comedy melodrama laid in South Amreica during a revolution. The production was produced by Harry Garson for F. B. O. release.

FAMOUS OLD TRAIN IN FRONT OF THE WARNER, AND IN FRONT OF THE CITY HALL

Warner Brothers' exploiteers, under Myer Lesser, Director of Advertising, Publicity and Exploitation, used the old DeWitt Clinton train, relic of nearly a hundred years ago, to ballyhoo "The Limited Mail," showing last week at Warner's Theatre, Broadway and Fifty-second street, New York City. The old train, on motor trucks, was taken all over the metropolis. Harry M. Warner, president of Warner Brothers, is seen at the left.

Warner Bros. Use Old DeWitt Clinton Train to Exploit "The Limited Mail"

THE biggest exploitation stunt New York has seen in a long time, and one of the greatest ever put over was sprung by Warner Bros., this week, when they borrowed from the New York Central Railroad the old De Witt Clinton train, the first operated by that railroad, nearly one hundred years ago, and paraded it daily through the streets.

The processions were a feature of Railroad Men's Week, which coincided with the opening of Warners Theatre, at Broadway and Fifty-second Street, where the attraction was the thrillingly realistic railroad feature, "The Limited Mail," starring Monte Blue.

For several years the old train, which made its first run in 1831, has occupied a place of honor on the balcony over-looking the main concourse of Grand Central Terminal. There it has been jealously guarded, and repeated requests for permission to take it outside have been refused by the railroad officials in charge.

Finally a special concession was granted to Warner Bros. only after the producers had agreed not only to bond themselves heavily to guarantee the safe return of the precious relic, but to increase the insurance on the train and to guard it carefully every minute that it was away from its home.

Five huge motor trucks were required to transport the old train about the city. On the first was the locomotive. On the other trucks were the coaches.

The first appearance of the train in the streets created a decided sensation, for many thousands of New Yorkers had never seen it, despite the years through which it has been on exhibition at the terminal. From the station the procession went down Fourth Avenue, and LaFayette and Chambers streets to Mail, and through City Hall Plaza to City Hall. There Mayor John F. Hylan was waiting on the front steps to receive it.

From City Hall the train was drawn up Broadway to Times Square and thence to Warners Theatre. Throughout the entire route it excited the rapt attention of thousands.

Additional interest attached to this display because the train had been filled with men and women dressed in the costumes in vogue in the thirties of the last century.

Throughout, the train was guarded as carefully as is the President of the United States when he visits the big city. A dozen uniformed patrolmen attended it constantly, reinforced by an almost equal number of detectives in citizens' clothes.

For the housing of the train during the present week nearly half of a large garage was rented by Warner Bros., and there a guard was maintained nightly.

Each succeeding morning has seen the pulling out of the train from the garage and a parade about the uptown streets. Its longest stops have been made in front of Warners Theatre and in Times Square, where it has appeared repeatedly.

Gloria Swanson Lauded In "The Coast of Folly"

"THE COAST OF FOLLY," Gloria Swanson's latest starring picture, in which she plays three different roles, opened Sunday, August 30, at the Rivoli, New York City, with large attendance and some highly flattering reviews from the New York newspaper critics. On Sunday, 9,424 persons paid to witness Miss Swanson in what has been called her most interesting picture. For a hot day this was regarded as exceptional business. On Monday the attendance was 7,315.

It was the consensus of opinion among the critics that Miss Swanson was a revelation in "The Coast of Folly."

Dorothy Herzog wrote in "The Mirror": "Gloria Swanson is a revelation. Gloria portrays three different roles. As the Victorian gal, dolled in flowing skirts, pompadour hair and coy manners, she shows promise of being the Mommer she later becomes. As Mommer, she looks like she may be twenty years from now. She gives a splendid account of herself in this part. Her walk is a marvel, her pecky affectations very good, and her makeup a work of art. As the modern flapper she manages to act with youthful buoyancy.

Aileen St. John Brenon, in "The Morning Telegraph," wrote: "Bravo, Gloria Swanson!"

Louella Parsons, in "The New York American," had this to say: "No one, after seeing Gloria Swanson in the hard make-up of a frowsy, middle-aged woman fighting for youth in 'The Coast of Folly,' can accuse her of being vain."

Mildred Spain wrote in "The Daily News": "To say that the film is all Gloria and a yard wide is putting it mildly. Gloria Swanson has never had the chance to show her versatility as she does in this high-voltage drama of life as it is lived on the coast of folly (not Hollywood, but Florida). She is the pompadour girl of twenty years ago. She is the kittenish old woman with ratty hair and ruddied cheeks. And she gives an imitation of Mary Pickford! If Gloria Swanson is one of your favorites—and she must be if the line-up at the Rivoli means anything—this should be your gravy."

Rose Pelswick, in "The Evening Journal," wrote: "The photoplay, which deals with an unjust society scandal, is entertaining, and has several amusing touches."

The "Telegram" critic wrote: "Although we have ever been a Gloria Swanson fan it was somewhat of a revelation to discover that Madame La Marquise is capable of acting the role of an elderly Countess—French of course—as pleasingly as she does in her new film, an adaptation by James Creelman of Conigsby Dawson's novel, "The Coast of Folly."

Mordaunt Hall, critic of the New York Times, struck the keynote of praise when he pointed out that Miss Swanson "is making a bold bid to be known as the Bernhardt of the screen."

Mr. Hall wrote in "The Times": "One is impressed by the lofty aspirations of the popular actress. She virtually fills three roles. Miss Swanson is singularly well made up as the Countess. She looks old, but always Miss Swanson. These scenes are amazingly well pictured and quite a credit to Miss Swanson."

The movie-goer of the "Evening Sun" included this tribute: "In her impersonation of the elderly Countess—who saves the young Gloria from scandal—Miss Swanson gives perhaps the most interesting study that she has yet revealed to the camera. 'The Coast of Folly' is good box-office entertainment."

George Gerhard wrote in "The Evening World": "This feature is all Swanson. In fact, this story is overshadowed by the star's characterizations and in all three she is admirable."

Hobart Henley Signs New Contract

Following the expiration of the agreement under which he has been directing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, Hobart Henley signed a new long term contract with that organization, it was announced on the Coast by Harry Rapf, associate studio executive.

The new contract calls for the direction of a series of pictures by Henley. The first, it is announced, will be "Free Lips," an original story by Carey Wilson. Hope Loring and Louis D. Leighton have been assigned to prepare the scenario.

REGINALD DENNY

The Universal star, whose current release, "Where Was I?", is one of his funniest comedies.

Start on New Picture

"How to Train a Wife," a Lewis H. Moomaw Production for Associated Exhibitors, Now in Production

Associated Exhibitors announces "How to Train a Wife," as the title selected for the new Lewis H. Moomaw feature picture, which was placed in production last week on the West Coast.

A striking array of screen talent has been engaged by the producer for the new production, with Claire Windsor and Bert Lytell enacting the leading roles. In their support will appear Jean Hersholt, Walter Long, George Fawcett and Walter McGrail.

Lewis Moomaw is also the producer and director of Associated Exhibitors' "Under the Rouge," a crook melodrama which recently scored its Metropolitan success at the Colony Theatre on Broadway.

"Ladies of Leisure"

Harry Cohn, producer of Columbia Pictures, has signed one of the screen's most interesting character actors, T. Roy Barnes, to play with Elaine Hammerstein in her forthcoming Columbia special, "Ladies of Leisure," which Tom Buckingham is to direct. Robert Ellis has been announced as Miss Hammerstein's leading man, while a number of other well-known character actors of ability are to be selected, according to Cohn, as soon as actual production starts.

Scenes in "Wild, Wild Suzan," a Paramount picture starring Bebe Daniels, supported by Rod La Rocque.

Universal Has Great Line-up of Stories for 1926-27 Schedule

WITH the exception of a half dozen big stories and plays which are now under negotiation Universal announces that it has virtually completed its schedule of productions for 1926-27. This announcement was issued following the visit of Mrs. Winifred Eaton Reeve, Universal's scenario editor, to the Coast where she was in daily conference for two weeks with Raymond L. Schrock, general manager of Universal City, and the Coast production and scenario departments. It is anticipated that the quantity of production will be virtually the same as this year, although it may be that four more Jewel productions will be made next year. The Jewel product announced is in addition to three super-Jewels of the type of "Phantom of the Opera."

Two of the Denny pictures have already been purchased. They are "Rolling Home" by John Hunter Booth and "Signs" by Dorothy Grundy. "Rolling Home" was a play and was purchased through Sanger & Jordan. It was later made into a musical comedy under the title "Like a King." It will be one of the first of the season's offerings this year. "Signs" is a unique and original story written by an eighteen-year-old school girl which so enthused the Scenario Department that they purchased it immediately and sent it to Universal City to be put into proper screen form. It will be a highly interesting successor to such automobile stories as "Sporting Youth" and "California Straight Ahead." Of about ten stories which are under consideration, Universal will purchase three more in the next two or three weeks to complete the Denny schedule.

So enthusiastic was the reception of Louise Dresser in "The Goose Woman" that Universal has been endeavoring ever since to find stories big enough and roles of the proper character for this new star. So far two have been chosen. They are "Perch of the Devil," a highly dramatic novel by Gertrude Atherton, and "The Vehement Flame" by Margaret Deland.

For Norman Kerry Universal plans a big racing story, a big naval story, and the Frederick Isham story, "This Way Out," which was announced for Reginald Denny but was crowded off of this year's Denny schedule. The racing story is entitled "Racing Blood" and was adapted by Winifred Eaton Reeve from the "Blister Jones" stories by John Tainter Foote. The Foote stories have been regarded as classics in this field and taken together will provide a horse and racing story which Universal plans as the final word in turf pictures. For the naval story Universal has purchased "The Big Gun" by Richard Barry, published first in the Argosy All Story Magazine. It was purchased through Carl Milligan, agent.

For Mary Philbin Universal plans a production of the sensational, anonymous novel, "Another Woman's Life." "Folle Farine" by Ouida is already being put into film form, and two original stories are being written for Miss Philbin also.

For Laura La Plante Universal has purchased "Brides Will Be Brides," a newspaper serial by Lucille Van Slyke which ran in between four and five hundred dailies.

"Click of the Triangle T" by Oscar J. Friend, which recently appeared in novel form, is the first of the Hoot Gibson stories to be purchased. Another great Hoot Gibson story obtained by Universal is "Cow Jerry," a novel by George W. Ogden.

Among the all-star pictures which have been purchased are "The Quest of Joan," by James Oliver Curwood; "The Old Soak," by Don Marquis, previously announced; "Crimes of the Arm Chair Club," by Arthur Somers Roche; "Spangles," a big circus story by Nellie Revell; "The Whole Town's Talking," a play by John Emerson and Anita Loos; "The Cow Girl," by Arthur Stringer; "Cap Fallon, Fire Fighter," by John Moroso.

Fox Directors Complete Many Big Productions Listed for Next Season

WITH the completion of "The Winding Stair" at the Hollywood studios, each of twelve directors of Fox Film Corporation has finished one or more of the supreme attractions scheduled for the new season.

John Ford has been the busiest of this galaxy of directors, with five big attractions to his credit. The man who gave the screen "The Iron Horse" has also produced "Lightnin'," the first of the seven John Golden stage successes to be made into photoplays; "The Fighting Heart," "Thank You" and "Kentucky Pride." Ford won his spurs as the director of "Cameo Kirby" and "Three Jumps Ahead."

John Griffith Wray has just finished "The Winding Stair" for the Fox company. This photoplay is from the romantic novel by A. E. W. Mason. Most of the action in the film takes place in Morocco and the desert effects are wonderful.

Another of the Fox directors who is adding to his reputation as a leading producer is Emmett Flynn, who is now busily engaged directing Mix in "The Yankee Senor."

Two of the big attractions of the Fox schedule for the new season were produced by the latest directing genius to appear in the film firmament. Not content to rest temporarily on the laurels won, Rowland V. Lee has added additional honors in the direction of "Havoc," the drama of social life in London during the war.

Victor Schertzinger has completed production of two John Golden stage successes, "The Wheel" and "Thunder Mountain," based on "Howdy Folks." Schertzinger will also direct the filming of "Siberia," which will be one of the biggest melodramatic offerings of the year.

Frank Borzage, whose chief claim to distinction has rested on "Humoresque," promises to be known in future as the producer of "Lazybones," the screen masterpiece he has made for Fox from the Owen Davis stage play. He is now casting for "The First Year," one of the John Golden plays.

J. G. Blystone produced "The Lucky Horseshoe," the Tom Mix picture which has just made a big impression on Broadway. He also directed the modern Buffalo Bill in "The Everlasting Whisper."

Harry Millarde added another big success to the Fox list with "The Fool," based on Channing Pollock's play.

Reginald Barker recently completed production of "When the Door Opened," the James Oliver Curwood story of the great Northwest.

Lynn Reynolds completed production of "Durand of the Bad Lands," a Buck Jones starring vehicle.

W. S. Van Dyke has completed a thrilling western picture, "The Timber Wolf," another Buck Jones film. He is now directing Jones in "The Desert's Price." Roy Neill has completed a Buck Jones picture, "A Man Four Square." Later he is scheduled to make "Marriage," based on H. G. Wells' novel.

Henry Otto is making the allegorical sequences for "The Ancient Mariner," based on Samuel Taylor Coleridge's great poem.

George Marshall has been promoted to supervision of all Fox comedies. Marshall has two Van Bibbers of the new series to his personal credit, and Robert P. Kerr has completed three more. Daniel Keefe has completed two pictures in the Helen and Warren Married Life series based on the stories of Mabel Herbert Urner. Each of the Imperial Comedy directors, Bryan Foy, Lewis Seiler and Benjamin Stoloff, has one or more completed pictures to his credit.

Denver Critic Likes New Chaplin Picture

"'The Gold Rush' is with us, and a box-office record which has stood at the Victory Theatre for five years has departed," said Betty Craig in the Denver Post when Charlie Chaplin's new United Artists Corporation release opened at the Victory, Denver.

"'The Gold Rush' is Charlie Chaplin; typically Charlie Chaplin; more elaborate and possibly funnier than ever before.

"It can be said without fear of contradiction, this is his greatest effort."

Fox Preparing Punchful Posters To Aid In Exploiting Its Films

UNUSUALLY convincing examples of the punchful, pictorial posters being designed for the use of exhibitors throughout the country are noted among the posters prepared for this season's attractions by Fox Film Corporation. The paper designed for the first pictures on the Fox release schedule are especially fine and will prove to be the strongest advertising aid offered to any exhibitor.

The proper type of paper to sell the picture is the most important part of any advertising campaign, and unusual time and attention was devoted to this branch of the Fox accessory department. The result has been the preparation of posters so far outside the beaten track in motion picture advertising that they have won the enthusiastic praise of both artists and theatre men.

Two of the outstanding examples of the advancement shown in poster work are the attention-arresting posters designed for "Havoc" and "The Lucky Horseshoe," both big Fox attractions scheduled for early release. The twenty-four sheets available for these pictures are perfect examples of everything demanded in a theatrical poster. They have been designed to make powerful cutouts, which is of interest to every exhibitor who gives much thought to his lobby.

Louis Usabal, the noted Spanish artist, who has had several paintings hung in recent art exhibits, is giving most of his time to designing Fox posters. The poster for "Havoc" is one of the most artistic achievements in pictorial symbolism yet attempted for motion picture work. The twenty-four sheet stand for "The Lucky Horseshoe" is treated in a different style in keeping with the picture subject in bringing impressively to the foreground the Spanish environment that Tom Mix gets into this story.

"Black Cyclone" Stunt

When "Black Cyclone," the Pathe picture featuring Rex, the Hal Roach equine star, played an engagement at the Melba Theatre in Dallas, Texas, recently, Mr. and Mrs. Guinn Williams, the human stars of the picture, made personal appearances. A tie-up was effected with the Dallas Dispatch whereby the paper ran a full page of co-operative advertisements of local stores which the photoplay stars visited on a shopping tour. Professionally, Mr. and Mrs. Williams are known as "Big Boy" Williams and Kathleen Collins. The reviewers of papers in all sections of the country have praised both for their excellent work in this Pathe picture.

Automobile, in "Seven Days" Ballyhoo, Arrives in N. Y.

THE spectacular transcontinental ballyhoo for Al Christie's "Seven Days" was successfully accomplished this week when, on Wednesday, the Studebaker coach drew up at the Colony Theatre, on Broadway, at Fifty-third street, New York City, after making the run from Los Angeles to New York in seven days.

Emblazoned with lettering advertising the Al Christie feature, and bedecked with pennants of the cities through which it dashed on its record run from the West Coast to the East Coast, the car came into New York in charge of Mike Newman, veteran showman and exploiter, who, after several days in the Metropolis, will pilot the car back to Los Angeles by easy stages and over a different route to that taken on the eastward journey.

In addition to making the spectacular dash from coast to coast and impressing the title of the production along a three thousand mile path, the car was held long enough in each important city along the route, to arrange for previews of "Seven Days" and at a number of cities special stunts were put over in which the car was the principal figure.

"Seven Days" is now being shown at the Colony, on Broadway and the arrival of the "Seven Days" car will give added impetus to its run.

Screen Snapshots

Columbia Pictures announces that Screen Snapshots No. 26, last of the fifth series of these one-reel intimate reels of the doings, private and public, of the celebrities of the screen world, will be released this week. The first of the sixth series will follow in two weeks. This last of the fifth series includes: Mary Pickford, Lillian Gish, Bill Hart, Monte Blue. Priscilla Dean, Louise Fazenda, Anita Stewart, Evelyn Brent, Kenneth Hanlan, Irene Rich, Speck O'Donnell, Patsy Ruth Miller, Louis B. Mayer, Harry Rapf, Antonio Gaudio and Joseph M. Schenck.

"Tumbleweeds" Cast

Work in William S. Hart's production, "Tumbleweeds," for United Artists Corporation release, directed by King Baggot, is progressing with such well known players as Barbara Bedford, in the feminine lead, Lucien Littlefield, J. Gordon Russell, Richard R. Neill, Jack Murphy, Lillian Leighton, Gertrude Claire, George Marion, Capt. T. E. Duncan, James Gordon, Fred Gamble, Turner Savage, Monte Collins and others. Wallace Kerrigan is the production manager. The cameraman is John Stumar.

Scenes in "Drusilla With a Million," the Harmon Weight production for F. B. O., in which Mary Carr, Kenneth Harlan and a splendid cast scored an instant hit. This is one of the best box-office features of 1925.

Fox Survey Shows Exhibitors Evince Great Enthusiam in the News Reel

ONE of the most interesting facts disclosed to Fox Film Corporation as the result of a survey of the country in the interest of one and two reel pictures was the popularity of the news reels and the personal pride and interest most exhibitors take in this particular unit of their programs.

When the subject of the news reel was brought up for discussion, it was found that the most non-committal exhibitors would immediately evince intense interest, launch into the conversation and never weary of swapping or listening to tales of the activities of news reel organizations, their trials and tribulations, their beats and scoops, their place on a program and their proper presentation.

Impressed by this interest, the Fox short subject sales department is now considering a plan to stimulate the same enthusiasm and pride in the motion picture patrons. They believe that it is possible to work up in the public the same feeling for "a favorite news reel" that it now evidences for favorite newspapers, magazines and the like.

The result of imbuing the public with this feeling towards the news reel, Fox officials opine, is that a patron would no more consider missing a relcase of his favorite news reel than he would of missing an issue of his chosen publication. The box-office effects of such an educational campaign should be apparent to all, they say.

The plans for putting this idea over are not completely formulated as yet, but the best minds of Fox Film Corporation are giving it considerable thought and the time is not far away when it will be ready for dissemination.

One of the first things that will be done in this connection, however, is already decided upon, and that is to acquaint the patrons with the romance of recording contemporaneous history in motion pictures and the wonderful world-wide organization that is functioning twenty-four hours a day to assure that the fifteen minute news release which they take as a matter of course is one of the greatest wonders of the world.

As convincing evidence of the interest exhibitors take in their news reel, Fox officials point to the ever increasing number of theatres which book every news reel issued and from them make up their own composite reel for presentation. In many such cases, it pleases them to say, they can truthfully claim that Fox News gets a better representation than any of its competitors.

Even stronger endorsement of Fox News is contained in a statement by Fred C. Quimby, short subject sales manager of Fox Film Corporation, who declares that the sales of this unit of the Fox company are greatly in excess of those recorded at this time last season. Mr. Quimby says there is every indication of a greater proportional increase as the autumn season approaches.

He points with a certain amount of pride to the fact that Harry Davis' magnificent million dollar Grand and Davis theatres in Pittsburgh are the latest to fall into the procession of big fellows who have booked Fox News. These, with the Rowland & Clark Blackstone Theatre, give Fox three big first runs in that city, all within a stone's throw of one another.

Other outstanding theatres and circuits to contract for Fox News are:

Finklestein & Rubin in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth; Hoblitzelle Circuit, in the Southwest; I. Libson, Cincinnati; Liberty Theatre, Spokane; Whitehurst Theatres, Baltimore; A. H. Blank, Omaha; Harry Olsen, Indianapolis; Skouras Bros. and William Goldman, St. Louis; Victory Theatre, Denver; Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo; Cooney, Karzas, Coston Circuit, Chicago; Saenger Amusement Co., New Orleans; Jensen & Von Herberg, Seattle, and the Comerford Circuit in Pennsylvania.

Ambitious Schedule for 1925-26 Announced by Century Film Corp.

THE Century Film Corporation, producer of Century Comedies, is just entering upon the most ambitious release program ever projected in the history of that comedy company. The 1925-1926 release schedule, just approved by Julius and Abe Stern, president and vice-president respectively of the corporation, marks a great advance over any previous year's output.

In planning the 1925-1926 comedies, the Stern Brothers took several radical steps. In the first place, following a long and careful survey of the comedy field, they determined to make outstanding improvements in stories, in studio facilities, in production personnel and in the quality of the players and supporting casts.

Another innovation was a distinct grouping of the season's output in star series, the pictures made by each star, such as Wanda Wiley, Edna Marian and the others to be considered as a separate brand of pictures. This was decided upon when returns early this year conclusively proved that Miss Wiley and Miss Marian had built up for themselves a strong clientele and that their comedies, as such, were in unusual demand. Thus the star series plan is expected to be of great advantage to exhibitors, by reason of the fact that the Century stars have varying box-office values in different theatres.

A third innovation was the acquisition of the screen rights for a novelty series of two-reel comedies. This is the Buster Brown Comedy series, being made from the celebrated newspaper cartoon comic of the noted artist, R. F. Outcault. The Century Company is making these pictures as straight comedies, not as animated cartoons. The result is a high class brand of two-reelers which already have won a place for themselves on the first-run screens, although only two of the series have been completed so far.

The Century schedule for 1925-1926 shows a contemplated release of 52 comedies, one a week during the period from August 5th, 1925, to July 28th, 1926. In addition, there will be a Century Special production, "Little Red Riding Hood." This is a novelty two-reeler made with Peter the Great and Baby Peggy. Baby Peggy plays the role of Little Red Riding Hood, of the fairy story, and Peter the Great the role of the wolf. This two-reeler is partly in hand color film.

The fifty-two Centuries consist of a series of twelve Buster Brown-Century Comedies, a series of twelve Wanda Wiley-Century Comedies, a series of twelve Edna Marian-Century Comedies, six comedies featuring Eddie Gordon, six featuring Al Alt and four featuring Charles King.

The Buster Browns are being made by Charles Lamont. Little Arthur Trimble has the role of Buster, Doreen Turner plays Mary Jane, and Pete, the comedy dog, plays Tige, Buster's famous canine companion. The two Buster Brown comedies already completed are "Educating Buster" and "Buster Be Good." They have been pre-released in such big first-run houses as the Granara in San Francisco, in the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles; the State Theatre, Minneapolis; Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, and Ohio Theatre, Indianapolis. They are characterized as one of the biggest type comedy offerings on the market this year.

The twelve Wanda Wiley comedies stand out as a distinct addition to the comedy field. Made under a new and improved production policy, they are being offered as a series which can be featured. Included in this series are such comedies as "Won by Law," "Cupid's Victory," "A Winning Pair," "A Speedy Marriage," "Going Good," "Her Lucky Leap" and "Yearning for Love." Many of these have been pre-released in New York and other territories and are proving excellent drawing cards.

The Edna Marian comedies also form an exceptionally promising series for the coming months. Miss Marian has jumped into popularity during the last half-year. She now has a definite box-office standing of her own, and her series of twelve comedies for 1925-1926 are being widely booked, H. M. Herbel, sales manager for Century, reports. Miss Marian is developing into such an excellent comedian, the Century Company recently loaned her to Universal to play an important role in a forthcoming Universal Jewel picture.

Among the Edna Marian Comedies which already have reached the screen pre-release, and which have been well received, are "After a Reputation." "Stranded." "Uncle Tom's Gal," "Nursery Troubles," "Eighteen Carats," and "Honeymoon Squabbles."

Among the Eddie Gordon Comedies ready for the market are "Crying for Love," "Officer 13," "A Taxi War," "Captain Suds," and "Crowning the Count." Al Alts two-reeler Centuries now being booked are "Paging a Wife," "Piping Hot," "Scandal Hunters," and "Helpful Al."

New York Premiere in 200 Theatres of International Newsreel's Big "Thriller"

"LIFE'S GREATEST THRILLS," the novelty two-reel thriller put out by the International Newsreel Corporation as a patron builder for International Newsreel accounts, will have its New York premiere Sunday, September 6th, when it will be shown day and date in two hundred New York theatres, including the big Broadway houses. This will be a record presentation in the history of simultaneous showings.

This two-reeler had a Chicago premiere several weeks ago when more than a hundred Chicago houses featured it on their programs. The picture is made up of thrilling scenes and "shots" which have appeared in the International Newsreel, most of them exclusively, during the past ten years. It offers conclusive proof that fact is stranger than fiction and that the most thrilling "movie" scenes fade in comparison with the actual thrillers filmed by the International Newsreel cameraman. The picture is being supplied gratis to all International Newsreel accounts.

Probably no other picture ever screened has drawn such flattering testimonials from exhibitors. Almost every one of the Chicago managers who showed it have written in to E. B. Hatrick, general manager of the International Newsreel Corporation, praising this novelty picture and the patron-building idea behind it.

Here are some of the outstanding coments:

Max Balaban, of Balaban & Katz, "I have seen millions of feet of film and have experienced every kind of emotions as I watched, but 'Life's Greatest Thrills' took me right off my feet. The others of our reviewing staff were equally impressed. It occupies only twenty minutes of your time but you will remember it for the rest of your life. I would not miss seeing this film for anything I can think of."

R. A. Alberts, of the National Theatre Company, operating the Capitol, Stratford, Chatham and Hamilton Theatres: "I cannot remember anything I have ever booked for the Cooney Bros. that was as interesting as 'Life's Greatest Thrills' and the occasion of so much favorable expression."

J. L. McCurdy, General Manager of Gregory Theatrical Co.: "As a novelty, 'Life's Greatest Thrills' has no equal in the whole realm of films; as an idea, this screen specialty stands heads and shoulders above everything ever presented. Congratulations on handing the industry something new."

Donald McElroy, Fitzpatrick-McElroy Theatre Circuit: "'Life's Greatest Thrills' is one of the finest subjects we have ever exhibited in our theatres. It is a further evidence of the complete service rendered by International Newsreel."

A. Evans, Manager, Woodlawn Theatre: "'Life's Greatest Thrill' is one of the best things that has been brought to the screen in a long time."

A. H. Bachman, Manager, Randolph Theatre: "Allow me to congratulate you upon the most successful newsreel idea ever conceived. 'Life's Greatest Thrills' is one of the outstanding achievements in the history of filmdom."

Max B. Slott, Manager, Chicago Theatres Corporation, operating the Shakespeare and Julian Theatres: "Our audiences greeted 'Life's Greatest Thrills' with hearty applause and at times were so thrilled that they had to hold on to their seats, with their mouths wide open, gasping."

James E. Coston, General Manager, Sixty-third Street Theatres, which include fourteen leading Chicago houses: "'Life's Greatest Thrills' is without doubt one of the greatest thrills ever put on and was greeted by our audiences with generous applause."

R. A. MacMullen, Ascher Bros. Theatre Corporation: "Audiences leaving our theatres, after having seen 'Life's Greatest Thrills,' were unanimous in declaring that it was one of the greatest of the kind they have ever seen."

Benny Berman, manager of Harper Theatre: "I have seen 'Life's Greatest Trdills' four times. It is the speediest, snappiest and most thrillingly interesting subject I have ever seen screened. It is much more of a sensation and more satisfying than the average big special production.

Earle J. Johnson, manager, Auditorium Theatre: "'Life's Greatest Thrills' is a positive sensation. Never before have I heard so much favorable comment from my audiences as they gave to this picture."

D. E. Rice, managing director, Jackson Park Theatre: "I can frankly say that this is the greatest two-reel picture I have ever seen, with more thrills than any film that has ever been made."

Maurice A. Salkin, Kenwood Theatre: "One of the biggest week days I had in the last three months was the night I played 'Life's Greatest Thrills.'"

Lee Mitchell, manager, Julian Theatre: "In the twenty years I have been in the motion picture business, I have never written a word endorsing a picture; yet I cannot keep from letting you know that I consider 'Life's Greatest Thrills' the most amazingly and interesting picture I have ever seen on the screen."

Alice Terry Returning

Alice Terry has completed her role in "Mare Nostrum" which her husband, Rex Ingram, is producing for Metro-Goldwyn, and will sail on the Majestic, arriving in New York about September 8. Miss Terry is returning to the United States to visit her mother in California and to enjoy a short vacation, after which she will go back to Europe to appear in Mr. Ingram's next picture.

Ingram suspended work at his studio in Nice to go to Paris to bid bon voyage to his wife, but will return as soon as the Majestic sails as he is in the midst of cutting his latest directorial effort.

"Mare Nostrum" has practically been completed. Tony Moreno, who played the leading male role, is planning to sail for America shortly after the middle of the month. Ingram himself will probably remain in France until after his next picture has been completed. Willis Goldbeck has adapted this production to the screen from the novel by Blasco Ibanez.

PRODUCER AND DIRECTOR CONFER

A. H. Sebastian, general manager of Belasco Productions, and Rupert Julian, the director, in conference on the production which Julian will direct for Sebastian under an arrangement with Cecil B. De Mille.

Red Seal Announces Nine Featurettes for September

EDWIN MILES FADMAN, president of Red Seal, announces nine subjects on his September schedule, the first of the announced ninety-five Featurettes to be released this year.

First on the list are "The Silvery Art" and "Flirting with Death," a pair of two-reelers that are supplementary to each other. They show, in a vivid way, the possibilities and the adventure lurking in a pair of skis. They will be, according to Mr. Fadman, among the most thrilling films of the year, and since they record actual feats of daring, they should have more suspense than the obvious melodrama where the audience is always certain that the hero cannot be harmed.

"Swanee River" is the first of the series of thirteen Ko-Ko Song Car-Tunes. Pre-released at the Capitol, New York, this sensational new scries by Max Fleischer set a hard-boiled Broadway audience singing.

The first of the "Marvels of Motion," the films made by the revolutionary Fleischer-Novagraph process, is also on the list.

"Ko-Ko Nuts," described as the funniest Out-of-the-Inkwell yet made, shows the famous clown doing business at an insane asylum.

The gem of the screen for September is "Up the River Conway," and shows some of the beautiful scenery along this famous Welsh river.

Two "Animated Hair Cartoons" by Marcus, the famous cartoonist of the New York Times, and another issue of the lively Film Facts, edited by Max Fleischer, complete the list.

Conway to Direct Jules Verne's "Mysterious Island" for M-G-M

WHAT is planned to be the greatest underwater motion picture ever made will be produced at an early date by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to announcement made last night by Harry Rapf, associate studio executive.

A cable received recently from company agents in France announced successful closing of negotiations with the family of Jules Verne, famous French author, for the motion picture rights to "The Mysterious Island." The rights were purchased from Michael Jules Verne, son of the author, whose signature to the contract was obtained a few days prior to the former's death at a little village outside Paris.

Jack Conway, who directed the last Elinor Glyn production, has been assigned to direct "The Mysterious Island," the underwater scenes of which will be filmed under the direction of J. E. Williamson, owner of the undersea equipment and laboratory at Nassau, Bahamas.

Williamson recently spent more than two months searching for underseas locations in a radius of some two hundred miles off the island of New Providence and taking in the very spot off San Salvadore where Christopher Columbus first sighted the New World in 1492.

Wyndham Gittens, M-G-M scenarist, is now adapting the story for the screen.

Ann Pennington does the Charleston with variations on the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, where she played in Monta Bell's "Pretty Ladies." Ann was featured in this picturization of the Adela Rogers St. Johns story adapted to the screen by Alice D. G. Miller with Tom Moore and ZaSu Pitts.

Pauline Starke, now playing in Robert Z. Leonard's "A Little Bit of Broadway," in one of the Erte creations which she will wear in this picturization of the Richard Connell story, adapted to the screen by Jessie Burns. Charles Ray is featured with Miss Starke in this M.-G.-M. photoplay.

Jack White Has Slogan

"Every Comedy a Feature Production," Governs His Educational Output

"Our slogan this year will be 'Every comedy a feature production,'" is the statement of Jack White, producer general of Jack White Productions and the comedy genius in charge of production at the Educational Studios, Los Angeles.

"There has been too much discrimination in the use of the word 'feature,'" continues Mr. White's statement. "It has always been applied to the longest picture on the exhibitor's progra mregardless of the quality or its entertainment value.

"Mere footage does not make a feature. A feature is the outstanding item of the program whether it is in one, two or ten reels. Entertainment value is the sole standard of quality.

"This year's product of the Educational Studios will be all 'features,' for they will be outstanding points of merit on any program. With our increased stage space, electrical equipment and other facilities at our commmand this year, we are in a position to make better productions than ever before. We are spending more on this year's productions than ever before, for we are determined to live up to our slogan, 'Every comedy a feature production.'"

Work on Next Gold Bond

"Flaming Waters" Will Soon Be Put Into Production at F. B. O. West Coast Plant

Production conferences are under way at the F. B. O. West Coast studios for the next Gold Bond special to be made by Associated Arts Corporation which achieved distinction recently by delivering to Film Booking Offices one of its outstanding successes, "Drusilla with a Million."

The next production will be a melodrama of the oil fields called "Flaming Waters." It is an original story by E. Lloyd Sheldon, the continuity for which has been prepared by Fred Kennedy Myton, scenario editor at the F. B. O. Studios. The production will be supervised by Ludwig Erb, of Associated Arts, who served in a like capacity during the making of "Drusilla."

Pathe Reviews for 1925-26 Will Cover Vast Field of Entertainment, Says Cohen

PATHE REVIEW is preparing for the greatest year of its long and successful career. The 1925-26 plans announced by Emanuel Cohen, Editor of the Review, are without question the most ambitious ever undertaken for a single-reel subject of weekly release, the company announces.

The major portion of the plans have been completed and guarantee a great diversity of subjects with intense human interest and entertainment values. Such outstanding features as the Beebe Expedition to the Sargasso Sea, the Count Byron de Prorok Expedition into Northern Africa, Louis Tolhurst cinema-microscopic studies, "Process-camera" novelty subjects, routines and several series in Pathecolor will be presented to the public in coming issues of Pathe Review.

Since the inception of this screen magazine, it has always been Mr. Cohen's aim to keep Pathe Review refreshingly new and different from other screen subjects. The features have their scope, comedies provide the all-important laughter and news reels cover a wide field, but Pathe Review brings subjects untouched by the other forms of screen entertainment. Every Review subject is new, has its initial presentation in the Review, and is made especially for the Review. Care is taken to avoid duplication of stories shown before. Never, under any circumstances, does the editor "rehash" material that has been presented in other guises. It is through this costly procedure that the high standard and reputation of Pathe Review have been maintained through the years.

A large force of cameramen and technical experts are employed by Editor Cohen to cover the vast field that has been designated as the particular province of the Review. This wide field includes education, science, art, adventure, exploration and kindred lines of human activity and progress. The Pathe Review presents several diverse subjects in each and every issue. It is, therefore, not merely a one-reel production, but one reel of many productions. It is a little program in itself.

Perhaps, the outstanding feature of the Pathe Review for years, and one that steadily increases in popularity, is the Pathecolor section. Previous to last year, Pathecolor was devoted entirely to the presentation of foreign subjects, scenics from France and Southern Europe. In 1924, Mr. Cohen inaugurated the plan of bringing the color scenes to America and prepared the "American Cities in Pathecolor" series. The coming season will find another truly American series in Pathecolor in addition to three other new series of intriguing interest.

"American Colleges in Pathecolor" will be the first of the new series. Because of the beautiful and unique architecture of college buildings and the picturesqueness of the college campus, this subject lends itself admirably to the Pathecolor process. Yale, Harvard, Princeton, Pennsylvania, Northwestern, Leland Stanford and other leading colleges and universities will be represented.

American National Parks will be shown in another Pathecolor series. Among the subjects to be included in this series will be Yellowstone National Park, Crater Lake National Park, Shenandoah National Park, Yosemite National Park, the Black Hills Reservation, Red Wood National Park and Zion National Park. A third series will be the picturization of American poetic gems adapted to music; while the fourth new Pathecolor series will offer remarkable flower studies.

Pathe Review stands by itself in the field of science. It has won for itself a prestige which makes its cooperation welcomed by the most distinguished scientific, research and exploitation bodies, and this fact is outstandingly evident in the 1925-26 plans.

The Pathe Review owns the exclusive motion picture rights to the Beebe Expedition, which recently returned from its search for the fabled Sargasso Sea. This expedition is the most noted of recent years, surpassing in public interest and front-page newspaper space the best breaks that went to Lord Carnarvon's discovery of the tomb of the Pharaoh, Tutankhamen. The Beebe expedition made and photographed the most amazing marine discoveries that have ever been recorded. All of these undersea pictures of deep-sea life, including scenes of the active volcano discovered by the party, are to be included in the coming issues of the Review.

The picture record of the daring trip taken by the famous Danish explorer, Knud Rasmussen, from Greenland through the mysterious Canadian ice gap and on to the most northerly limits of Alaska, will provide another exploration series. The Review also will show pictures taken by Staff Cameraman Maurice Kellerman who accompanied the Count Byron de Prorok expedition in Northern Africa. This series pictures the remarkable discoveries that have been made on the sites of ancient Carthage and Utica, in what is now Tunisia.

"Build Your Own Home" is a series of unusual interest for the Review. This is produced in cooperation with Secretary of Commerce Hoover, who is backing a nation-wide movement known as the Architects Small House Service, and the American Institute of Architects. The Review will show plans of model homes, explain and solve construction problems, and also give full information regarding procedure for taking advantage of the government cooperation.

The novelty "Process-camera" pictures, taken by Staff Cameraman Alvin V. Knechtel with his specially devised trick camera will be continued with new and unique subjects. The series starts off with trick views of Ann Pennington, famous dancer, in various routines.

"The Magic Eye" series is another of scientific interest. This group of microscopic motion picture studies have been photographed by means of a new process perfected by Louis Tolhurst, whose cinema microscopic studies are world-famed.

This summary of the plans for Pathe Review for the 1925-26 season has just touched upon the highlights of material being assembled by Mr. Cohen. Pathe Review undoubtedly presents the exhibitor with more entertainment value per foot than any other reel on the market, irrespective of length. Pathe Review is released weekly.

The Pathe Review has become a necessary part of the exhibitor's program and there is hardly an exhibitor in the country, who is now using it, who would consent to drop it from his schedule, for this subject is making new friends every day.

Emanuel Cohen, editor of Pathe News and Pathe Review, visited the Hal Roach studios on his recent trip to the West Coast and was snapped with "Our Gang."

Powell in "Sportlights"

Earl B. Powell, the noted archery expert who is acting in an advisory capacity in the directing of the archery scenes of "The Green Archer," a Patheserial now in production, appears in action in "Sporting Judgment" and "Learning How," two recent Grantland Rice "Sportlights" released by Pathe.

F. B. O. Will Put the Life of Theodore Roosevelt in Pictures

"THE LIFE OF THEODORE ROOSEVELT," based on the eventful and picturesque career of the 26th President of the United States, will be produced by Film Booking Offices of America, Inc., on an ultra-lavish scale, and will be the most pretentious production on the company's program since its inception, as well as one of the most ambitious offerings of the motion picture industry, according to a telepgraphic communication from J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of F. B. O., in charge of production, now at the Coast studios of the company, who, with B. P. Fineman, production manager, is perfecting details so that actual production on this elaborate film may be started immediately.

Mr. Schnitzer is in communication with Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, widow of the late President, who will supply F. B. O. with the authentic biographical data on which the production will be based.

No definite release date has as yet been set. Announcement will be made immediately that a player is selected who will impersonate Theodore Roosevelt. An all-star cast, will, of course, be assembled in support of the lead.

"The Life of Theodore Roosevelt," based on authentic happenings in the life of the great American statesman and soldier, will be filmed by F. B. O.

Christie's Greater Laugh Season Pictures Are Praised Highly

THE first two comedies from the Christie studios' Greater Laugh Season got away to a flying start with simultaneous first runs in Los Angeles. The Bobby Vernon comedy, "Watch Out," was playing at the Metropolitan and the first Christie Comedy, "Soup to Nuts," with Neal Burns and Vera Steadman at the Forum, with the gala opening of Cecil B. DeMille's first production, "Hell's Highroad."

The Los Angeles newspaper comments on these comedies were particularly laudatory. The Examiner said: "The surrounding program at the Forum is brilliant. 'Soup to Nuts,' a Christie Comedy featuring Neal Burns, not only brings spontaneous laughter with its action, but its subtitles run apace."

Of "Watch Out," The Examiner said: "Bobby Vernon demonstrates how clever a comedian he is in a nonsensical two-reeler, 'Watch Out.' In the scene depicting the fade-out of his wax inamorata, his facial work is exceptionally expressive."

Other comments were: Express: "A Christie Comedy on the Forum bill, 'Soup to Nuts,' featuring Neal Burns, is one of the funniest yet made under this brand and kept the audience in a high state of merriment."

Herald: "Bobby Vernon is a riot in 'Watch Out'."

Herald: "'Soup to Nuts' is a rapid-fire new Christie."

Daily News: "The Bobby Vernon Comedy is excellent."

Zane Grey, the distinguished author of Western stories, with Billie Dove, from an elevation of 6,000 feet on a mesa watching the filming of big scenes in "Wild Horse Mesa," down on the Arizona desert. The players, in addition to Miss Dove, include Jack Holt, Noah Beery and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr.

"Under the Rouge" Goes Big

Associated Exhibitors' Picture Scores at the Blackstone Theatre in Pittsburgh

"Under the Rouge," the Associated Exhibitors' production made in the Northwest by Lewis H. Moomaw, made a successful conquest of Pittsburgh, Pa., upon its initial showing in that city at the Blackstone Theatre.

Naming it as an excellent crook melodrama, the newspapers praised the picture highly in reviews and gave it feature space in the illustrated sections.

The first showing of this Tom Moore-Eileen Percy co-starring vehicle was given at the Colony Theatre in New York about a month ago, when the prediction was made that it would meet with equally overwhelming success upon its showing in other parts of the country. The results attained in Pittsburgh show this prediction to be well founded.

Butterfield Books F.B.O. Next Season

A long and painstaking survey of the preferences of motion picture goers throughout the country has revealed the fact to F. B. O. that the majority of audiences prefer action stories of a more or less melodramatic turn, and because the greater portion of F. B. O.'s 1925-26 program (with the exception of the short subjects) consists of melodramas—straight, underworld and Western—the Bijou Theartical Enterprises (Butterfield Circuit) Michigan, has contracted for practically the entire output of the company.

The contract was consummated between Ed Beatty, general manager of the Butterfield Enterprises, and A. M. Elliott, manager of the Detroit branch of F. B. O.

MADELEINE HURLOCK
The prominent Mack Sennett leading lady, is vamping in comedy productions for Pathe release.

Plans "Revival Month" for United Artists Releases

NOW it is the "revival month." The owner of the Family Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., believes in United Artists Corporation pictures so strongly that he has booked a solid "revival month" of releases from this corporation.

The deal was made through William L. Sherry, manager of the Buffalo exchange, and includes forty-nine United Artists Corporation films. The play dates begin September 22, run rather thickly through the month of October, and every day in November—"Revival Month"—with a few scattering over into December, and one in January, 1926.

These releases include Mary Pickford's "The Love Light," "Pollyanna," "Rosita," "Tess of the Storm Country," "Suds," "Through the Back Door," "Little Lord Fauntleroy."

Charlie Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris."

Douglas Fairbanks' "Mollycoddle," "The Nut," "The Mark of Zorro," "His Majesty, the American," "Robin Hood," "When the Clouds Roll By," "The Three Musketeers."

D. W. Griffith's "Dream Street," "Broken Blossoms," "The White Rose," "America," "The Love Flower," "Orphans of the Storm," "One Exciting Night," "Isn't Life Wonderful," "Way Down East."

Other releases are "The Three Must-Get-Theres" with Max Linder; Ben Turpin, "The Sheik of Araby," Charles Ray, "The Tailor Made Man," George Arliss in "Disraeli," "Carnival," Doris Keane in "Romance," Nazimova in "A Doll's House," Charles Ray in "The Girl I Loved," Mary Alden, "A Woman's Woman," Nazimova's "Salome," "No More Women," Jack Pickford in "Garrison's Finish," George Arliss in "The Man Who Played God."

Still others are "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," "The Iron Trail," Jack Pickford in "Waking Up the Town," Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm," Whitman Bennett's "Fair Lady," Mae Marsh in "Paddy, The-Next-Best-Thing," "Loving Lies," Mae Marsh in "A Woman's Secret," Jack Pickford in "The Hill Billy," Joseph von Sternberg's "Salvation Hunters," Moore Normand in "Suzanna" and George Arliss in "The Ruling Passion."

Thomas Meighan Returns From "Work" in Ireland

BACK in New York after a month in Ireland making scenes for "Irish Luck," his latest Paramount starring picture, Thomas Meighan is preparing to complete the film at the Long Island studio.

Mr. Meighan returned on the Leviathan last Monday, with Lois Wilson, who plays the leading feminine role; Director Victor Heerman, Tom Geraghty and twenty technical members of the company. Down the Bay he was met by a delegation from the Lambs, who had chartered a tug, and on the pier he was welcomed by representatives of Irish American organizations who expressed their interest in his picture because of its Irish setting.

Ten thousand persons welcomed Meighan to Dublin and thousands watched him while he was making street scenes. "Irish Luck," adapted from a "Saturday Evening Post" story, will show historic spots of Dublin, as well as Killarney, Cork and Blarney Castle. One of the interesting scenes shows Tom kissing the Blarney Stone.

Aside from his rousing reception by the Irish populace, Mr. Meighan enjoyed the friendship and co-operation of President Cosgrave of the Irish Free State.

Martha in "Our Gang"

Martha Sleeper, the clever little comedienne in Hal Roach comedies, will be seen with Mr. Roach's little rascals in the forthcoming "Our Gang" comedy, "Better Movies." Martha is 15 years old.

Master Craftsmen

Hilda Ferguson, of the Follies, and John T. Baker, Signed by New Company

Master Craftsmen Productions, of No. 1482 Broadway, announced this week the signing of Hilda Ferguson, of the Ziegfeld Follies, and John T. Baker, famous old vaudeville star, to play leading roles in two-reel comedies to be produced by C. Edward Davenport, Managing Director of Master Craftsmen.

Wally J. Gluck, President of Master Craftsmen, says his company will produce five-reel dramatic features, following the program of comedy shorts, and according to Mr. Gluck, Mr. Davenport, a director with years of experience back of him, will handle the megaphone on each of the Master Craftsmen productions.

Miss Ferguson, who is one of half a dozen Follies girls planning to appear in Master Craftsmen pictures, is the popular "shimmy" artiste in the famed Ziegfeld show. She has beauty and talent for acting, and big things are expected from her.

John T. Baker will be remembered as a member of the vaudeville team of Baker and Lynn, presenting "The Electric Boy" the world over for upwards of twenty years.

Harold Lloyd and Jobyna Ralston in "The Freshman," which Pathe will release September 20. This comedy has its New York premiere at the B. S. Moss Colony Theatre.

Douglas Mac Lean and Edith Roberts, star and leading lady of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," snapped on the ship on which the opening sequence of the picture was filmed. This is a Paramount production.

Mulhall in "Wild West"

All-Round Athletic Actor Selected for Lead in New Patheserial

Jack Mulhall, who plays the leading male role of Jimmy Whitehawk in "Wild West," a forthcoming Patheserial staged on the Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch in Oklahoma, won his role because of his fine characterization of a virile part in "Into The Net," the serial which was written for Pathe by Police Commissioner Richard E. Enright of New York.

The role of Jimmy Whitehawk in "Wild West" called for an actor who could ride bucking bronchos and throw steers. Having played a long list of Western riding roles and with his "Into The Net" serial reputation Mulhall again seemed the logical hero for a Patheserial and he was signed for this ten-chapter photoplay.

"Wild West" is a thrilling story of the early days in Oklahoma and modern experiences with a traveling wild-west and rodeo outfit. J. F. Natteford made the screen adaptation and Robert F. Hill directed the production. C. W. Patton is the producer, and Helen Ferguson plays opposite Mulhall.

The serial will be released following the current Patheserial "Play Ball," written by Manager John J. McGraw of the N. Y. Giants, which features Allene Ray and Walter Miller.

Signs for Gotham Pictures

Another important link to the chain of exchanges distributing the Gotham Productions was added last week when contracts were signed by Sam Sax of Gotham Productions and Lumas Film Corporation and Jules Levine and L. Rosenfeld representing Independent Films Limited of Canada, for the Canadian distribution rights of twelve Gotham productions included in the 1925-26 schedule.

The acquisition of the new twelve Gothams gives the Independent Films Ltd. a total of 18 Gotham productions to distribute as this same company also purchased the 1924-25 series of six pictures.

"Power Behind the Pictures" Macfadden Films Selling Point

A RADICAL departure in the selling of motion pictures was advocated to franchise holders of Astor product by Astor Distributing Corporation this week. Where heretofore it has been the custom to "sell the picture," Astor, in a letter to all franchise holders, emphasized that, while quality was to be the keynote of the Bernarr Macfadden True Story Film productions, the big selling point should be "the power behind the pictures."

The Macfadden magazines, exploitation and advertising, according to Astor, "is bigger than any picture possibly can be."

Astor's letter to franchise holders follows:

"There is one thing to be kept definitely in mind about 'Macfadden Made Movies.' It is this:

"The type of production which Mr. Macfadden's True Story Film is producing is exactly the same type of story that has brought him an enormous circulation for his magazine and a big fortune for himself.

"There is no guesswork on the part of Macfadden. He knows what the public wants. Take the True Story Magazine, for instance, as an example of what 'true-to-life' stories are doing for that publication. August, 1925, the circulation of True Story Magazine was 2,000,000 copies. In September it jumped to 2,050,000. In October it went to 2,075,000. In November the print order was 2,350,000 copies.

"'The Wrongdoers,' the first 'Macfadden Made Movie,' is now being published serially in the True Story Magazine and the New York Graphic. There is no way accurately to 'key' this big increase in circulation, but it would be interesting to know to what extent the publication of the film story increased the circulation of the magazine.

"Macfadden prestige is the big thing back of 'Macfadden Made Movies.' You are not selling just pictures when you talk to an exhibitor about 'The Wrongdoers' and other Macfadden pictures. The millions of readers of Macfadden magazines will look to the theatres for these pictures, for it is the belief of those making the pictures that the magazines will prove a connecting link between the 16,400,000 Macfadden readers and the motion picture theatres of the country. In every full page advertisement printed in a Macfadden magazine readers are urged to go to see the pictures.

"You will see by this that there is a tremendous force back of Macfadden magazines, a force of readers of the type who will patronize theatres when urged by the magazines they read.

"So keep in mind that you are not selling just pictures, but that you are selling Macfadden prestige, power and publicity. It made him rich and now it's your turn."

"Heave to—and man the guns—she looks like a pirate ship!" Showing how Eugene Zukor, of Famous Players; Mel. Shauer and two friends spent a two weeks' vacation aboard the good fifty-foot motor cruiser "Spendthrift II" owned by Eugene Zukor. The skipper of the sleek looking bark was caught by the photographer on the quarter deck with a hatchet in one hand which promises no good for an unfriendly boarding party. Mel. Shauer on the navigating bridge is peering through a pair of high-powered marine glasses, keeping an eye on the Ad Sales business in the home office. Mr. Zukor's other two guests seem pretty fierce about something; but despite the fact this picture shows the hardy sailors arrayed for ocean battle, from all accounts they had an ideal, peaceful two weeks' vacation.

How to Use This Chart

First—Bookings! Get accurate footage and look up date review appeared in Moving Picture World. Then you can decide if the picture will suit your audience.

Second—Play Date! When you set your play date, consult this Chart to set the picture on a date that will not conflict with preceding and following pictures; avoid a sequence of similar type of story; space out your specials.

Third—Laying Out Program! This chart shows star and kind of story as well as accurate length; you can lay out a balanced program easily, avoid over- and under-length programs.

Fourth—Exploitation! Through this chart find the review in Moving Picture World; this will give a good synopsis, the all-important cast and fine line on exploitation possibilities as well as the things you'll want to soft-pedal.

Always! Turn to this Chart when you want accurate information in simple form and easy to get at a glance. AND—

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Los Angeles Men Progressive

Here is the letter head of Los Angeles local 150 I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. It speaks for itself. Under it is the line which runs across the bottom of their letter paper.

It is indeed gratifying to know that so large a local is up to date, and not satisfied with the ways of Grandpa, which may have been very good ways, too, in Grandpa's day. Congratulations, brothers of the Film Capital City. You have beat the largest local, New York City, 306, in this matter. I have been trying to get Local 306 to adopt up-to-date nomenclature for its stationery, etc., but as yet have not been successful.

New York City local 306, being the largest, OUGHT to lead, and she would, too, in this as well as in other matters, but for the fact that, as is the case in all large locals, there is a fairly numerous non-progressive element which hangs onto the brake with all its might and, just as long as it possibly can, prevents progression.

Why? do you ask?

The answer is easy—almost childishly so. The non progressive are non progressive for a most excellent reason. They fear progress because they are either too lazy to make the effort necessary to keep up with it, or else they (whisper) fear they would be unable to keep up with the procession, once real progress were started. With things running along in the old, well worn RUT, they feel safe, and that accounts for far more of the opposition to improved nomenclature, or anything else progressive, than you have any idea. They just plain fear to permit ANYTHING in the nature of progress to start.

Congratulations, Los Angeles! How come San Francisco, Seattle and Portland, let you beat them to it?

A Bit Amusing

It is a bit amusing how men will solemnly set forth, in print, their views concerning the management and operation of motion picture theatres, going in great detail into everything, EXCEPT the one thing for which the whole darned theatre is operated, and upon which it must, in the last analysis, depend for its success or failure.

Down in a certain southern city a little paper is published. It is called the "Weekly Film Review."

In its July 18 issue the "Director of Theatres" for a large producing corporation sets forth, in some wealth of detail, his views concerning the right way to operate a motion picture theatre, presumably for the benefit of operators of such theatres—those who operate them.

The advice of this man is all excellent, as far as it goes, but the amusing part is that, whereas he advises concerning about everything else, he says not even so much as one word concerning the advisability of having high grade projection. In fact he apparently does not conceed that projection has anything whatsoever to do with the successful operation of a motion picture theatre.

He advises that this should be thus, that that should be so and the other way muchly thusly, but at no point does he even hint that projection ought to be high grade—or anything else. To him it just plain don't exist in the things of importance.

Now my views are different. Were I making suggestions for the operation or management of motion picture theatres, my effort in that direction would read something like this:

(A) The audience, first of all, must be made comfortable in fairly spacious chairs, with reasonable space between the rows—chair back to chair back, and by suitable ventilation.

(B) The theatre should be made as cosily pretty as possible, which need not necessarially run to costly decoration, but rather to comparatively simple, low priced artistic decorations.

(C) There must be no glare spot of light visible from any portion of the seating space.

(D) That portion of the theatre help which comes directly into contact with the public should be neatly uniformed, or at least very neatly clothed, and as nearly as possible all alike. They should be carefully trained, and not permitted to lounge around while on duty. They should be thoroughly trained in politeness and courtesy to theatre patrons.

(E) The program must be carefully selected to suit the tastes of the theatre patrons, with which the successful manager uses every possible endeavor to acquaint himself. It must be well balanced as between the romantic love story, the historic or semi-historic costume play, comedy, scenic and carefully edited news reel, always remembering that what the manager will personally not like at all, the audience will literally rave over.

(F) The projection room should be of at least a size which will cause no uncomfortable crowding. It must be supplied with equipment which is capable of delivering the best possible result to the screen. IT MUST BE IN CHARGE OF A PROJECTIONIST OR PROJECTIONISTS ABLE TO SO HANDLE THE EQUIPMENT THAT THE LARGEST POSSIBLE ENTERTAINMENT VALUE IN ANY GIVEN PRODUCTION, OR "PRINT" WILL BE PLACED ON THE SCREEN, and who are able to place the largest possible entertainment value on the screen consistently and efficiently.

(G) The music should be the best the theatre can afford, and the "afford" is limited only by the point where additional excellence ceases to attract sufficient patronage to make it profitable—for theatres, like most other things in this vale of sin, sorrow and tears, are run strictly for profit. The music should be made to synchronize with the picture when projected at proper speed, and not the picture speeded up or slowed down to suit the music. If there is talent in the orchestra, or the orchestra is of sufficient size to warrant instrumental music, then the musicians should be permitted to display their art between pictures, when they may play

Question No. 363—(Practical Question submitted by Edwin S. Schofield, Houston, Texas.) Current, 8 cents per K. W. Screen surface the same in both cases. Efficiency of lens system the same in both cases. Screen in use ten hours per day. What will be the cost daily of illumination of two screen surfaces with equal brilliancy, one 12x16 feet and the other 14 feet 3 in. by 19 feet?

(P. S.—The boss figures on enlarging our 16 foot picture, and sprung that one on me a while ago.)

Question No. 364—(Practical Question proposed by Messrs. Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia.) Using General Electric 50 ampere mercury arc rectifier, 110 volt terminals of an Edison 110 volt—220 volt 3-wire system. Motion picture projectors grounded to water pipe. The two arcs are connected in parallel. While one arc is being used, carbons of other separated, but the switch in a trouble lamp connected between either of the carbons to the projector will light. Is anything wrong? If so, what? If the lighting of the trouble lamp is not evidence of anything wrong, then why does it light?

(Not very clearly worded, but I think what is meant is that when one arc is burning and carbons of other separated, if a trouble lamp terminals be touched to the projector frame and either carbon of the working lamp, it, the trouble lamp, will light.—Ed.)

Question No. 365—What is the purpose of the fuses?

Question No. 366—Explain figure 19, page 107 of the Bluebook (Reproduced herewith) in detail, explaining just what happens when one of the fuses "lets go," and why it happens.

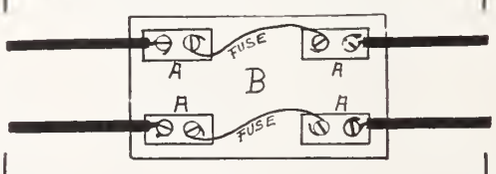

Figure 19.

Question No. 367—Will fuses carry more than their rated capacity?

as fast or as slow as they think the music demands.

(G) Much may be done with colored light effects in almost any theatre—even in the little "store room theatre" they may be used to advantage—therefore provision should be made for such effects, and they should be carefully planned and used in a way which will get from them their greatest possible entertainment value as supplementary to the regular program.

That is about the way I would size the matter up.

In the same issue of the same publication a local theatre manager gives advice concerning the management of suburban houses. It also is to be noted that, while what he says is all very well, still he, too, utterly fails to recognize the fact that the item of projection and its quality has anything whatso ever to do with box office income.

Nor can these men come back with the excuse that it is assumed that projection will be "high grade," because it by no manner of means always IS high grade, and the other things they have named would be as they advise, too.

In closing, in excuse for all this, I will moreover it might also be assumed that all say that I have many times visited theatres which were marvelously well managed, and have been literally astounded at a management which was so careful about, and expert in all other details, would stand for what I saw on the screen, and found in the way of almost criminal waste in the projection room.

We now have a large and growing percentage of motion picture projectionists who are striving hard to and, in most cases are giving the highest possible entertainment value on the screen from what is provided them. THAT THEY ARE DOING THIS IS ENORMOUSLY TO THEIR CREDIT, BECAUSE THEY ARE CONTINUALLY AND CONTINUOUSLY SNUBBED AND IGNORED, JUST AS THEY WERE IN THIS CASE. There is small encouragement to excel, when no one in the manager or exhibitor class offers the slightest encouragement to, or credit for high grade work.

The continual ignoring of what few would have the GALL to openly deny is at least one of the most important elements in building for success in motion picture theatres, DOES TREMENDOUS HARM, IN THAT IT TAKES AWAY THE HIGHEST INCENTIVE FOR TRIVING TO EXCEL. Unless the man be the right sort of man he has no right place in a theatre projection room at all, THE RIGHT SORT OF MAN WILL STRIVE ENORMOUSLY TO EXCEL, ALWAYS PROVIDED HE BELIEVES HIS EFFORTS WILL RECEIVE SOME SORT OF PROPER APPPRECIATION. NOTHING IN ALL THIS WORLD IS SO MURDEROUS TO ADVANCEMENT AS LACK OF APPRECIATION. Occasionally a man is found who, despite all lack of appreciation on the part of those he has the RIGHT to look to for it, will still strive to excel, just because it is sort of born in him. He, however, is very much the exception.

In motion picture projection, under present conditions, lack of appreciation does especially great harm because, in the cities at least, there is the almost flat level of the union MINIMUM scale for houses of similar size and class. Naturally if every one is paid the same for all theatres of like class, and promotion to theatres of larger size or higher class depends largely upon the will or whim of union officials, and there is no real appreciation shown by the theatre management for high grade efficient work, THEN WILL YOU BE GOOD ENOUGH TO TELL ME WHEREIN LIES THE INCENTIVE TO WORK HARD TO EXCEL?

If those in authority, when talking of theatres, for publication, gave projection excellence the prominence its importance DESERVES, thus causing the men engaged in projection to feel that high grade work on their part is appreciated as something above the mere attending upon or operating of a machine, I venture the assertion that it soon would work out to the LARGE profit of every one concerned.

But the fashion is to extol the seating, praise the ventilation, remark upon the beauty of the decorations and furnishings, exclaim about the music and the organ, speak of the neatly uniformed ushers, print pictures of the manager and—Projection? Why, sure enough! I guess there probably is some such thing, but (by inference at least) it is altogether too unimportant to bother wasting ink on.

Difficulties

In an article recently published, L. E. Cuffe, who, we are told, has charge of projection for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in their West Coast studios, says concerning picture presentation:

This subject has been discussed in the past, but nothing of any real importance has followed. Recently a paper was read before the members of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers dealing with the difficulties of arriving at any standardization of screen brightness. However, at the end of this paper there was nothing arrived at in regard to any particular standard of screen brilliancy. In fact, it merely cited a number of different elements which would enter into the making of a standard—very difficult and of little use. I agree that there are so many valuable factors that it is a difficult problem, but I feel that by proper treatment an exceedingly great improvement upon the present conditions can be brought about.

No Two Alike

For example, the writer recently visited theatres in this vicinity and as far as he has been able to figure out there are no two houses alike in either screen brilliancy, audltorium illumination or class of screen used. For such reasons it has been impossible to make a picture look anywhere alike in these different houses. The answer to this is readily seen when we analyze the following, which illustrates the exceedingly abnormal and varied conditions:

In two different theatres, both screens of the same material and size, same optical systems in projectors, same light source of equal amperage, and projecting prints of standard quality, in one house the throw is 185 feet—and in the other is 65 feet. It is plainly seen why the same print looks exceedingly different on the two screens.

"Discussed in Past"

In the first place, the article is entitled "Proper Screen Presentation," and it might be remarked that, if that may be understood to mean proper projection, as seems to be the idea from the article, then that subject certainly has been "discussed in the past." It has been discussed in this department almost continuously for FIFTEEN YEARS, and there are quite some few who would disagree with the statement that "Nothing of any real importance has followed."

The paper referred to as being read before the S. M. P. E. was a paper by the editor of this department. That paper was designed wholly and solely, as it distinctly stated, to point out the difficulties in the way of standardization of screen illumination.

Cuffe's idea apparently is that a picture should look the same in every theatre auditorium, which might or might not be a good idea, if it were possible of accomplishment, but that it is impossible of accomplishment becomes evident when one considers that a picture looks slightly or very greatly different to every spectator in a theatre, for the reason that each one views it from a slightly different angle, or from a different distance.

Of course the difference as between those seated in close proximity to each other is too slight to be discernible, but the difference as between a theatre patron seated in the back center and and one seated in the front extreme side of a wide auditorium in which the screen is close to the front rows is very great indeed, and this includes the item of screen brilliancy, too.

Doubtful

In so far as standardizing screen illumination, it is to be doubted if it can ever be done, except for an auditorium of given size and color of decoration, because the depth of an auditorium has very much to do with the necessary screen illumination density, and so has the color of the auditorium decorations, as well as other things.

However, it was not with the idea of entering into any extended discussion of the matter as a whole that I noticed this matter in print, but merely to point out the necessity of putting one's ideas into understandable form before setting them forth in type.

In the last paragraph of the quotation one might, with equal facility, draw any one of three or four different and distinct conclusions. For instance: How is one to project the same size picture, using the same optical system, at 185 and at 65 feet?

Probably what Cuffe meant was the same TYPE of optical system, but there he errs in something besides mere language, because that might be done, though not efficiently, assuming both pictures to be of ordinary size—say an eighteen foot picture.

Then, too, Cuffe makes no mention of the efficiency with which the light sources are handled, which might make a very great difference in results, especially if they be ordinary arcs, because a wrong crater angle in one case and a right one in the other might, and if the difference be considerable would make for very great difference in screen illumination.

Possibly, or even probably, however, Cuffe meant that the viewing distance would vary with the projection distance—a matter not at all certain because I have seen many theatres with a long viewing distance and a very short projection distance—and that the difference in viewing distance would make the difference in the appearance of the picture. But that merely sets up another difficulty, because if the maximum viewing distance were 65 feet in the one theatre, and the appearance of the picture is good, then if we make it appear equally good at 185 feet we will have injured its appearance almost in equal degree at the shorter distance, and certainly no human power could possibly make it appear the same at both distances.

Then, too, Mr. Cuffe entirely overlooks one very important element. He says "projecting prints of standard quality." Now, just exactly what does he mean by that? It is a fact well known and recognized by motion picture projectionists that two different prints of the same production will very frequently give entirely different results on the screen, even in the matter of screen illumination. One "print" may be and often is very much denser than the other.

Not Roasting

Please understand that I most emphatically am NOT either roasting friend Cuffe, or even taking him seriously to task. Doubtless he is a man who understands his business. I am pointing out to him, and to others, the FACT that before writing authoritively one should not only understand his subject in ALL its phases at least fairly well, but also one must be able to set forth his ideas clearly, so that his readers may be sure just what thought he has sought to convey.

Room for Improvement

At to the matter of screen illumination density standardization, while I agree that there is plenty of room for improvement in the matter of stopping some of the wrong things now being done, still I seriously doubt the possibility of effecting any real standardization, except (A) It may prove feasible to say that the CONTRAST value as between the screen and its surroundings shall have a certain value where the maximum distance of viewing be, say, seventy-five feet (or some other distance which may be deemed best), with an additional per cent. of contrast value for every ten feet of additional maximum viewing distance. It also would be a most excellent thing if it were possible to set up a standard maximum illumination for the front end of the auditorium, but due to the tremendous variety of shapes, sizes and heights of auditoriums, I doubt the feasibility of that; also I think before it could be done we would have to chloroform a large percentage of orchestra musicians.

In closing I ask friend Cuffe to take what I have said in good part. He has gone into print, and having done so must expect criticism. That is a part and parcel of writing for publication. I get it by the bucket full, and don't mind it a bit, for if I am wrong I learn it through the criticism. If I am right the criticism does me no manner of harm, anyhow, and it probably makes the criticizer feel good, so why worry?

S.M.P.E. Fall Meeting

On October fifth, sixth, seventh and eighth, at Lakewood Farms Inn, about three miles off the main road (One of the three being straight up, by the way) from New York City to Binghamton, New York, the Society of Motion Picture Engineers will hold its fall meeting.

The meeting place is a charmingly located, spacious country hotel, with golf links, huge dancing floor, games of various sorts, horseback riding and so on and so forth, all of which is free to the use of members of the Society. Bring your ladies by all means.

The Lakewood Farms Inn (Whisper! S-h-h-h. It's not a farm a tall) is a summer hotel, and a fairly classy one, too. The "season" will then be about if not entirely over, and the S. M. P. E. will just plain own the place. It met there in the spring of 1924, and the experiment was so satisfactory that —well, we're going back, which is le comment grandique, or however the French would say it.

The program promises to be up to the usual high standard of excellence. Pages could say no more. The member who fails to be present is going to miss something, and that is no bunch of idle words, believe you me. I've been there and I know.

So, gentlemen, it is confidently expected that deep ruts will be worn in the road up the mountain on October fourth, caused by the bubbles of S. M. P. E. men, or by the buses which will meet all trains and convey you to the Inn if you train up instead of bubbling.

Who Gets the Pay?

The following verses are an adaptation from verses entitled "The Pay Roll," by Charles Dean Chamberlain, in the Saturday Evening Post:

The biggest man in the rigger gang
Is lantern-jawed Jerry O'Teel.
He's boss, of course, by right of force,
And a wow at pushing steel.
He knows about channels and reenforced panels
And rivets and I-beams and power.
He'll walk two-by-fours at seventeen floors,
But he only gets one buck an hour.

If ever you stop in the carpenter shop,
Just look up Oscar the Swede.
You'll find him there, with a big steel square
Making miters that you can't read.
He can hang oak doors or lay hardwood floors,
For him cutting rafters is play.
He'll frame a roof truss with nary a fuss,
But he only gets nine smacks a day.

The engineer man is Angus McBannock
The handiest man on the dump.
He gives steam to the masons and air to the caissons,
And knows the heat loss of each pump.
For him its a cinch to set up a winch,
Or to fix up a knock or a squeak,
If a mixer goes sour he has it jake in an hour
But he only gets sixty a week.

John Hislop Boffus just sits in the office
Squints at drawings and orders men 'round
He checks over plans and quite understands
The strength of a beam by its sound.
He's learned about stresses and plaster web meshes,
But only from books, so I hear.
Just as if college could give a man knowledge—
And he's getting twelve thousand a year!

I think it might be well for some of you "Books-is-the-bunk" guys to read those verses over a few times. You may bet your last gallus button that the "John Hoslip Boffuses," of which there are many, didn't get it all out of books, NOR did they get it all from just "practical experience."

They COMBINED study (books) with practical experience, used their brains for something besides wishing quitting time would come, and wondering if they'd be lucky with the dice that evening, or considering how far they could stretch THAT week's pay in buying something to put on their backs, or having a "good time."

"Good times" are all right. A man should dress decently, or even well if he can afford it, but he who would become a "John Hislop Buffus," at twelve thousand a year, must first EARN THE RIGHT TO BE ONE, and that is NOT done rolling the dice, or expending ALL your idle moments having a "good time."

An Argument

James Thompson, Detroit, Michigan, desires information as to the 3-wire system action. He says:

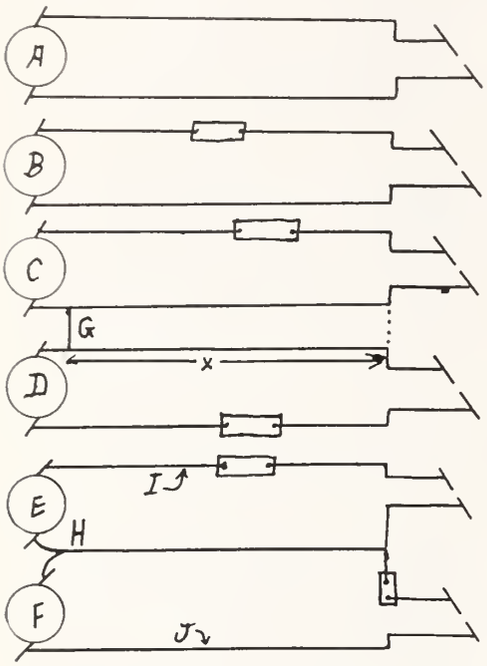
We have a 3-wire system and two Powers projectors, one of which is connected to each side of the system. In a discussion as to the passage of current over the system, A says the current flows along the positive and returns on the neutral to and from projector lamp No. 1, but that it flows out on the negative to Lamp No. 2 and back on the neutral wire.

B claims that the current flows out on the neutral to lamp No. 2, and back on the negative. We are interested in the Bluebook

TYPHOON COOLING SYSTEM
TYPHOON FAN CO. 345 W. 39TH ST. NEW YORK

School, and would thank you to reply to this in an early issue.

Perhaps Brother Thompson intended this as a "practical question" for the Bluebook School, but I hardly think so. Anyhow I shall answer it myself, so here goes.



In the drawing I have tried to make the whole 3-wire connection as clear as possible. Generators A B are two separate machines, each connected directly to one of your projector lamps. You will of course understand how they operate.

Generators C and D are presumed to be the same two dynamos with the negative of C connected to the positive of D by wire G.

With this connection you would have, in effect, a 3-wire system. You could connect a 220 volt motor (assuming the generators to be 110 volt machines) across from the positive of C to the negative of D, and it would work perfectly; also generator C might be connected to a 100 ampere load and generator D to a fifty ampere load, IN WHICH CASE THE APPARATUS CONSUMING THE CURRENT WOULD WORK IN SERIES UP TO 50 AMPERES, but the fifty amperes surplus generated by C would pass directly back to C over its negative.

This would be wasteful of wire, however, and of current, too, since it means that the current would have to travel over unnecessary wire.

We, therefore, cut off one of the wires at G, and use one wire from there out, as per E F H, and we have the straight three wire system, in which I is what is known as the "true positive" and J the "True Negative."

Brass Tacks

And now we get down to brass tacks. A three-wire system operates as a 220 volt system, so far as it is possible for it to do so. That means that the "balanced load current all flows out over the true positive, through the power consuming devices connected to generator E side, and through the power consuming devices connected to F side, and thence back to the generators over the true negative.

But if there be a thirty ampere load on E side and forty on F side, then thirty amperes will flow out on the true positive, through the power consuming devices on BOTH sides, and back to the generators on the true negative. But since ten amperes more are required for the load on F side than on E side, that amount of current will flow from generator F out on the neutral, which is attached to the positive pole of generator F, hence is its positive wire (though negative to generator E) joining the power sent out by generator E on the true negative after it has passed through and operated the power consuming devices on E side, and thus there will be enough power to operate the forty ampere load on F side.

Specific Question

Answering your specific question, when your lamps are operated separately, each being hitched to one side of a three-wire system, the action is precisely the same as though the generators were not connected at all, as at A B. When the lamp attached to E is in use, generator E supplies ALL the current, exactly as generator A would do. When the lamp attached to F is in use the action is precisely the same as though it were attached to generator B, because the neutral is its positive wire, and the out-flow is always on the positive.

Note: Connection "G" could be made at any point in the length of the wires without altering the action. In effect connection G amounts to removing wire X as indicated, and joining as per dotted line.

There, I don't know whether or not I have succeeded in my attempt to make the 3-wire action clear or not. Maybe I've just confused you. I'd like to hear from some of you as to whether this way of explaining it is good or bad.

British Projection

Quite recently a delegation of British exhibitors came to the United States, and I believe to Canadian America as well, for the avowed purpose of examining into, once-overing and generally sizing up motion picture affairs in North America, or at least in the parts thereof named. Whether they included Mexico or not I don't know, but think not.

They have made their report to their home body, at its "Summer Conference" held in Glasgow, Scotland. The report and the matters discussed are about what one would expect. The nearest they come to discussing one of the biggest things upon which their entire business depends is that they remark that "Projection in Britain is superior to that in North America," or words to that effect.

I do not propose to dispute this statement, because it is possible it is true. I, however, have the right to doubt that it is, and I most emphatically do do that very thing, nervy as it may seem.

Exhibitor Not Good Judge

In the first place, it has been my experience, and I say this with all seriousness, that the large majority of motion picture exhibitors are utterly incapable of passing intelligent, correct judgment on motion picture projection. And, mind, you, I do NOT mean that unkindly, nor in the nature of a criticism. I merely state it as a well proved FACT.

In this, however, I can speak only of the exhibitors of the United States and Canada. Of the British exhibitor I have no knowledge, but see no reason why he would differ from those over here in that particular. Time after time, I have had managers of large theatres conduct me through their establishment with great pride, and call my attention to the excellence of their projection, whereas it was difficult, when they did that, to refrain from laughing in their faces. I have many times pointed out the most crassly stupid blunders in projection practice to exhibitors and theatre managers, only to have to almost "draw a diagram of it" before they could be made to even faintly understand, and even then it was evident that they had considerable doubt about the matter. I have been literally amazed at the depth of the thing I can only call just plain ignorance in matters projectional in the minds of many men operating relatively large theatres. They apparently think that so long as there is a "bright, steady picture on the screen, that is most emphatically "that" in projection, and nothing could possibly be sweeter.

Some Faults

Glare spots, lack of proper contrast, gray blacks, muddy whites and literally huge distortion mean nothing whatsoever in their young lives.

And so how may we place confidence in the view of the British exhibitor's report upon the relative excellence of projection over here and over there? My own information is that our men over here, class for class, are better posted and just as careful in their work as are the men in Britain. My observation as between the excellence of United-States-made motion picture projectors and those made in Europe is that ours are considerably the better in every way, though they have some projectors over there which are mechanically very well made indeed.

I have long wished that I might make a trip through England, France, Germany and Italy and investigate for myself as to what is what. I think it certainly would make one corking good story, and one which would be enjoyed thoroughly by every picture man in the country—particularly theatre men. Maybe I'll do it some day too, if ever I can spare the time and money.

Bluebook School Helps

Ray Guaegy, Paducah, Kentucky, sends in his second set of answers to Bluebook School questions and remarks:

I certainly cannot say too much in favor of the "School," and the good it is accomplishing every day. My own screen results have improved since the School started, for I have followed it every week.

I used this note just to point one thing, Viz: Improvement of the thing the motion picture theatre has to sell—the image upon the screen—is of course of far more importance than anything else, but it is hoped that not only will the actual thing the public sees be improved, BUT also that the knowledge gained will enable the projectionists to put an improved result upon the screen at less cost—more efficiently.

Many a man is putting a really very good picture on the screen, but is doing it at literally tremendous loss, as compared with what it would cost were intelligent methods applied. He is working well in one way, but with great and needless inefficiency in another.

I do NOT mean to say or to even imply that that is the case with Brother Guaegy. In all probability it is not. Let the slogan of Bluebook "Scholars" be "The best possible picture at the least possible cost."

Bluebook School—Answers 336 to 340

(Note: I have had letters from Brother G. W. Bennewitz, Projectionist Strand Theatre, Sioux Falls, So. Dakota, saying that he has through force of circumstances been forced to stop sending answers to the questions, but that just as soon as he can get straightened out he will be "back with the bunch again." "Benny," Old Boy has had a tough row to hoe this summer. It is not his work, but sickness of a sort in the family. Maybe if a few of you would write him a cheery letter it might help. When one is a bit blue a word from a friend does help.)

Also I have a letter from Richard Keuster, 212 Bleecker Street, Brooklyn, New York. He has been ill or at least not very well which is the reason for his absence from school. Some of the chaps might write to him also. A word of kindness from one's fellow men when the Ship of Life is rocking a bit, HELPS.

Question No. 336—Describe the method by means of which current generation is started in a self-exciting dynamo.

(Note: In these questions I have used the term "dynamo" instead of generator, though in practice we speak of an alternating current machine as a "generator" and a D. C. machine as a "dynamo." I did this because as a matter of fact there are several sorts of electric power generators, one of which is the dry cell.—Editor.)

C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; C. O. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois; Ray Guaegy, (Always put your address on first page of your answer) Paducah, Kentucky; Chas. C. Colby, Santa Fe, New Mexico; A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, all made excellent replies to this one.

Incidentally, will the Toronto local advise me as to just which "City of Peace" friend Dobson is planted in? I wanna plant a turnip on his mound and see if it won't turn him up again.

Henning says:

The self-exciting dynamo depends for excitation upon the "residual magnetism" remaining in the pole pieces after the machine has stopped, and is otherwise electrically "dead." These pole pieces, which form the core upon which the field coils are wound, retain sufficient magnetism after the machine has stopped to maintain a very weak magnetic field, in which the stationary armature lies. If this were not true, then a self-exciting dynamo would be impossible.

Under the above condition it is only necessary to set the armature in motion to cause the coils thereon to cut magnetic lines of force, thus generating current, a portion, or all of which passes through the field coils, thus strengthening the magnetic field and causing the armature coils to cut a greater number of lines of magnetic force.

This process continues until the point of normal E. M. F. is reached, at which stage the machine is in condition to deliver its maximum output, or any portion thereof which may be required.

(Note: That was not just the way brother Henning worded it. I have changed his words, but not his ideas or thoughts. His answer was well worded, but, as is nearly always the case, he is not accustomed to writing for cold type, so to make it "read well" it nearly always is best to make changes in pharaseology, BUT I never intentionally change any man's thought, intent or ideas as I understand them.—Editor.)

Fell says:

A self-exciting dynamo is one in which the initial excitation of the field is due to the "residual magnetism" retained by the cores or "pole pieces" when the machine is at rest.

When a mass of iron has once been magnetized, it is a difficult matter to remove all traces of the same when the magnetising agent has been removed, a small amount of magnetism is always retained permanently by the metal. This is known as "residual magnetism." It varies in amount with the quality of the iron. Residual magnetism is the essential thing in self excitation as applied to a dynamo.

The residual magnetism maintains a magnetic field in which rests the dynamo armature. It is usually of sufficient density that from two to ten volts could be built up, and no more, with the armature revolving at maximum speed in such a field.

In order that commercial voltages (100 volts or more) may be had, a portion or all the current generated by this weak field is passed through the coils wound around the pole pieces which form the core of the aforesaid coils. This has the effect of energizing the pole pieces, and thus strengthening the magnetic field in which the armature rotates, which process will be continued until the normal voltage of the machine has been reached.

The maximum voltage will depend upon the capacity of the field magnets as determined by the construction, and upon the strength of the current used to excite them. (Um! I'm not quite certain as to the exact correctness of that last. I can't seem to recall just what elements determine the maximum voltage of a machine, and have not the time to look the matter up just now. As I remember it is dependent upon the rate with which the various armature coils are filled and emptied as to lines of force, the number of armature coils there are and their method of connection. Editor.)

Without residual magnetism in the field magnets the dynamo would not generate any E. M. F. at all until its field magnets were excited by current applied from some source outside the dynamo itself.

Doe puts is well and briefly. He says:

In a self-exciting dynamo, magnets are very similar to a huge "horseshoe" magnet, such as the kiddies love to play with. The iron of which they are composed retains sufficient "residual magnetism" when the machine is at rest to form a weak magnetic field, the magnetic lines of which flow over and through the stationary armature and its coils. Under this condition, of course, when the machine is started, the armature coils cut through this weak field, thus generating a weak voltage and current. The latter is usually all shunted through the field coils, which instantly strengthens the magnetic field, causing the armature coils to cut more lines of force, and thus generate more voltage and current. This process continues until normal voltage is reached, when the machine is ready to supply current to the external circuits up to its rated capacity.

A generator which is not self exciting may be put into operation by causing current to flow through its field coils from another dynamo or electric power source. When it is excited, self excitation may be set up by shunting a part of its own current through its field coils, but when the machine is stopped it is completely electrically and magnetically "dead," and must again be "excited" by some other electric power source.

Question No. 337—Suppose you have charge of a motor generator which vibrates considerably. Where would you seek the cause? In other words, what thing or things might cause a motor generator to vibrate or shake?

All the before named, plus E. S. Maeling, Sacramento, California, answered this more or less completely. Fell says:

One of the chief causes of a motor generator set vibrating is the coupling between the motor and generator being out of line. No matter how slight this fault may be it will cause a certain amount of vibration, and that is where the trouble usually lies.

Other possible causes of vibration are the armature shaft being bent, or a badly balanced armature. The bent armature shaft is apt to set up serious trouble other than vibration, since it may cause the armature coils to strike or rub against the magnet.

An unlevel foundation may also cause vibration in some types of dynamo.

Concerning two features of this matter Henning makes pertinent remarks, as follows:

When a motor generator is installed, care should be exercised to see that it sets perfectly level. This is the first point to check up when it is found that the machine is vibrating. If it is of the type that is attached to a base, any low points should be shimmed up and then all bolts tightened down solid. The level of the machine should be tested from time to time, and the matter given attention when a bit of out-of-level is indicated. It will save future trouble. * * * When a motor generator has been in service a long while, is kept level and starts to vibrate it may be found that it is due to worn bearings.

This type of vibration will cause slight trouble at first, but if permitted to continue will cause excessive wear on all parts, interfering with commutation and ruining bearings in a short while. New bearings and a re-surfaced commutator will, in such cases, add a long term of satisfactory service to the machine.

Henning covered other points, but the foregoing were done a bit better than any one else did them.

Thoreau and Clark put it tersely, thus:

(1) Anchor bolts not properly tightened down.
(2) Universal coupling requires attention.
(3) Motor and generator not in perfect alignment.
(4) Unbalanced armature or motor rotor.
(5) Worn or improperly adjusted bearings.

Question No. 338—Tell us all you know about the brushes of a motor or generator set and their operation.

Thoreau and Clark supply an excellent answer, as follows:

Brushes used on D. C. generators in motion picture work usually are composed of carbon or carbon-graphite composition of varying degrees of hardness, dependent upon the type of generator they are to be used on.

Modern brushes have a wire connection called a "pig tail." This wire has one end embedded in the body of the brush. Its other end connects with the brush holder or the brush holder lead, forming a direct electrical connection between the brush and its holder. This reduces sparking between the brush and holder, which is inevitable when the current must depend wholly upon the friction contact between brush and holder in passing from brush to holder, or vice versa.

There must be a brush or brushes for each main field pole of the machine, NOT including so called commutation poles. The number of brushes required for each pole piece depends upon the capacity of the brush, and the load each brush arm must handle.

Brushes usually cover two and one commutator bars or segments.

New brushes should be installed one at a time. They must be fitted to the curve of the commutator by placing a strip of sandpaper, not too coarse, around the commutator, sand side out—against the brush. Apply the regular tension to the brush and pull the sandpaper back and forth around the commutator until the face of the brush is ground to fit the commutator curve. Remove sandpaper and clean away all carbon dust. If this is done properly the brush will fit the commutator face perfectly.

When all the brushes have been fitted, the distance between each brush holder should be checked. This is very important, and may be quickly and easily done, as follows: cut a piece of ordinary wrapping paper the width of the commutator and long enough to go around it. Wrap it around the commutator, permitting the brushes to rest on its surface. With a pencil draw a line along the top of each brush, first having been certain that each brush is in its normal operation position.

Remove the paper carefully and measure the distance between marks, which should be exactly the same in each case. If not, then adjust the angle of brushes until they are.

The brushes must all fit into the holder not too loose, but freely nevertheless, so that they may move freely and not stick in the holder. This is important, since it permits a minimum of brush tension and thus reduces frictional heating and brush and commutator wear to a minimum.

The tension between brush and commutator should be such as will insure good electrical contact, but no more. Excess tension is bad, because of mechanical heat generated and unnecessary wear. Too little tension causes sparking. It must be just right.

Some of the causes of sparking at the brushes are (1) Brushes not properly spaced around the commutator. (2) Brushes not perfectly fitted to curve of commutator. (3) Dirty commutator and brushes. (4) Sudden variation in speed of armature. (5) Wrong brush tension. (6) Temper pulled in tenslon spring. (7) Brush stuck in holder. (8) High or low spots in commutator. (9) Commutator worn too thin. Brushes then cover too much circumferential space at one time. (10) Overload. (11) Excessive armature speed. (12) Vibration of the machine as a whole. (13) Short circuit in armature coil. (14) Break in armature coil. (15) A reversed armature coil. (16) Rough commutator. (17) Mica insulation between bars too high. (18) Bent armature shaft. (19) Low or worn bearings. (20) Brushes not suited to the work. (21) Short between commutator bars causing a ring of fire. An open circuit in the armature will cause same effect. (22) Brushes not set at proper commutation position with relation to the pole pieces.

All of which shows that when brothers Thoreau and Clark have a new bottle of ink and plenty of paper they can tell us quite a lot. Usually they are a bit short of ink, paper or something. They answer correctly, but often a bit economically.

Fell gave a corking good reply. Here it is:

With respect to construction, brushes may be broadly classified as: (1) those made of metal, and (2) those made of carbon.

There are several varieties of metal brushes, such as: gauze brushes, wire brushes and laminated or strip brushes.

A gauze brush is made up of a sheet of copper gauze folded several times, with the wires running in an oblique direction, so as to form a solid flat strip of from ¼ to ½ inch in thickness, increasing with the volume of current to be collected.

The gauze is folded with the wires running in an oblique direction so as to prevent the ends of the brush fraying or threading out.

These brushes are very flexible and yielding, their use being attended with little wear of the commutator.

They make very good contact, but are quite expensive wire brushes. This class of brush, which was extensively used before the invention of the gauze brush, is made up of a bundle of brass or copper wires, laid side by side and soldered together at one end. Since wire brushes and harder than gauze brushes, they are more liable to score or cut the commutator and are also more troublesome to trim.

Laminated or strip brushes, probably represent the simplest form of brush, but are not extensively used, owing to the lack of flexibility. They consist of a number of strips of copper or brass, laid one upon the other and soldered at one end.

When metallic brushes are used upon the commutators of high tension machine, they frequently give rise to excessive sparking and also heating of the armature, the metallic dust given off appearing to lodge between the segments of the commutator, thus partially short circuiting the armature. To obviate this carbon brushes are extensively used on such dynamos, this material being found very effectual in the prevention of sparking.

Carbon brushes are usually in the form of oblong blocks and are set "butt" end on the commutator and fed forward as they wear away by means of a tension spring. They are the only form of brush that will give good commutation with a fixed lead. The upper part of some carbon brushes are covered with a coating of electro-deposited copper to insure good contact with the holder. The objections to carbon brushes are they are easily broken and not being flexible, vibration, or any roughness of the commutator will cause bad contact.

Copper brushes will carry from 150 to 200 amps. per sq. inch, the usual contact pressure is 1.25 to 1.5 pounds per sq. in. for copper brushes and 1.5 to 2 pounds per sq. in. for carbon brushes. The drop in voltage at the brushes, for carbon brushes is about 0.8 to 1.0 volt at each contact or 1.6 to 2.0 volts for the two, positive and negative contacts of a machine.

For satisfactory operation, the brushes and commutator must be kept in good condition. To this end the main thing to be guarded against is the production of sparks at the brushes. If care be taken in the first instance to adjust the brushes to their setting marks, and to regulate their pressure upon the commutator, so that no sparking occurs, and also to keep the commutator and brushes free from dirt, grit, excessive oil, etc., the surface of the commutator will assume a dark burnished appearance and wear will practically cease. Under these circumstances the commutator will run cool and will give very little trouble.

If the pressure of the brushes upon the commutator be too great, the adjustment faulty, or the commutator be allowed to get in a dirty condition, sparking will result, and if not at once attended to and remedied, the brushes will quickly wear away, and the surface of the commutator will be destroyed.

Sparks due to bad adjustment of the brushes are generally of a bluish color, small when near the neutral plane, and increasing in violence and brilliancy as the brushes recede from the correct positions upon the commutator. If the contact faces of the brushes be fused or covered with carbonized oil, dirt, etc., there will be bad contact, which is accompanied by heating and sparking, simple examination will generally reveal whether this be the case. The remedy is to remove the brushes, clean and fill them if necessary, trim and readjust. If the brushes be exceedingly dirty, or saturated with oil, it will be necessary to clean them with turpentine, benzoline, or soda solution before replacing.

A convenient method of trimming carbon brushes, or of bedding a complete new set is to bind a piece of sandpaper, face outwards, around the commutator after the current has been shut off and then mount the brushes in the holders, adjusting the tension of the springs so that the brushes bear with a moderately strong pressure upon the sandpaper. Then let the machine run slowly until the ends of the brushes are ground to the proper form.

It should be remembered that every spark consumes a particle of copper, torn from the commutator and the longer the sparking continues, the greater the evil becomes. The brush is the device current generated by the armature of the generator. The watt loss at the brushes is equal to 1.6 to 2 volts for carbon, multiplied by the total current carried. The losses due to contact resistance and brush friction are very liable to be greatly increased if the commutator and brushes are dirty and rough or not in good condition.

I think you will all agree that Fell need not blush one single blush for that answer. Incidentally Guaegy also gave an excellent reply to this one. The matter is of such importance that even at the expense of using a lot of space, here it is:

On D. C. machines the brushes and commutator require more attention than all the other parts of the generator put together. Brushes are of two sorts: radial and tangential. Radial brushes point straight at the center of the commutator, making what may be called a right angle contact with its surface. Tangential brushes are frequently, though by no means always made of copper. They are, as a rule, used on generators used for producing current for lighting. They make contact with the surface of the commutator at an angle.

Radial brushes are invariably made of carbon. They are always used on machines which must admit of being reversed. With carbon brushes properly adjusted and in good condition the commutator takes on a dark chocolate colored polish, and the brushes emit a squeaking sound at starting and stopping. This sound is a sure indication of a good commutator-brush condition.

Carbon brushes are made of several grades of hardness, in order to supply suitable brushes to fit different commutation conditions. The proper pressure for a brush depends upon the materials in the commutator and brush and the condition of the commutator. Soft carbon brushes require less tension than hard ones. A rough commutator must have heavier brush tension than is required by a smooth one, for a given area of contact. Brushes working at maximum capacity require heavier tension than when working at less than capacity.

Where there are two or more brushes in each holder, the tension must be the same on each brush, else some will be overworked. This tension should not be sufficient to cause any unnecessary wear on either commutator or brush, or to generate unnecessary frictional heat at the point of contact.

If the contact between brush and commutator be insufficient, there will be high contact resistance, with consequent heating. On the other hand increasing the contact beyond a certain point results in but slight reduction of electrical resistance, but largely increases the friction and wear. A pressure of one and a half to two pounds per square inch of brush surface should be sufficient.

One weakness of carbon brushes is that they, at times, are inclined to stick in the holder to such an extent that the tension spring is not strong enough to feed the brush downward as it wears, or even if it does the pressure at the point of contact with commutator will be too light. This is due to either one of two causes. Viz: Lack of uniformity in thickness of brush, or excess of paraffin in the brush. In event of a brush thicker at one end than the other, while it may go into the holder freely, it may wedge tightly after wearing down. Also, I might add, a nick or burr in the holder may cause brushes to stick. So will dirt.

Trouble through excess of paraffin in the brush is accounted for as follows: If a brush fits snugly into its holder so that it slides back and forth freely, but without any clearance while the brush is cold, when the holder and brush warm up, if there be a bit too much paraffin, which is placed in the brush as a lubricant, it oozes out and forms a paste with whatever carbon or copper dust there may be present, whereupon the brush sticks. It therefore is essential that not only must brushes and holders be kept clean, but also there should be some clearance between brush and holder.

Always fit brush ends to curvature of commutator by using No. ½ sandpaper, sand side against brush, pulling it back and forth around the commutator until brush end is ground to fit. This operation requires quite a bit of patience and care, else you will make matters worse rather than better. It should be done once for every sixty hours the machine runs. Many think only new brushes should be thus treated, but that is not true. Be sure to clean everything thoroughly when you have done.

Brushes have copper pigtails attached which attach to the holder and carry a large share of the current, thus preventing heating and sparking.

If a brush heats too much and gradually crumbles away it is sure evidence that it offers too high resistance. It is not suited to carry the load.

Brother Guaezy then sets forth reasons for sparking at the brushes, but brothers Thoreau and Clark have already done that very well.

One Thing More

In your modern motion picture house every detail of projection, decoration, ventilation, temperature, seating, has been carefully worked out to make the theatre attractive and comfortable.

But there's one thing more you can do—and it's a real factor from the box office point of view: make sure the picture is printed on Eastman Positive Film, the film that safeguards for the screen the quality of the negative so your public may enjoy it.

Eastman film is identified in the margin by the black-lettered words "Eastman" and "Kodak"

TRADE MARK

ANOTHER SCREAM FROM LANGDON

I REGRET that vaudeville had but one Harry Langdon to give to the motion picture. It isn't possible that there is another comedian as good hiding out in the two-a-day, for the studio scouts must have ransacked the boards for such. This Langdon is no mere find. He's a Klondyke.

Langdon was at McVicker's last week in "Plain Clothes." Now if you haven't seen "Plain Clothes" you haven't seen Langdon. If you thought he was funny in that police uniform of his you were mistaken. He was just rehearsing. He wore that uniform just so that he could show you how much funnier he could be without it.

I've watched each of the present day long distance comedians toddle their respective ways through the minor lengths into the sometimes doubtful glory of the "features" and I'm torn just now between hoping that Langdon does and doesn't get by in the big picture they say he's making. If he can make more money in the long pictures, I like him well enough to wish him success. But speaking for myself and nobody else I hope he decides finally to content himself with leading the short subject field by the present healthy margin. I don't think he could be any funnier in the long pictures, and the record is that most of the boys who try it are never quite the same.

I'd like nothing better than to tell you the funny stuff in "Plain Clothes." There's some queer streak in each of us which makes us like to tell such things, even when we know that we're ruining our listener's good time. But to tell you about this comedy would be criminal. You've got to see it to appreciate it; and you've got to see it

THE TOWER OF LIES

Perhaps you heard rumors about this production.

The studio said: "Something marvelous."

We have kept it as a surprise—and what a surprise it is!

Victor Seastrom has made a picture that's going to be the talk of this broad land within a few weeks.

Of course, after "He Who Gets Slapped" we knew that we could expect a money-maker from Seastrom.

But this exceeded our wildest hopes.

Seastrom has put Life on the screen as no one has ever done it before.

He took Selma Lagerlof's world-prize novel "The Emperor of Portugallia" and made a world-prize screen epic out of it.

He probes the depths of the heart, finding there the joy of living and loving, the despair of Fortune's fickleness.

What moments of tenderness and beauty—with the magnificent Norma Shearer!

What moments of towering passion—with Chaney, the genius!

A box-office triumph indeed—with dramatic story-telling that never lets up a moment!

You've seen Chaney, you've seen Shearer, you know Seastrom's magic hand.

Combined they have made one of the greatest motion picture achievements of our day!

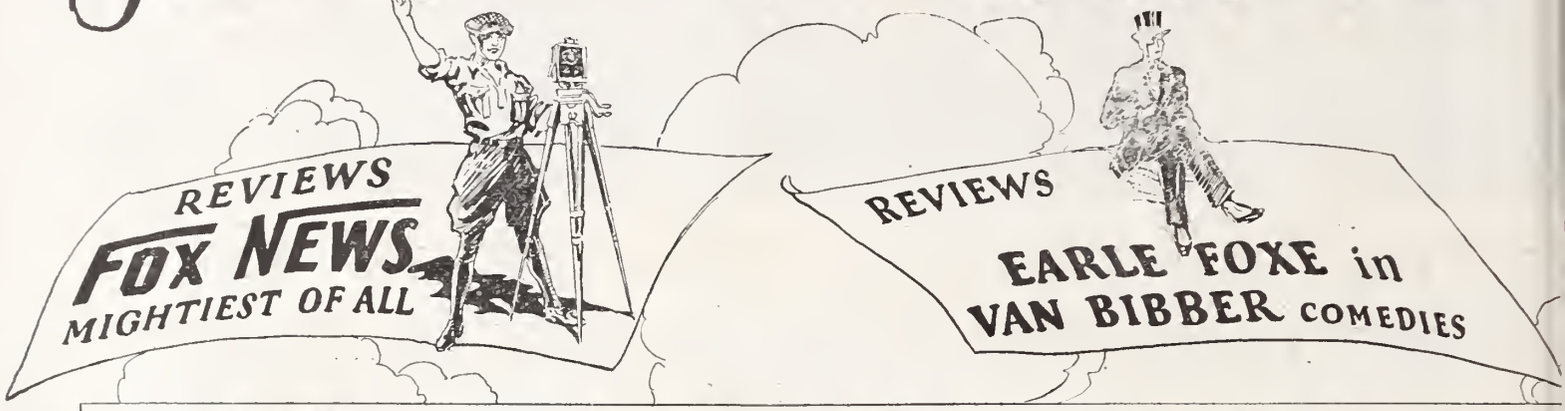
RIDING HIGH from the HARDBOILED



"SHOES"

O. Henry Comedy

O. Henry, beloved of thousands, has finally reached the screen . . . one of the best short comedies ever screened. . . . Exploit this as an O. Henry story and do not hesitate to promise your patrons several thousand feet of merriment.—Exhibitors Trade Review.

You'll have to look a long time before you'll find a more amusing comedy. . . . Any exhibitor should be glad to get it. . . .—Sunday Telegraph.

"Shoes" is amusing and entertaining and there's the customary touch of O. Henry romance that makes it all the more pleasing. . . . Good clean comedy entertainment.—Film Daily.

It is all thoroughly amusing and holds the interest. There are lots of laughs.—Moving Picture World.

A delightful comedy worthy of feature honors in the theatre billing. . . . Excellently acted and produced . . . should score a big hit and a box office success.—Motion Picture News.

"A BUSINESS ENGAGEMENT"

Married Life of Helen and Warren Comedy

Has enough plot for a feature. More than many. . . . It has been produced on a lavish scale. . . . This series should be very popular.—Exhibitors Trade Review.

A step forward in its field. . . . Altogether a first-class offering which will be at home among the very best audiences.—Morning Telegraph.

Clean, wholesome comedy entertainment, nicely produced and with a good cast . . . brings its laughs along readily and has some quite new twists.—Film Daily.

There are a number of excellent touches and genuine laugh-provoking situations and the comedy is thoroughly worth while.—Moving Picture World.

"THE WRESTLER"

Earle Foxe in a Van Bibber Comedy

Exceptionally good comedy . . . does not rely upon slapstick humor . . . but gets smiles through logically developed humorous situations. . . .—Exhibitors Trade Review.

It is elaborately mounted and well cast. In fact it looks as if the Fox Company had determined to do right by Van Bibber.—Morning Telegraph.

The production is on a big scale and they've spent considerable in making these comedies. . . . Good comedy business . . . suitable for any program.—Film Daily.

A striking feature of the new Van Bibber series is the big scale on which they have been produced.. . . . Great cleverness and ingenuity have been displayed.—Moving Picture World.

A highly amusing picturization of one of Van Bibber's adventures in Russia with several hilarious wrestling matches . . . sound entertainment value and high quality.—Motion Picture News.

"SWEET MARIE"

An Imperial Comedy

There is every indication that no expense or pains were spared to make this a good comedy. And it is good.—Morning Telegraph.

The Editor's Views

OUR old friend "Pete" Harrison takes occasion to comment on the case of The Interstate News, an Ohio regional publication, which had the effrontery to show signs of independence and as a result saw all its advertising taken away by what looks very much like an illegal boycott agreement on the part of the high-minded distributors of pictures.

"Pete" correctly points out to the exchanges involved that their action is far more damaging to themselves than to the publication. For they are merely serving notice anew that in their minds advertising is a club with which to keep editorial minds in line.

But "Pete" misses the main point of the entire matter when he even bothers to bring this angle to the advertisers' attention. He seems to think it comes under the head of "information." He is late with the information. Quite a number of advertisers will be surprised to think that trade paper advertising can be considered in any other light than a disguised club.

To these folks trade paper advertising has long ago ceased to be a SALES WEAPON. It is a form of charity, a philanthropy, a following of the unwritten tradition that those nice fellows, the editors, deserve some SUPPORT. That is, so long as they are "nice." When otherwise—withdraw the SUPPORT.

WE could mention quite a few who still cling to the old-fashioned idea that trade paper advertising is SALES MERCHANDISING. But they are by no means in the majority. Way back in the consciousness of the average big magnate is the thought, if he ever thinks about the subject at all, that trade papers are some sort of necessary evil. For some reason or other they seem to have been in the business for years, and for even more intangible reasons it seems to be the custom to SUPPORT them.

There are exhibitors who believe that the advertising is given in order to secure flowery words of praise for a picture or a company. They are wrong. When the bouquets are handed out—the magnate calmly accepts them as DESERVED. When anything less than a bouquet is in evidence—withdraw the SUPPORT.

We speak from experience. And we speak coldly, calmly, and without a trace of bitterness. For if rancor were present it should be showered on trade papers that by their attitude have convinced a few executives that SUPPORT is the word.

IT'S a great life. Especially for an editor with a sense of humor. And with the peculiarly archaic idea that he is going to cling to his independence as long as he clings to his title. And if the choice should come, give up the title.

But it matters little in the onward trend of picture events, and the smooth running life of Moving Picture World.

The World was here before a few picture executives with twisted mental processes; it will be here a long time after them. Readers make publications; advertising CAN kill publications if it first kills READER CONFIDENCE.

But, as we said before, it matters little in the current turn of the kaleidoscope.

In a field where SUPPORT could not buy opinions or stifle them—there would be no occasion for such belief on the part of advertisers.

In a field where it does—that belief will persist.

There's the story in a nutshell.

First Payment of $15,000 on Film Tax Is Collected by Connecticut

"U" and Pathe First to Get Stamps—Film Forces Look to Early Victory on Technicality in Highest Court—Seek Signatures of Legislators for Special Session—Progress

By Tom Waller

SUPREME confidence that a special session of the Connecticut Legislature may be unnecessary, in that the obnoxious $10 per reel tax should be vanquished in October, when it is calendered to be reviewed by the United States Supreme Court, is the latest expression from leading aggressive forces in the film industry.

A solution to the payment of the tax was finally reached this week when on September 9 Tax Commissioner William Blodgett accepted the first money of $15,000. The payment represents the receipt to Connecticut exhibitors of 1,500 trailers or 1,500 tax stamps for the admission of so many reels into the Nutmeg state.

No time has been set for the rendering by exhibitors of the remainder of the $55,210, announced in New York earlier in the week, as covering the tax on prints up to September 12. The 1,500 trailers now obtained have been mainly relegated to Pathe and Universal product, it was stated in Manhattan. Others will be evenly apportioned so as not to cause additional confusion.

As far as could be learned up to press time no more theatres, excepting several said to be in the town hall class, have found it necessary to close their doors. However all exhibitors are said to be suffering inconvenience in programs being delayed through government delivery of films. Many of the more prominent theatre owners, including Joseph Walsh, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Connecticut are sustaining a drastic shortage of comedy product.

Certain of Reversal

That the special term of the Federal Court which affirmed the tax law, terming it a "police regulation," may not grant a rehearing is an opinion now popular. Such a refusal, however, would not dampen the ardor of the appellants who point out that a reversal is now practically assured with the so-described clear cut issue of interstate commerce further recorded by the evacuation of every big exchange from Connecticut.

Although expectations for a favorable ruling by the country's highest court are now at their peak of optimism, yet exhibitors have not abandoned any procedure which might result in a speedier termination of the rigid law. It is almost definitely decided, we are given to understand, that the showmen will not as individuals or a unit attempt to prevail upon Governor Trumbell for a special session of the legislature in the immediate future. The most effective means in the shortest time for the preservation of their theatres, their reasoning seems to be, is to let the "roots appeal to the limbs of the tree."

In other words they are sounding out the sentiments of their districts representatives in Connecticut's law factory.

A number of these legislators are lately described by an authority to be changing their viewpoints. If sufficient of these can be recorded in black and white and that list is presented to the Governor within a month the chances for a special session and a rescinding of the tax are practically assured, Moving Picture World gleans.

Special Session Secondary

The importance of leaving no end unturned is struck home by the fact that the Connecticut legislature regularly convenes only every second year. Consequently, the next regular session is scheduled for January 1927. Thus, even though most reliable sources are sure of an affirmative verdict by the United States Supreme Court Justices, they realize that sentiment must be crystallized for a 1925 session of the law makers, if necessary, and not 1927.

However, the special session no longer seems to occupy the primary position that it did when the industry first commenced its campaign. Its place would seem this week to have been substituted by the grounds for the appeal on new technicalities in the highest court.

With the slackening and even disappearing of comedy material in theatres throughout Connecticut the obnoxious points and rigidity of the tax law are being driven home to the public better than any medium of oratory, Moving Picture World hears.

Exploiting Tax Law

In cases where theatres are unable to complete their program, through lack of a comedy, such announcement is made to the audience by means of slides. Through such media showmen are rapidly awakening their patrons to the seriousness of the situation. Such fans when leaving the theatre are then fully appreciative of banners and posters which are displayed in some of the cities. By this means of conservative exploitation, it is heard, the exhibitor is arousing true Yankee ire toward a ruthless measure. Indications this week are that it may crystallize into a bolt of lightning which will render the new tax statute a handful of ashes sooner than many expect and before the dawn of the new year.

New Haven Dispatch

A dispatch to Moving Picture World from New Haven early this week states:

Theatre patrons of Connecticut will not be obliged to pay the new state film tax through the medium of increased admission scales, it was decided by more than 150 exhibitors of the state at a meeting in New Haven on Sunday, Sept. 6. The Connecticut Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association voted to table the matter indefinitely.

The association, however, did not agree that the tax never shall be assumed by the theatregoers. In fact, it was the opinion of some of the exhibitors that possibly an increase in admission would arouse their patrons to personal protests against the new statute.

At the meeting Sunday some of the owners asserted it had been necessary for them to obtain loans in order to pay their share into the revolving fund. They likewise were emphatic in declaring unless relief from the tax is obtained they must close their houses.

However, the fund was approved and will continue to be effective until present contracts with the distributors expire when, it is the hope of all, there may be a change for their benefit.

R. F. Woodhull, president of the M. P. T. O. A., pledged national support to the Connecticut exhibitors.

Exhibitors from various outlying sections of the state said they had been hard hit by an increase in operating expenses as a result of exchanges being transferred from New Haven to New York or Boston. They pointed out the advance in transportation costs of films and advertising matter as well as an increase in carfare for trips pertaining to their business and also increases in phone calls and

Alarms Missouri

Dispatches from Jefferson City the past week quote Governor Baker as planning to finance the entire public school system of Missouri including the higher educational institutions, by a special tax on amusements and luxuries. One correspondent stated that the Governor anticipates obtaining $5,000,000 annually from the big league ball clubs of St. Louis and the Kansas City American Association team.

His general plan is a 5 or 10 per cent special state tax on amusements. He will submit a constitutional amendment to the voters of the state at the general elections in November, 1926, providing for the substitution of the special tax on amusement and luxuries for the present state tax levies for the educational institutions.

M. P. T. O. A. Directorate Pledges Aid to Connecticut Exhibitors

WEDNESDAY, September 2, was a day of great activity at the National headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America at 25 West 43rd Street, New York City. It was the occasion of several important committee meetings—Administrative—Legislative—Contract and Play Date.

The Administrative Committee, represented by A. Julian Brylawski, Washington, D. C., Chairman Nathan Yamins, Fall River, Mass., and Harry Davis, Pittsburgh, Pa., met and considered the report by President R. F. Woodhull on the various activities of the organization since the last meeting of the Board of Directors. Conferences were held with several prospective Business Managers, and these conferences are still continuing with the prospect of an early announcement being made of their final selection for this important post. Definite arrangements were also made for carrying on all the various work of the organization.

The Legislative Committee, particularly the Music Tax branch, submitted a report, and were authorized to continue their activities and to engage counsel to the end of securing an amendment to the Copyright law at the next session of Congress.

The Contract Committee represented by Joseph M. Seider, Newark, N. J., Chairman, together with Messrs Yamins and Brylawski met with Fred Elliott and Oscar Newfeldt representing Independent Motion Picture Association of America and a long and important conference was held. Seider presented a form of equitable contract and a form of Arbitration, which will be taken up by the others with organization at an early date. Another meeting will be held as soon as is feasible.

The Play Date Committee, Messrs. Harry Davis, Chairman, Sydney S. Cohen, L. M. Sagal, Nathan Yamais and J. J. Harwood, met with A. Carlos, W. E. Shallenberger, Joseph Klein, A. Weiss and Fred Elliott of Independent Motion Picture Association of America. A general discussion was held in which the workings and accomplishments of the Play Date Bureau were fully discussed.

President Woodhull was in attendance at all of the committee meetings. A resolution was adopted by all of the National Board of Directors present, pledging their support to the Theatre Owners of Connecticut in their present crisis, induced by the oppressive and confiscatory tax and censor law recently enacted, the repeal of which, or relief from the restrictions of which, they are at present seeking.

Poster Censors Report

The Poster Censor Bureau of the City of Montreal, completed its first year on September 1, after which a formal report of the activities of the bureau was prepared by its director, Martin Singher, former Montreal newspaperman. This report showed that 109,249 different posters, window cards and stills had been examined during the 12 months, an average of 350 pieces per day. The figures show that more than one-tenth of the printed matter was rejected as "unfit for public view," the numbers of papers passed being 98,450, with 10,799 rejections.

Not to Me But Independence, Says Cohen, Declining Dinner

IN a letter to I. E. Chadwick, president of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, Sydney S. Cohen, chairman of the administrative committee of the M. P. T. O. A., declines the testimonial dinner planned for him by Chadwick's organization. The letter in part follows:

"I had hoped, and felt, that the plans for a testimonial dinner proffered to me by the Independent Motion Picture Association of America had been abandoned after my request of July 20th to Mr. Samuel Zierler, President of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, when I asked him to convey to you all my deep appreciation of the compliment you had tendered me, but also my decision to refuse such an honor. I was, therefore, surprised to read in a trade paper the announcement of the Hotel Commodore being selected for the dinner and to note the reference to it in a fine letter to me from Mr. Frederick H. Elliott, the General Manager of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, received this morning, in which he states 'it is planned to precede Independence Week with a testimonial dinner to you.'

"While I greatly appreciate the splendid spirit that animates you all and am very sensible of the honor and compliment implied, particularly so after our long association and workings together on the Board of Trade and Commerce, I must insist on the Committee in charge of the arrangements for the dinner submerging me entirely in their plans, and reaffirming my previous suggestion would request that this testimonial be to the whole cause of INDEPENDENCE, of which I am proud to be an integral part, and towards the success of which, as an individual Independent, I will gladly lend every aid.

"Trusting that you will see this in the same light and that your Committee will go forward to make this dinner to INDEPENDENCE the biggest thing that has ever occurred in the Industry, because it is a testimonial to the biggest cause which can exist—INDEPENDENCE, I must insist that this decision of mine be considered final and irrevocable."

PROMOTIONS FROM THE F. B. O. RANKS

In accordance with the policy of the Film Booking Offices of America, Inc. to fill vacancies from the ranks of the organization, Major H. C. S. Thomson, president, this week announced the following promotions: S. D. Weisbaum, manager of the Film Booking Offices Exchange in Denver has been promoted to the managership of the exchange in San Francisco.

W. E. Matthews, manager of the exchange in Portland has been promoted to the managership of the exchange in Denver.

H. F. Moore, salesman in the San Francisco exchange has been promoted to the managership in the exchange in Portland.

telegrams. A number complained that they had not been receiving their advertising matter early enough for what they considered advantageous advance publicity for shows.

At a meeting of owners of 13 film theatres in Bridgeport Sept. 3 it was decided not to raise admission prices. Adolph Schwartz, owner of five Bridgeport theatres, says he is convinced the theatre men will have to pay the tax if they want to keep their houses open. "Everybody will try to keep open as long as possible," he said, admitting that "the situation is very black."

A film theatre at Short Beach and another one at Pine Orchard have been closed.

James F. Clancy, manager of Poli's Capitol Theatre in Hartford, says that house, which presents vaudeville and feature pictures, will not be closed, but if necessary will eliminate the screen portion of its policy.

Maurice Culhane, owner of the Shelton Theatre in Shelton, has arranged to have his films shipped from New York as his contracts still have many weeks to run.

The tax has resulted in the abandoning of many film shows by non-commercial interests.

President Walsh of the exhibitors' association says the tax will result in an added burden of approximately $2,500 yearly to theatres the size of his Rialto in Hartford. He says approximately $1,200 of this amount will be in taxes and the balance of $1,300 is his estimate of the increase in the cost of doing businss with exchanges in New York or Boston rather than with New Haven.

"Our business cannot be done by mail," said Mr. Walsh. "There must be a personal contact and it is not a question of doing business with New York or Boston, for of necessity it is both, because some of the offices, which were in New Haven, have gone to Boston and some to New York and we have to deal with both."

BOND WITH B. & K.

Further evidence of the expansion of the Balaban Katz Midwest Theatres, was indicated recently in the announcement that F. M. Brockell, General Manager, has appointed C. E. Bond, well known Chicago Exchange Manager, to an executive position with the organization.

Musicians-Projectionists Unions' Demands Becoming Nation-Wide

Some Places Seek 18% Raise—Quebec House Forced to Close—Holds 25 at Gun Point In Kansas City—Denver Arbitrates

AS a direct result of the demand of the Musicians' Union for six-month contracts for members employed in San Francisco moving picture and vaudeville houses, theatres in the downtown district have reduced their orchestras to the union minimum. They have also reduced salaries to the minimum union scale, except in cases where musicians are under a definite wage contract. For a time the possibility of a walk-out loomed up prominently, but it now seems that the difficulties will be ironed out without further trouble. A series of meetings has been held by the Musicians' Union, and an announcement is expected shortly to the effect that the demand for a six-month contract for members has been withdrawn. Theatre owners are adamant in their opposition to this, insisting that they retain the right to hire and discharge employees.

Concerning the increased pay of organists, demanded by the union, they express a willingness to restore the scale in effect two years ago, which is slightly higher than the one now prevailing. It is suggested by theatre owners that even should the union withdraw all its demands it is unlikely that all orchestras will be restored to their former size, or that former salaries be paid.

NIAGARA FALLS

Efforts to adjust the wage differences between the musicians, stage hands and moving picture operators employed in the Strand, Cataract and Bellevue Theatres, Niagara Falls, N. Y., and theatre managements have been unsuccessful. The theatre employes who at first asked for wage increases of $5 and $10 a week for musicians and ten per cent. increases for the stage hands and operators, announced they would agree to take boosts of $2.50 a week per man, but this offer also was rejected by the theatre managements who refused to grant any pay increases and it is now reported that the houses involved never again will sign up with the unions but will go "open shop" in the future. One manager expressed himself as being highly pleased with the work of the members of the National Theatrical Federated Union, Inc., who are employed, even going so far as to say that his patrons have remarked on the improvement of his new orchestra. The National Theatrical Federated Union was chartered this year by the State of New York and has its headquarters at 152 West 42nd Street, New York. This same manager declared his shows were now running in great shape and that there was now no "departments," in his house.

William J. Kerngood of Newark, N. J., national secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, was in Niagara Falls the other day, conferring with the managers in an effort to settle the trouble. Later Mr. Kerngood announced his efforts seemed futile and he issued the following statement:

"The theatre managers have finally decided to run without the services of musicians, stage hands and moving picture operators affiliated with the American Federation of Labor. The Strand, Cataract and Bellevue Theatres have rejected any proposition involving a penny of increase in salaries, although salaries paid in Niagara Falls are so far beneath those paid in other cities with like living conditions, the original $5 and $10 per man increase was justified.

"In a desire to make a continuance of employment possible the representatives of the musicians offered to accept $2.50 per man increase, but this was rejected. These theatres now have been officially declared unfair to the American Federation of Musicians and its 125,000 members in the United States and Canada, and, under its laws, any member who renders service therein, either in a musical act or otherwise, automatically becomes expelled from membership by such action."

The members of the various Falls unions involved have inserted the following ad in the Niagara Falls Gazette: "To friends of organized labor. The Amendola and Ritz Theatres, Niagara Falls, N. Y., employ musicians, stage hands and operators who belong to the American Federation of Labor. Other theatres do not. Let no statement about employing 'Union' help deceive you. Patronize those who are fair to us and will pay living wages."

The striking workers have also got out banners which are being used on motor cars telling the world that the Strand, Cataract and Bellevue are unfair to labor. These banners have appeared not only in Niagara Falls, but in Buffalo.

ALBANY

Three conferences between exhibitors in Albany, N. Y., and members of the Motion Picture Machine Operators' union of that city, have thus far failed to iron out all of the existing differences leading up to the signing of new wage scales and working agreements from September 7, on. The last meeting was held at the Albany Film Board of Trade rooms on Friday, with practically every exhibitor in the city present. While the first demands of the operators were for $55 a week, and a shorter working day, this has been settled amicably with the result that wages and working hours will remain the same. The chief bone of contention now centers around the men to be employed in the booths and whether or not all of these including the apprentices, shall be members of the union. Another meeting is scheduled for the near future.

In Schenectady, which is a thoroughly unionized city, the organists who now receive $55 a week, in theatres, are now asking for $90 a week in such houses as do not employ orchestras. At the same time, members of orchestras are demanding $2 per man per week in the way of an increase. The whole thing may result in a change in plans for the State and Strand Theatres, where organs are now furnishing the sole music. It had been the intention of the management of these houses to install orchestras the fore part of September to work along with the organs.

KANSAS CITY

A drastic move was made by the motion picture operators' union of Kansas City last week, about twenty-five members of the union invading the heart of movie row, where the non-union operators' school, operated in conjunction with the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, is located. However, when O. H. Lime, manager of the school, perceived there was to be trouble, he procured a revolver from his desk and successfully "stood off" the invaders.

The disturbance resulted from some handbills issued by the school and which were circulated among theatre managers who were undecided whether or not to employ union or non-union operators. The handbills explained that the union made it possible for only a select few operators to obtain positions and was unfair to American labor. Some of the handbills fell into possession of union officials, the disturbance resulting.

DENVER

There will be no strike in Denver as a result of the controversy between the theatre managers and their union employees over the terms of a new contract for the coming year. A dispute which had reached a very serious stage will be settled by means of arbitration. A large number of conferences were held between the union representatives and theatre managers without any sort of a compromise being reached. Both sides consented to place the entire matter before the industrial commission of the state of Colorado, all data and arguments

Contest Winners

The Hays organization announces this week the prize winners in connection with the Greater Movie Season essay contest.

Mrs. Ruth Griffith Burnett, residing in a suburb of Indianapolis, wins first prize—the trip around the world.

Mrs. Lawrence G. Wood of Tulsa, Okla., is awarded the second prize, a trip to Miami or Los Angeles. She has picked the trip to California, it is announced.

C. L. Westerman, a Civil War veteran of Breckenridge, Colorado, is the winner of the third prize. The latter is the trip to Miami as the matter of selection rested with the second winner.

The winners were picked from 200,000 who submitted essays. Of those Michigan submitted the most, the number from that state totaling 50,000, the Hays offices also announce.

Ohio Experiencing Big Theatre Building Boom, Survey Shows

A THEATRE building boom of generous proportions is on throughout Ohio at the present time, and before another year rolls around, the Buckeye State will have added a number of palatial houses to its already long list. In Cincinnati the much-talked of theatre to be erected on a site acquired some time ago by the Famous Players-Lasky organization is to become a reality, according to Ben. F. Heidingsfeld, who has returned from New York where the final negotiations were consummated. The house, which will be located at Fifth and Vine streets, the busiest corner in the city, will be the finest moving picture theatre in the world, it is claimed. The site was purchased for a consideration of $2,000,000, while the structure will cost $1,500,000, and will have a seating capacity of 3,000. The plans show that the house will closely follow the architectural and artistic beauty of the Albee theatres in Brooklyn and Cleveland. E. F. Albee, the B. F. Keith Connecticut company, Senator John T. Harris, Pittsburgh, I. Libson and Ben F. Heidingsfeld, of Cincinnati, Edwin J. Lauder of the Keith organization, Senator J. Henry Walters and former Congressmen J. L. Rhinock are interested in the new project, and have organized the Cinco Co., under which name the work will be carried forward.

At Cleveland, also, Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc., will erect a new $200,000 house at 709 Euclid avenue. John W. Thompson of the same city has let a contract for a new house at 4242 Pearl road, at an estimated cost of $200,000. Conneaut, Ohio, will have a new $30,000 theatre, to be built by Bly and Miller. At Youngstown Ohio, the State Amusement Co., has completed all preparations for a new house. Youngstown is also to have a new house, which is being built by Leonard Hodgkin, who now operates the Hazelton Dome Theatre. Hadgkin personally dug the foundation, and laid the brick, without losing any time from his other house. He expects to personally start the interior work at an early date.

Ground has broken at Canton, Ohio, for a new house on Market street to be built by the Palace Theatre Corporation, of which Ed. E. Bender is president, Chas. Wolf, vice-president, and Sol. Bernstein, secretary and general manager. The house will have a capacity of 2,200 and will be known as the Palace. The Palace Theatre Corporation also operate the Lyceum in Canton. The new house, which will be completed in September, 1926, will play Keith-Albee vaudeville and pictures.

Meyer Fine and Abe Kramer, Cleveland, who recently announced that they would erect a pretentious 2,000 seat house at Broadview and West 25th street, will now build a 1,500 seat theatre at Kinsman road and 146th street.

Fox Has Plans for Big Theatre in the Bronx, N. Y. C., to Seat 4,500

PLANS are now being drawn by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation and head of the Fox Circuit of Theatres, which will give to the Borough of the Bronx, New York City, one of the most modern and up-to-date theatres in the country, it has just been announced.

The new Fox theatre will be built on East Tremont Ave., between Park and Washington Aves., on the irregular plot owned by the Treepark Realty Company, which is controlled by the motion picture producers. It is directly across the street from the Crotona Theatre, also owned by Mr. Fox.

In addition to the theatre, according to Mr. Fox's plans, the new building will contain a number of office suites and store space.

The entrance to the theatre lobby and business office will be on East Tremont Ave. There will also be an entrance to the theater auditorium on the Park Ave. side. The frontage of the combined lots on East Tremont Ave., which are owned by the Treepark company, is approximately ninety-seven feet.

In building the new theatre directly opposite his Crotona Theatre, Mr. Fox does not mean to run in direct opposition to himself. The new enterprise will house entirely different entertainment, since it will be devoted chiefly to high class musical programs. It will be run along the same lines as the New Academy of Music, which Mr. Fox is now building directly opposite the celebrated old Fourteenth Street landmark, which will soon be in the hands of housewreckers.

Like the New Academy of Music, the proposed theatre will be conducted by a musician of international reputation, and a company of singers will be maintained to present operas and operattas in tabloid form.

Symphony concerts by visiting orchestras will supplement the daily programs by the big house orchestra.

In addition to the music, super motion picture productions will be presented at the new house.

The plans call for seating capacity of more than 4,500. Despite this great seating capacity, however, the new house will be cosy and neighborly, because of its French plan of architecture. Among its features will be a modern refrigerating system which will cool the auditorium to twenty degrees below the outside temperature, a fully equipped ladies' cosmetic room and an elaborate men's lounge.

Film Board Paper

A new publication makes its bow this week in the film industry. It is titled "The Film Boards of Trade Bulletin." The bulletin is confined to four pages and according to an editorial written above the name of Attorney C. C. Pettijohn it will be issued semi-monthly. Suggestions and news items are sought, according to a box on the fourth page, and should be addressed: The Editor, Film Boards of Trade, 469 Fifth avenue, New York.

HART WITH HAYS

The William S. Hart Company was admitted to membership in the Hays organization this week, according to an announcement just made. This brings the total membership of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America up to twenty-three.

Unions' Demands

to be presented October 5, 1925. They have agreed to abide by whatever decision is given by this commission and make the terms of their contract for the coming year in accordance with such award. Once again the industry is pointing to the industrial world a sensible, reasonable and economic way to settle disputes.

OMAHA

An agreement as to schedule of wages for the musicians of the leading moving picture houses in Omaha was reached Saturday, Sept. 5, at Omaha, after a musicians' strike lasting nearly two weeks. The musicians struck for an increase. The scale had been $45 per week, summer scale, and $50 a week winter scale. They struck for $60 per week the year around. After repeated conferences between union heads and heads of the leading houses here, the agreement was announced, and the orchestras went back to work. It was announced that the details of the wage agreement would not be given out to the public for a few days.

CHICAGO

While the musicians' scale for the coming year in the movie houses has been advanced 10 per cent. according to the newspapers and the hours cut to 32 a week, the exhibitors will hold a grand mass meeting Wednesday morning at the Ridge Hall, on Wabash avenue, to take final action on the new scale. The old scale called for $55 a week, the new scale will be $60.50. Orchestras of four and five men will be installed by the Lubliner and Trintz circuit in the following houses, the West End, the Crawford, the Paramount, the Pershing, the Vitagraph, the Wilson, the Madison Square, and the Windsor. Most of these houses have been using only organ music during the summer months.

CLEVELAND

Cleveland moving picture operators and musicians are asking for an increased wage scale. They have imparted this information to the Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association with request for prompt action. The increases sought range from 15 to 18 per cent. The exhibitors have appointed a special committee to consider the demand and report its recommendations to the exhibitors at a meeting called for September.

CANADA

The labor problem was still causing considerable concern at Montreal, Quebec, on September 7, the unions having rejected the offer of five per cent. increase in wages by the Montreal Theatre Managers' Association, of which B. M. Garfield of United Amusements, Limited, was acting as spokesman. This association represents a dozen or more of the leading local houses. Because of the labor difficulties, Theatrical Enterprises, Ltd., operating His Majesty's Theatre, Montreal, announced that it had cancelled all bookings except one and would go out of business rather than face continued losses. His Majesty's has been offered for rent by B. E. Lang who has been appointed the representative of the J. B. Sparrow Amusement Company, Ltd., which owns the theatre building.

C. F. CHANDLER

Chandler Appointed Director of F. N. Advertising and Publicity

C. F. CHANDLER, one of the best known and most popular men associated with the publicizing of motion pictures, has been appointed Director of Advertising and Publicity of First National Pictures, Inc. to take effect September 15th. Mr. Chandler succeeds Mark Kellogg, who has resigned after occupying the post since January 1st, 1924. Mr. Kellogg has not yet announced his future plans.

Mr. Chandler is a newspaper and advertising man of long experience having been associated with First National Pictures since 1919, when he became a member of the Advertising Department under the direction of C. L. Yearsley. For the past two years he has been in charge of the Exhibitors Service Department. He has been notably successful in this capacity and is directly responsible for the high quality of First National's poster work during the past year.

Before his connection with First National, he was for five years advertising manager and director of publicity for the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company in Chicago.

Mr. Chandler was born in Foo Chow, China, the son of the Rev. Dr. David W. Chandler and Mary E. Stanley Chandler. He received preparatory school training at Mt. Union College at Alliance, Ohio, preceding four years at the University of Michigan, where he was awarded a B. A. degree. Immediately after leaving college, he went into newspaper work becoming a reporter on the Cleveland Plain Dealer, later associate editor of the Cleveland Press, associate night editor Philadelphia North American, on the re-write and copy desk of the New York Evening World, foreign editor New York World, head of the copy desk of the Chicago Examiner and managing editor of the Cleveland News, a post that he resigned in order to join the Essanay Company. Mr. Chandler is married to Mary Jane Tallman, daughter of Judge James Tallman, Southern district of Ohio.

F. P.-L. FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in its consolidated statement (which includes the earnings of subsidiary companies) reports net profits of $695,724.61 for the three months and $2,051,532.71 for the six months to June 27, 1925, after deducting all charges and reserves for Federal income and other taxes.

After allowing for payment of dividends on the preferred stock, the above earnings amount to $2.16½ per share for the three months and $7.04 per share for the six months on the $243,431 shares of common stock outstanding on June 27, 1925.

Industry Protests Villifying Of Walker at Huge Mass Meeting

By Tom Waller

GREATER NEW YORK'S film world gave Senator James Walker, Tammany's designee for the mayoralty job, a wonderful ovation on September 9. The film curb, in the immediate vicinity of 48th Street and Seventh avenue, was made the burial ground of tons of confetti and colored streamers. The outpour of paper from office windows made this section of New York, looking up from Times Square, appear as if it were the center of a raging blizzard.

Walker, followed by a band and nearly 100 autos, paraded down Seventh avenue from Fifty-Eighty street to the Astor Hotel where several hundred attended the luncheon tendered him by the Motion Picture Division of the James J. Walker Mayoralty Campaign Committee. Adolph Zukor and Attorney Nathan Burkan were among those seated on the dias.

"We have no axes to grind," Burkan stated in presenting Walker. "We are here to protest against the villainy to which this campaign has gone down. This is a protest meeting against an attempt to assassinate the character of a good upright citizen."

Walker's speech was declared to be the most brilliant that he has made so far during the campaign. He recalled the days he had spent in the industry and the fights he had led for the cause of a better filmdom. Speaking of New York's film population he remarked: "It is made up of as fine a set of upright, home loving men, as there are in any community in the civilized world. You will have the satisfaction of saying one of ours made the grade when I become mayor of this town the first of January."

After the speeches further details pertaining to the Walker campaign were discussed. It is said that several thousands of dollars were contributed toward the fund, the goal for which is set for $100,000 as reported in a previous issue of Moving Picture World. Walker goes to the primaries on September 15 with filmdom behind him according to the hearty endorsement he was given at the Astor.

ST. LOUIS REALTY DEAL

Sam Lewis, who operates the New Shenandoah Theatre, Broadway and Shenandoah avenue, St. Louis, swung two major realty deals during the past week when he purchased the New Shenandoah Theatre and Airdome property and also obtained the American Theatre, Twelfth and Barton street, and the adjoining airdome.

BOLT HITS OHIO HOUSE

During a recent thunder storm at Hamilton, Ohio, the Palace Theatre was struck by lightning, and although the house was comfortably filled for the afternoon, there was very little commotion. The bolt struck the projection room, and caused a slight fire which put the generator out of commission. No other damage was done.

All Warner Bros. Theatres Are To Be Operated Under One Policy

UNIFORMITY of service and a single policy are to mark the operation of all the Warner Bros. theatres, according to arrangements now being perfected in the home office. This means that the same attentions bestowed on patrons at Warners Theatre, New York, during its opening week, and which attracted much favorable comment, are to be extended in each of the houses in the company's rapidly-extending string.

All attaches in each of the theatres are to wear special uniforms, which will be identical for persons performing the same class of service in all Warner houses. Girl ushers are to be employed throughout and in every instance they are to be garbed as are those in the New York theatre. Their costume, a particularly chic creation suggestive of the French "Blue Devils," was designated by George W. Bonte, Warner Bros.' art director.

Though each of the Warner houses has, of course, its managing director, its house manager and a full complement of house attaches, the general direction of all is in the hands of George H. Dumond, who was appointed general manager of all Warner theatres a few weeks ago.

Bugs Ruin Film

A special warning to exhibitors in the Kansas City territory has been issued by the First National exchange, as a result of an incident which occurred last week. Several small green bugs, which are common about any type of electric lights in the summer months, were found caught in a film which had been returned. When the insects were removed the emulsion came off on every part of the film where one had been, ruining the film.

ANOTHER CHICAGO THEATRE

Another new movie theatre for the northwest side of Chicago is under construction on the corner of Greenview and Hollywood avenue and the house will be called the Hollywood Theatre. H. A. Hill owner of the Star Theatre is president of the Hollywood Theatre Company and Edwin F. Haferkamp formerly owner of the Rivoli Theatre on Elston avenue is secretary treasurer. The new house will seat 1,500 all on one floor and will feature pictures with extended musical programs at popular prices.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Dover Plains, N. Y., Showman Establishes Unique Record

In a village of 600 inhabitants, and with three theatres at that, F. C. Adams of Dover Plains, N. Y., playing "The Covered Wagon" for two days, a portion of which time the rain fell in torrents, has established a house record that will probably hold for many months to come. Mr. Adams is the type of an exhibitor who is not afraid to take a chance. Dropping in on Film Row the other day, Mr. Adams, talking over business, declared that he was in the game to stay even though the village offered little possibility of growth, and many from the countryside, where automobiles are as thick as flies, were inclined to visit the theatres in Hudson and larger places.

But to get back to Dover Plains, with its 600 persons and its Best Theatre, seating 200 Herbert Hall, seating 150, and the Auditorium, accommodating 275, each running two nights a week, with a 15 and 30 cent price prevailing. Mr. Adams owns the Best and has just put in new seats and plans to run throughout the winter, while the others will close. Without any village papers, Mr. Adams depends on billboards and heralds to advertise his pictures. "The Covered Wagon" brought 50 cents and now Mr. Adams is planning to play a return date. Westerns, he says, get the working people, but the "400" of the town, and there is a "400," more or less, in the 600 residents of Dover Plains, prefer the society pictures. Mr. Adams also has a house in Copake.

Carrying with him the congratulations and best wishes of thousands of friends made through his able management of the Mark Strand Theatre, Herman Vineberg this week assumed management of the Albany and Regent theatres, recently taken over by Strand interests. Mr. Vineberg is a showman in every sense of the word and his past work assures the Albany and Regent being operated on the highest possible plane, and one that will attract business from all sections of the Capital City. The promotion of Mr. Vineberg is a well deserved recognition of the manner in which he has conducted the Mark Strand.

Friendship of many years between Governor Alfred E. Smith and C. H. Buckley, who runs the Empire in Glens Falls, just naturally resolved itself in Mr. Buckley offering the Governor, as well as the good people of Glens Falls, the use of the theatre on September 24, when the state's chief executive will visit the Warren county city and speak.

Going on the policy that all work and no play makes Clarence a dull boy. Mr. Fish of the American in Schenectady took a day off last week and motored to Lake George, stopping enroute for a swim at Round Pond.

Harry Hellman of the Royal in Albany realized the other day that an automobile was no better than its tires. Mr. Hellman has a summer home at Crooked Lake and started for Albany in his expensive car. He was in a hurry for the meeting was an important one. Half way in he suffered a blowout that delayed matters nearly a half hour.

Three years to the day, C. H. Buckley this week observes his entry into the exhibitor field. Sort of puffed up over the fact, too, for during the three years, Mr. Buckley starting with little more than a shoestring, has become the sole owner of the Leland in Albany, as well as leasing the Clinton Square in the same city and the Empire in Glens Falls, all profitable houses.

Jetta Goudal, featured with Joseph Schildkraut in Cecil B. De Mille's personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday."

Well, William Shirley of Schenectady has kept his word and gone back to Florida, but Meyer Freedman is still hanging fire and remaining in the Electric City. And right here it should be mentioned that another exhibitor has winged his way southward in the person of Ben Apple, for years one of the best known exhibitors in Troy. He plans to remain the winter in the South. Postals have been received here during the past week from Charles Walder, former manager of the Fox exchange in Albany, but now in the real estate business in Florida. The postals came from Havana and they were not about lemonade either.

Lew Fischer of the Bradley in Fort Edward is a bitterly disappointed man these days, due to the fact that he was unable to reopen the theatre on Labor Day. The new seats simply didn't arrive and that tells the whole story. The theatre has been entirely redecorated, with many other improvements during the past several weeks.

No matter when the joint committee from the Albany and Buffalo zones meet to consider by-laws, in the latter city, Uly S. Hill will not be present. Mr. Hill is literally up to his ears in work these days with five theatres requiring his attention and with another house about to be erected in Albany. So whatever by-laws are adopted, Friend Uly will have nothing to say.

In days past Jake Golden, now manager of the Griswold in Troy, used to grin when as city editor of one of the Albany newspapers he put over a few scoops. Mr. Golden is doing the same thing these days, with the theatre, but instead of scoops he is breaking house records. On amateur night last week his theatre was packed before 7 o'clock, and hundreds were turned away. Jake does the announcing. The other night when the people demanded an encore, Mr. Golden slipped back into the wings, giving the people what they wanted, but on his return, remarked that the crowd must have liked the performer better than they did him. Mr. Golden is also using a singer from the WGY station with illustrated songs.

Fred Mausert will call his new theatre in Glens Falls the State. It will seat about 1,200. The sidewalls have a panel-like decorative effect with lavender blending into blue. The theatre will be opened sometime this month and will be one of the handsomest in Northern New York.

Now comes the news that the Barcli in Schenectady may not be opened after all this fall. The house has been closed for several months, occasionally opening for a day or so, the last time for a short run of the Gibbons-Tunney fight pictures. The houses now open seem to be able to take care of the crowds, and then again if the musicians get their demand for more money, that will be a factor deciding whether the house is to reopen.

Admitting that he was a bit more nervous than when he was bidding for some of the bigger pictures on the market, Meyer Schine of Gloversville, one of the most popular exhibitors in New York State, and with his brother heading a chain of sixty-odd houses, forsook the ranks of bachelorhood last week. The wedding occurred in the Italian room of the Hotel Utica, with Miss Hildegard Feldman of Gloversville as the charming bride. Mrs. Louis Schine was matron of honor, while the groom was attended by his brother, Louis Schine. The ceremony was performed in a bower of fern and gladioli. The bride wore a gown of blush rose satin, trimmed with pearls and orange blossoms and carried a shower bouquet of roses and lilies of the valley.

Even though he lives only a matter of fifteen miles from Albany, there is an exhibitor in Schenectady who has been along Film Row but once during the last three months. He is James Roach, who is looking after the State, Strand and Albany theatres and so blame busy that he simply can't get over to Albany even for an hour.

Organ Runs Amuck

A leaky roof at the Strand Theatre in Schenectady, N. Y., with the water seeping into the organ that was only installed a few months ago, short circuiting the wires, raised havoc with the instrument and at the same time caused it to emit sounds the like of which was never heard in the Electric City.

Pulling the tremolo stop to accompany a scene of sadness, the organ responded with a wild tattoo of the drums, and in doing everything conceivable under the sun in reverse order.

Texas

The Haskell Theatre at Haskell, Texas, has reopened, with a new finish throughout. The lobby has been made more attractive and new seats added.

The San Antonio Amusement Co. has let contract for a $1,500,000 store and theatre building at San Antonio, Texas. The structure will be of steel and brick and strictly modern.

Non Binion's new costly playhouse, "The Pines," will open at Lufkin, Texas, on Labor Day. The investment is considerably over $100,000.

Pat and W. F. Box have opened their National Theatre at Waco, Texas.

J. C. Clemons is erecting a new theatre at Port Arthur, Texas, to cost in excess of $250,000.

Jack Wright has been named manager of the Cameo and "Bish" Bishop manager of the Greentree and Victor theatres at Port Arthur, Texas.

Jack Pickens is having a new theatre built at Harlington, Texas, to seat 700.

Pittsburgh

Albert E. Kochendoerfer, chief of the technical staff at Loew's Aldine Theatre in Pittsburgh, since its opening two years ago, has been appointed resident manager, succeeding Walter Caldwell, who resigned to engage in the real estate business in Florida.

Charles V. Holmes, connected with local theatres for eighteen years, has succumbed to the lure of Florida and has gone to that "boom" state to seek his fortune. For four years Holmes has been manager of the Arcadium Theatre, located inside the Fourth Avenue Arcade, Pittsburgh. He is succeeded by Reuben Soltz, formerly manager of the Diamond Theatre in the downtown section.

Recent exhibitor visitors to Film Row included: Charles Feinler, Wheeling; Carl Becker, Butler; William Lamproplos, Latrobe; Mike Manos, Greensburg; Walter Silverberg, Greenville; and Mr. and Mrs. Tom Kinney, Franklin.

H. B. Kester, owner of the East Liberty Cameraphone, accompanied by Mrs. Kester motored to Niagara Falls recently.

Lawrence McMasters is now assistant to Manager Smouse of Rowland and Clark's Blackstone Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh. McMasters formerly officiated in similar capacities at the Liberty and Alhambra in East Liberty.

The Lincoln and Shiloh Theatres, Duquesne Heights, have both opened permanently for the new season. During the summer, by agreement of the owners, each house closes for a week at a time, every other week.

Floyd Morrow, formerly manager of Rowland and Clark's State Theatre in Pittsburgh, and who has been connected with the theatre business in the local territory for many years, has just assumed his new duties as publicity director for the Columbus Amusement Company, New Kensington, succeeding A. L. Hicks, resigned.

Larry Jacobs, for several months publicity director for Loew's Aldine Theatre in Pittsburgh, has won himself a promotion in the Loew organization and has been transferred to Reading, where he is managing the new Loew Colonial Theatre.

Hyman Goldberg and George F. Callahan, of the Western Pennsylvania Amusement Company, are at present among the sightseers and land-buyers in Florida.

The Harris Amusement Company's Hippodrome Theatre, McKeesport, a combination house, was opened for the season on August 31.

Canada

The Russell Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, is re-opening on September 14 under the management of Leonard Bishop, who also is manager of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa. The decision to reopen was announced September 5 following the signing of a two-year contract with theatre employes, a small increase in wages being granted by the theatre. An interesting angle to the Russell Theatre situation is that announcement has been made of the closing of the Russell Hotel on September 30, the hotel being a part of the same building as the theatre. This hotel is the second largest in Ottawa.

J. M. Franklin, manager of B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, went to Detroit, Mich., during the first week in September to visit his mother, 70 years of age, who is seriously ill. He returned to the Canadian Capital after several days' stay but is returning to Detroit. Mr. Franklin is well-known as an exhibitor in Ottawa, Halifax, Montreal and many other places of Eastern Canada.

There was quite a bit of excitement in Calgary, Alberta, theatre circle when Ray Tubman, manager of the Palace Theatre there and formerly of Ottawa, figured in a hurried midnight marriage to Miss Louise Kettleson prior to catching the 2 a. m. train for the East to assume the management of the Orpheum Theatre, Fort William, Ontario, to which he had been appointed by Famous Players Canadian Corp. Mr. Tubman is a former famous Canadian athlete, football player and canoeist.

Robert Knevel, assistant manager of the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, slipped quietly away from the Ontario Capital recently and was married at Elkhart, Ind. His friends made it warm for him when he returned.

"The Gold Rush" went into its fourth week at the Toronto Regent Theatre on Saturday, September 5, this being the Canadian premiere of the feature. This is the first picture to be presented at the Regent under the management of D. C. Brown, formerly manager of the Orpheum at Fort William, Ont.

After a business and pleasure tour of three months through the British Isles and the Continent, N. L. Nathanson, managing director of Famous Players Canadian Corp., Toronto, has returned to his home. Mr. Nathanson had several important business conferences while he was away. He is also directing head of Regal Films, Ltd., Trans-Canada Booking, Ltd., and other affiliated organizations in the Dominion.

Manager J. B. Reisman of the Colonial Theatre, Port Arthur, Ontario, pulled off a big coup in connection with the local presentation of "The Ten Commandments." Under a special arrangement with the local newspaper the services of the principal of the Central High School, Port Arthur, were engaged as the official reviewer for the feature. The criticism was run under a large news heading in the News-Chronicle and occupied a column of space. The review was highly eulogistic and was far more impressive than an ordinary staff criticism.

Jimmie Crang, manager of the Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, one of the largest of suburban houses, gave his employes and their friends a very enjoyable outing to his father's farm, a few miles out from Toronto, on Aug. 30. About 100 persons were present. A big feature was a baseball game in which the Oakwood Theatre team defeated a rival aggregation. There were many picnic races and, in the evening, a dance was held with music furnished by the Oakwood Theatre orchestra under Ernie Knaggs.

T. J. McDougall, who was recently appointed manager of the Danforth Theatre, Toronto, a former Allen suburban house, has been compelled to take a vacation in search of health. Jack Laver of the Bloor Theatre, Toronto, is pinch-hitting for Mr. McDougall until the latter's return.

San Francisco

The T. & D. Jr. Enterprises, Inc., with headquarters at San Francisco, has purchased property at Meyers and Robinson streets, Oroville, Cal., and Michael Naify, general manager of the organization, announces that plans are being prepared for the construction of a picture theatre to cost $175,000.

Del Hulen, of the Strand Theatre, Los Gatos, Cal., spent a vacation in the wilds of Plumas County, where he reeled in many a fighting trout.

Charles Fraler of the Grand Theatre, Tracy, Cal., was a recent visitor on San Francisco's Film Row to look after theatre bookings.

Morris Klein, one of San Francisco's old-time exhibitors, has returned from an extended trip to Europe, made with members of his family, and is ready to get back into the harness.

Plans for a picture theatre seating 1,500 to be erected at Monterey, Cal., have been completed for the Monterey Theatres Corporation and actual construction work will be commenced about the middle of October. The theatre is designed in Monterey Spanish style.

A fire occurred in the projection room of the Capitol Theatre, Sacramento, Cal., on the evening of August 30, destroying several reels of film and stopping the show. About 600 patrons were in the house and these filed out in orderly fashion after the first rush for the exits.

Al Crooks, of the Rialto Theatre, Eureka, Cal., is walking away with some of that good coin offered by Carl Laemmle for exploitation work on serials. First he annexed a half-century note for work on "The Great Circus Mystery" and then repeated when "The Fighting Ranger" was booked.

Famous Players-Lasky, the new owners of the Herbert L. Rothchild chain of theatres at San Francisco, are continuing the plan of offering scrip books, which represent a saving of 10 cents on each 50 cent ticket, and have added the new St. Francis Theatre to the list of houses honoring these.

Seattle

W. B. Ackles, old time showman of Seattle, former owner of the Washington Theatre, who has been out of the picture business for several years, has purchased the Society Theatre from Louis Goldsmith. Goldsmith states that he will not re-enter the business, but he is an old timer himself and the bets are two-to-one that within six months he will hang his shingle in another marquee and have his name in gold lettering on the door.

The Twin City Theatres Company, of Centralia and Chehalis, Wash., has undergone a change in personnel. Adrian F. Cormier and Mr. Robinson have disposed of their interests to Mr. A. C. St. John and Frank Graham, leaving ownership entirely with these two who will continue to operate the business alone. Mr. Cormier has not announced his future plans, but will probably buy a house in another locality.

Harry Andrews has opened a house in La Center, Oregon. He operates the Eagle Theatre in Woodlawn, an adjoining town.

The old Class A., Spokane, Wash., will make its grand opening about September 15 as the Egyptian. The house is owned by Ray Grombacher and is now undergoing the transformation.

The Royal, Cashmere, Wash., is being completely overhauled. G. C. Fasken, the owner, is installing 500 new chairs, new carpets, drapes, screen and an Arctic Nu-Air Ventilating System. B. F. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle has the entire contract.

St. Louis

Construction of the Springfield, Ill., new theatre to be erected on Grand, between 8th and 9th streets, will get under way soon. Contracts were let the past week. O'Shea Brothers are the general contractors. The house will measure 65 by 115 feet and it is reported it will cost $250,000. Theodore Gray, South Eleventh street, Springfield, is the owner.

The contract for the Sullivan, Ill., new theatre has been awarded to Hagerman & Harshman, local contractors. It will be one story, 40 by 70 feet, and cost about $50,000.

Herbert J. Krause, manager for Paramount, has closed a contract with the Rodgers chain for the entire Paramount program for 1925 and '26. The houses affected are leased in Cairo, Ill., Poplar Bluff, Mo., Anna, Ill., Carterville, Ill., and Caruthersville, Mo.

Lulu Donaldson has sold the Grand Theatre at Salem, Mo., to C. P. Bates.

The Barlow Theatre, Barlow, Ky., is being remodeled and repaired.

T. W. Sharp of Little Rock, Ark., plans to build a new theatre at Prospect and Beech avenue, Pulaski Heights, leading suburb of Little Rock. The plans call for a building 40 by 140 feet. It will cost upwards of $25,000 exclusive of equipment.

Denver

The large force of workmen are now remodeling and redecorating the new State Theatre, formerly the Strand. This theatre is being made into a high-class first-run house. No expense is being spared in redecorating, and this, together with the fact that a nationally known decorator and designer is in charge, assures the theatregoers of Denver a real theatre beautiful. A new $18,000 organ is also being installed. A stage for appropriate prologues has already been constructed. Harold Horne is in complete charge of the remodeling and redecorating, while Floyd Rice will be the manager on the opening date.

Exhibitors visiting Denver during the past week were Fred Lee, owner and manager of the Victory Theatre, Lamar, Col.; William Ostenburg, Jr., Scottsbluff, Neb., who manages a small chain of theatres in Western Nebraska; R. C. Geeting, Lyric Theatre, Chappel, Neb., and W. B. Cook and wife of the Dawson Opera House, Dawson, N. M.

Arkansas

W. F. Sonneman has purchased a half interest in the Victory and Ozark theatres at Fayetteville, Ark.

Lovely Claire Windsor, now playing throughout the country in Reginald Barker's "The White Desert," in which she is featured with Pat O'Malley and Robert Frazer. This Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production is a picturization of the Courtney Ryley Cooper story adapted to the screen by Monte M. Katterjohn, Lew Lipton and L. G. Rigby.

Kansas

"Well, well, it's finally come," sighed C. E. Cook, business manager of the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri, as he walked away from his desk Tuesday night for a two weeks' vacation. For three months Cook has been working "double time" on the Greater Movie Season campaign, and careworn lines have found their way on his face. He will visit his relatives in Maryville, Mo., a short time, then go to Colorado.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market last week were: Hugh Gardner, Orpheum, Neosho, Mo.; Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Aley, Regent, Eureka, Kas.; I. W. Maple, Bethany, Kas.; C. L. Lawrence Lehman, manager of the Orpheum Theatre, Kansas City, "dressed up" the old place a bit last week with the installation of two new Motiograph projectors with G. E. high intensity arcs.

About a year ago Universal leased the Liberty Theatre from Samuel and David Harding, Kansas City. Up to that time the theatre had maintained an orchestra and done a good business in opposition to the Newman Theatre, Kansas City's largest first-run house, which has an orchestra of 40. But the orchestra was abandoned at the Liberty. Business continued fair for a while, but there were some "tough weeks." Now the Liberty is to have an orchestra again. Samuel Carver is the manager.

NEW BRANCH MANAGERS

W. J. Morgan, sales manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, announces the appointment of two new branch managers. C. A. Schultze has been made manager of the Kansas City branch, and Tom Little has been appointed branch manager at Atlanta.

Michigan

The Butterfield offices in Detroit announce that all thirty-five theatres in the Michigan circuit are now open and playing on their fall and winter season. During the summer a number of the theatres were closed for alterations. E. C. Beatty, general manager of the company, reports business the past summer better than at any like period in the company's history.

Warner Bros. last week signed contracts with the Colonial Theatre, a combination vaudeville and first-run picture house, whereby that theatre will play all the program releases of the company made during the coming season.

The Grand Riviera Theatre, recently opened at Joy Road and Grand River avenue, continues to play pictures one week and will remain at this policy for an indefinite period. The original intention was to play two pictures a week. Business has held up remarkably big since the opening.

The Park Theatre safe was broken into by yeggs one night last week but the robbers received little for their trouble. Less than $100 and some papers of no value were removed from the safe.

Two more new Detroit theatres opened last week. Henry Koppin added the Piccadilly, Livernois and Fenkell avenues, to his growing string, while Golden Bros., opened the Franklin on Gratiot avenue and Seven Mile Road. Both houses seat in the neighborhood of 1,000.

Charles H. Miles has posted a sign over his Ferry Field Theatre property, Grand River avenue and Grand Boulevard, offering it for sale. A few weeks ago he announced that the Ferry Field was to be enlarged and up to a few days ago signs hung over the entrance advising patrons to "watch for the big fall opening."

Ohio

Managing Director Fred S. Meyer of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, got himself much talked about recently when he showed "The Night Club." Meyer rented a vacant store room and whitened all the windows. Then he posted a sign that "The Night Club" would open soon. He arranged with out-of-town parties to apply to the Mayor for a permit to open such a club, but the permit was promptly refused and considerable newspaper publicity resulted. However, Meyer continued to advertise the fact that "The Night Club" was to open and the Mayor began to receive protests. On the day the picture opened, Meyer changed his sign to read that "The Night Club" would open at the Palace.

John B. Elliott, manager of the Strand Theatre, Lexington, Ky., is to open a new hotel in that city which he will call the Paramount.

Louis Snitzer, who has extensive moving picture interests in Cincinnati and Hamilton, has added another member to his staff. Mrs. Snitzer and the baby boy are doing fine, thank you.

W. J. Emmons, Sidney, Ohio, has purchased the Mall Theatre in that city, the house having been sold at sheriff's sale recently.

Tom Morrow has opened the new Bennett Theatre at Logan, W. Va. Morrow was associated with the Kearse Theatre, Huntington, W. Va., before opening his new house.

Keith's Palace, Cleveland, Ohio, which several weeks ago changed from eight acts of vaudeville and short subjects to six acts and feature pictures, has again resumed its former policy. Newsreels, Fables, Topics of the Day and two-reel comedies will hereafter be shown in addition to the eight acts.

Buffalo, N. Y.

E. O. Weinberg, one of the best known theatre men in the state, is back in the business again after dabbling in real estate for several months in Buffalo. Eddie is now manager of the Cataract Theatre in Niagara Falls, N. Y. He formerly managed the old Strand, Elmwood and other houses, including the Olympic in Buffalo, the State in Schenectady and the Strand in Syracuse. He also was manager for a time of the Buffalo branch of Renown Pictures. The Cataract is owned by the Cataract Amusement Company of Niagara Falls, of which Charley Hayman is the head.

L. Weidrich, former manager of theatres in Costa Rica and Panama, has come to Buffalo to manage the Ellen Terry Theatre, recently acquired by Mr. Kreiger from the Border Amusement Company.

Percy E. Brown, 52 years old, 408 Washington street, Jamestown, N. Y., who was granted a permit on September 1 to build a $100, 00 theatre in Taylor street, in the Chautauqua Lake city, died suddenly of heart disease at his home on the evening of the same day. Mr. Brown was returning from a stroll when he collapsed in front of his home. For eight years Mr. Brown has operated the Royal Theatre in Jamestown.

Stewart Parmalee, former manager of the Capitol in the South Park section of Buffalo, is now selling flivvers for a Main street lizzie agency. Many of his distributor friends along Film Row have been in to look over the new models and several have filed orders with Stewart.

Howard Waugh, who for many years was connected with picture theatres in Jamestown, N. Y., has been appointed manager of the remodeled Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee, which has been acquired by Universal. Mr. Waugh had been managing houses for Paramount before accepting the Milwaukee post, his last position having been in Memphis and Atlanta.

Al Beckerich, manager of Loew's State, pulled a good one when he arranged to have "Miss Pittsburgh" (Miss Mildred Walker) appear at his house for one day when she arrived in Buffalo on her way to the beauty tournament in Atlantic City.

Ray S. Averill, manager of the Olympic, Buffalo, is distributing house programs in which are printed a free ticket good one night of the week. Fair enough.

Lionel Edel, manager of the Ritz Theatre, Niagara Falls, N. Y., took a half-page ad in the local newspaper to announce the booking of the entire Fox product for 1925-26. "Lightning," the first of the bookings, is being shown this week.

The week of September 20 promises to be a big one at the Palace Theatre, Lockport, when Manager George T. Cruzen will offer a new Paramount feature, five acts of vaudeville and Sousa's Band, all at regular prices.

J. Walter Bengough, manager of the Jefferson Theatre, Auburn, N. Y., is giving his patrons the cream of the big ones these days, such features as "Don Q," "The Gold Rush," "Little Annie Rooney," etc., being noted in his programs. Walter used to live in Buffalo.

MURPHY NAMED PRODUCTION HEAD

Martin Murphy has been appointed production manager of Universal City to succeed William Koenig, who resigned recently to accept a similar position in another studio, according to announcement by Raymond L. Schrock, general manager.

Murphy has been in the employ of Universal for more than ten years, starting as an assistant director with the old M. M. P. company, later Universal, at the Fort Lee studios.

Murphy has been assistant to the production manager for the past two years.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Starts off a bit slow but the last reel gets them going. Some fine comedy and support is good. You'll make no mistake on this. Seven short reels. Good tone, yes for Sunday. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre, Benton City, Missouri.

IS LOVE EVERYTHING? (6,000 feet). Special cast. This didn't register. "Too much mush," said my patrons. But if you can play a strong love story, it's all right. Shipwreck was one saving grace here. Good tone. Poor appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and town, 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

F. B. O.

BREED OF THE BORDER. (4,920 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Plenty of action and Wild West stunts and shooting near the beginning and so on. I guess that is what they want, for it held up good on second night for me. Good tone and appeal. Hardly for Sunday, no as special. Draw town and farm class, town 600. Admission 10-20 and 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

BROKEN LAWS. (6,413 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. A real, honest-to-goodness special. This one, properly advertised, should be a clean-up in any type house. Print new. Very good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Big City draw. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

CHAMPION OF LOST CAUSES. Star, Lefty Flynn. An ordinary program picture that will get by with your Saturday night crowd. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

CHEAP KISSES, (6,558 feet). Star, Lillian Rich. Excellent picture. Lillian Rich surely did fine in this one and Jean Hersholt as the Swedish artist was a wow. Picture was very entertaining and several patrons were vociferous in their praise. Direction was almost perfect. Give us some more pictures like this, Lillian, and you'll have a big following. Fair tone. Strong appeal. Maybe for Sunday. Not quite a special. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION. (7,301 feet). Star, Mary Carr. This is a wonderful picture; I ran it on a hot night but the people who saw it spoke very highly about it. Tone O. K. Great appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

DRUSILLA WITH A MILLION. (7,391 feet). Star, Mary Carr. Another one of those clean, fresh and pure pictures—fit for all to see. Book it and boost it. A real seller. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and a fair special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

FIGHTING DEMON. Star, Richard Talmadge. Talmadge is a good drawing card here: they all like him, old and young. This one will please them—but I got a bad print on it, that is all the kick I have. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw railroad and farm class town 3,000. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

LILIES OF THE STREET. (7,216 feet). Star, Virginia Lee Corbin. A real good bet. Fair tone but no for Sunday. Draw conservative class, city 23,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

O. U. WEST. (5,000 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. A first class western. No for Sunday or special. Draw from town 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

O. U. WEST. (5,000 feet). Star, Lefty Flynn. Pleased our western fans. F. B. O. always furnishes fair product. On this, tone O. K. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

RIDIN' COMET. Star, Yakima Canutt. A very good picture. He makes one good picture after another for us. He's got Mix, Thomson and the other boys beat a mile. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Town 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

SILK STOCKING SAL. (5,367 feet). Star, Evelyn Brent. A knockout drama, something different, pleased to say. Personally recommend it. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. No as special. Draw middle and working class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (360 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

TEXAS BEARCAT. Star, Bob Custer. A good western action picture that pleased everybody. Well acted and well directed, and what more can you want? Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

THUNDERING HOOFS. (6,913 feet). Star, Fred Thomson. All the Thomsons are good and this is no exception. Good tone. Yes for Sunday. Draw conservative class, city 23,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

VANITY'S PRICE. (6,124 feet). Star cast. This is up in the special class and should be put over as one. One thing you are sure of: F. B. O. will sell it right; and you should make some money on it. Print new. Good tone, very good appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw all classes in big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

WHITE THUNDER. (4,550 feet). Star, Yakima Canutt. Good western subject: fine for Saturday showing. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Questioned for Sunday and special. Draw middle and working class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (360 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Here's a REAL picture, fellows! One hundred per cent., simon-pure entertainment. There's thrills in it, and the suspense gives 'em the backache from making 'em sit up in their seats. Consider this the best Saturday night picture we've played this summer. Ninety per cent. of the producers would have called this a super-special, F. B. O. sold it to us us as a first class program picture and that's exactly what it is—a knockout! Fair tone. Extra strong appeal here. Maybe for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town about a hundred. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

YOUTH AND ADVENTURE. Star, Richard Talmadge. A thrilling stunt picture which will please your Saturday night crowd—but do not have them too often. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

First National

CHRISTINE OF THE HUNGRY HEART. (7,500 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Here's the story in a nut-shell: Woman leaves first husband to wed another man; soon tires of him and runs away with another; she returns to husband No. 1 and is later reunited to husband No. 2. Had a number of walkouts on this: people don't like such stuff and First National should be ashamed of themselves for putting out a picture of this low caliber. Don't play it, Gang—shelf. Poor tone, appeal none. No for Sunday or special. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture, that will please the majority of the people. Not a Saturday night picture. Fine tone. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

FRIVOLOUS SAL. (7,707 feet). Stars, O'Brien, Busch, Alexander. A good melodrama with lots of western stuff. Should satisfy the majority of fans. Good tone. Appeal 70 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. William T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

HALF WAY GIRL. (7,520 feet). Star, Doris Kenyon. Very good picture of melodramatic type. Did not draw. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

HEART OF A SIREN. (6,705 feet). Stars, Barbara LaMarr, Conway Tearle. Make a good bill any season of the year. Good draw at box office. Fair tone. No for Sunday. Draw conservative class, city 23,000. Admission 25. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

IF I MARRY AGAIN. (7,401 feet). Stars, Hughes, Kenyon, Mayo. A very good picture with a fine cast; well acted, but rather a flimsy, impossible story. The scenes in the tropical island are good and it is very well produced, but is lacking something that would make it a big one. A good evening's entertainment and will please as a program attraction. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. Sunday O. K. No as special. Draw from industrial center of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

THE KNOCKOUT. Star, Milton Sills. Chalk up another for Milton Sills. Drew better than usual business and gave generally good satisfaction. Joe Hewitt, Strand Theatre, Robinson, Illinois.

MADONNA OF THE STREETS. (7,507 feet). Stars, Alla Nazimova, Milton Sills. Very good production that pleased the few who came out to see Sills. Very good production that pleased the few who came out to see it. Advertised with 24 sheet, six sheet, three sheet, two one sheets, trailer, heralds, teaser slides—and still the attendance was very poor. Must have been the title that killed it as the weather was good and nothing unusual was going on in town. Very good acting and direction. It's well worth playing and they'll be satisfied if you can get them in. Tone O. K. Strong appeal (note above also). Yes for Sunday and speci general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MY SON. (6,532 feet). Star, Alla Nazimova. A very fine picture with good cast. Attendance good two days. Pleased almost a hundred per cent. Tell them about it and they will be satisfied after seeing it. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SO BIG. (8,562 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. Colleen is a wonderful actress. This picture proves it. While it is entirely different from Colleen's other pictures, it proved very popular here. It is easy to advertise and exploit, and pleases all who see it. It has adequate comedy and is a very absorbing drama. Colleen gets the sympathy of the audience at the start, and holds it all through the picture. The work of Beery is good, as usual. Tone O. K. Good appeal. O. K. for Sunday, yes as special. Draw all class in small town, 2,500. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Fox

ARIZONA ROMEO. (4,694 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A very good western. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw from town 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

CYCLONE RIDER. (6,672 feet). Star cast. Oh, Boy! Do you want a Saturday night picture? Then get this one. Action is rammed in every foot except the first reel—and that's some record. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

DARWIN WAS RIGHT. (4,982 feet). Monkeys in novelty as the cast. Very poor indeed. Paid three times amount I consider it worth. Appeal none. No as special. Draw all classes, town 2,800. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

DAUGHTERS OF THE NIGHT. (5,470 feet). Special cast. A good advertisement for the telephone company but it is a fair picture. Not a special by any means but you will probably pay a special price for it. Print poor. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Big city draw. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

DAUGHTERS OF THE NIGHT. (5,470 feet). Star cast. A very good program picture but Fox says it is a special and gets a special price for it; as special don't pay it. Fair tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

DEADWOOD COACH. Star, Tom Mix. Good western. Good tone, yes for Sunday. Draw average class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

DICK TURPIN. (5,224 feet). Star, Tom Mix. It is hard to make anything on this picture as the Mix fans will not like it as it is not what you expect to see in a Mix picture. The picture is a good one but not suitable for the western fans. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

"Van, keep hammering at us—this department has to be kept going! (And we're going to do our share)."

So says H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

He DOES his share, too—keeps the tips coming.

About hammering.

I know the folks intend to send in tips—regularly. But sometimes it's hard to get the time; so many things come up in a busy theatre.

So I'm always hammering. Not using the hammer to knock with—using it to tap out a reminder that tips are the one dependable source of exhibitor information.

So if I keep at you, fellows, Hedberg and Nauman, and Sawyer and a lot of the gang who back up their request by coming through themselves, have told me to do it.

Fall's coming—a big season is on the way for all of you, I sure do hope.

Make it a big season for tips!

VAN.

GERALD CRANSTON'S LADY. Star, James Kirkwood. The title spoils an otherwise good picture. It did not take. Switch title and it will take. Get them in; they will be more than pleased. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday and (title excepted) as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

GREAT DIAMOND MYSTERY. (6,058 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A nice, entertaining little program picture. We always can depend on a good house for Shirley. Good tone. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HEARTS OF OAK. (5,326 feet). Star, Hobart Bosworth. A picture well acted; but not too pleasing a story. Good tone. small appeal. No for Sunday or as special. Draw farmers and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

HONOR AMONG MEN. Star, Edmund Lowe. Nothing to brag about—but you won't lose favor over running it. Good tone. Appeal 70 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

HUNTED WOMAN. (4,954 feet). Could have been made a good picture but they choked it off too quick. This kind of picture is what will kill the name of Curwood on a picture. No as special. Draw all classes, town 2,800. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

MAN WHO PLAYED SQUARE. (6,700 feet). Star, Buck Jones. A good one. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

PAINTED LADY. (6,938 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. Good action picture. Draw average class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

TEETH. (6,190 feet). Star, Tom Mix, with Tony (horse) and Duke (dog). An excellent one; pleased everybody. Good for any night in the week, especially for Saturday night. Dog and Horse fine. Good for two days in small towns, good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. No for Sunday, yes as special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

THIS FREEDOM. (5,000 feet). Star cast. They did not think much of this one. We pulled it off the second night. Draw all classes, town 2,800. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

WINGS OF YOUTH. (5,540 feet). Star cast. One of Fox's big 1924-25 SPECIALS that proved to be a very, very ordinary program picture that pleased only about fifty per cent. of a small sized audience. Some wonderful photography in this production, but folks in this neck of the woods like a little entertainment thrown in with the photography. As a result of the SPECIAL price we made nothing; Fox did, though. A Fox News and Lige Conley Educational comedy kept the program from falling flat. Tone too jazzy. Very little appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw general class, town about a thousand. Admission 10-25 to 15-35 on specials. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Metro-Goldwyn

BANDOLERO. (7,000 feet). Star cast. A high class production and pleased our patrons. We cannot usually get by with others than pictures made in America; but there is quality and fine acting in this one laid in Spain. A dandy bull fight. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday and Special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

DENIAL. Star, Claire Windsor. Will class this as one of Metro's poorest. It's a shame to use so good a star in such a poor subject. Was not a satisfactory program for us and drew poorly. Tone O. K. Appeal 40 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. W. A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

HALF-A-DOLLAR-BILL. (5,700 feet). Star cast. A fine picture; a little old, but good at that. The dog does fine work and so does the kid. You can't go wrong on it. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer class, town 730. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (300 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

HAPPINESS. (7,700 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. A good program picture, that's all. If you run a good comedy with it, it will make a good show. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer class, town 730. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (300 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

HE WHO GETS SLAPPED. (6,613 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. A wonderful production, made so only because of presence and wonderful acting of Lon Chaney, ably aided by Norma Shearer and John Gilbert. Good tone. Appeal here 100 per cent. For Sunday—no and yes. Yes as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

IN SEARCH OF A THRILL. Star, Viola Dana. Very good little picture. Pleased all who saw it. No as special. Draw all classes, town 2,800. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

LADY OF THE NIGHT. (5,441 feet). Star, Norma Shearer. A real star in a slim story. Norma is just the girl for a big super-special. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. No for Sunday or special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

MONSTER. (6,425 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Chaney drew a good crowd on this; something a little different and nice for a change. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre, Mt. Morris, New York.

NAVIGATOR, (5,600 feet). Star, Buster

Keaton. If you haven't run this yet and your audience likes Keaton, run it at once; it sure is some picture. The situations are real funny. Worth running. Yes for Sunday. A comic special. D. W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

NAVIGATOR. (5,600 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. A good comedy; pleased all who saw it. Yes for Sunday. Draw all classes, town 2,800. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

REVELATION. (8,732 feet). Star cast includes Viola Dana. Fine entertainment which everyone enjoyed. It's a picture that should please anywhere. Many favorable comments. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. O. K. for Sunday. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SEVEN CHANCES. (5,112 feet). Star, Buster Keaton. One of the greatest comedy-dramas that he ever made. Run it on a crowded night and the laughs will go better than ever. Tone O. K. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and as (comedy) special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

SINNERS IN SILK. (5,700 feet). Star, Adolphe Menjou. Give us the wide open spaces and we're all set; but these mushy ones are O. K. for once in a while only! Fair to poor. Tone not so good. Fair appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

SNOB. (6,513 feet). Star cast. Well liked by everyone here on account of John Gilbert in the cast; but in Lancaster County, where we have real Mennonites, we know that the costumes were not true to life. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday. David Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

UNINVITED GUEST. (6,145 feet). Star cast. A fine picture—all who saw it said it was fine. (Business is rotten here, it's been that way for six months). Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer class, town 730. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (300 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

WINE OF YOUTH. (6,805 feet). Star, Eleanor Boardman. Another jazz picture that was a flop at the box office. Pictures of this sort lose me money. Print good. Fair tone. Appeal 50 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

Paramount

ANY WOMAN. (5,963 feet). Star, Alice Terry. For me rotten. Boys, pass this one up. Tone not so good. Audience appeal, none. Hardly for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, city 12,000. Admission 10-20. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

BORDER LEGION. (7,045 feet). Star, Antonio Moreno. Rather "gory." Lots of action; good scenery; good acting; interest well sustained. Seemed to please the few who came. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw small town class, town 1,000. Admission 10-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (249 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

CONTRABAND. (8,775 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. For me plain rotten, not even a program picture. They sell you a few good pictures. This kind would put me out of business. No tone. Appeal none. No for Sunday or special. Admission 10-25-30. W. H. Odom, Pastime Theatre (250 seats), Sandersville, Georgia.

CROWDED HOUR. (6,558 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Awful slow. Fair tone. No appeal here. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, city 12,000. Admission 10-20. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

GROUNDS FOR DIVORCE. (5,692 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Good grounds for divorcing your theatre from such pictures. Poor tone. Appeal none here. No for Sunday or as special. Draw all classes, city 12,000. Admission 10-20. S. A. Hayman, Lyda Theatre (360 seats), Grand Island, Nebraska.

HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN. (8,300 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Fine picture: did good business considering hot weather. Most any one will like this picture. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. C. C. Golden, Missouri Theatre (250 seats), La Belle, Missouri.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This is full of action and comedy and makes a good program. Tone O. K. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Town of 3,500. Admission 10-20-30. Chas. Lee Hyde, Grand Theatre (500 seats), Pierre, South Dakota.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,935 feet). Star, Richard Dix. This picture certainly drew the kids and must have excited them because you couldn't hear yourself talk. Fine program picture. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LUCKY DEVIL. (5,825 feet). Star, Richard Dix. You can depend on handsome Richard, and the "Lucky Devil" is this year's best for a race story. Appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

MANHANDLED. (6,998 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. No good here. Some walked out on it. Tone none. Appeal 70 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmer class, town 730. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (300 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

OLD HOME WEEK. (6,780 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. An ordinary program picture that will merely please your Meighan fans. He should have better stories. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Pace & Bouma, Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

NIGHT LIFE OF NEW YORK. (6,908 feet). Star, Dorothy Gish. Good picture with a good story, although it did not draw at all. My town is tired of jazzy stuff. Print new. Good tone. Not much appeal. No for Sunday or special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Anything with Meighan or a few kids goes here, and this had both as well as some comedy. A good story and Lois Wilson. A good picture. Tone good. Appeal excellent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and small town, 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

Pathe

BATTLING ORIOLES. (5,600 feet). Star cast. This is a slapstick comedy that is a scream. Especially good for children. Did not draw well as I was afraid to advertise it much. I wish now that I had. Draw farmers and small town, 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

BLACK CYCLONE. (5,058 feet). Star, Rex (horse). Marvellous acting by horses; magnificent scenery. Comedy. Thrilling climax that will raise 'em out of their seats. Boost it. Yes for Sunday and special. Appeal a hundred per cent. Pace & Bouma. Rialto Theatre (300 seats), Pocahontas, Iowa.

KING OF WILD HORSES. (5 reels). Star, Rex (horse). This went over fine and drew a little extra money. If you haven't played it, do so. It will appeal to western fans as well as others. Good tone. Great appeal. Yes for Sunday. A semi-special. Draw farmers, town 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

Deserve Thanks

Allen and Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont—and Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre, Atlantic Massachusetts, are two theatre owners who certainly ought to have a vote of thanks from you folks.

Both of these exhibitors have sent in, during the dull season of the last couple of weeks, a matter of twenty to fifty reports —voluntarily, generously.

Boys, that's a wonderful spirit of co-operation for you!

Al C. Werner of the Royal, Reading, and Guy C. Sawyer of Town Hall, Chester, are two others who shoot in a big bunch at a time.

And I appreciate their good will as highly as you-all do.

Principal

MINE WITH THE IRON DOOR. Star cast. The popularity of Harold Bell Wright's novel was evident. The stay-at-homes came to see this one and it was a very good picture of the western type, with Robert W. Frazer as the Indian, the outstanding personage in the cast. The prints are very dark and so our projection could not be made very satisfactory. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special (in small towns). D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

ANOTHER SCANDAL. (8 reels). A good story spoiled by scenes that make you wish New Jersey had a Censor Board—when vamp lies on bed and draws up nightdress, I'll say it's rotten, and will do harm to an exhibitor. Y. M. C. A., Carney's Point, New Jersey.

BARBARA FRIETCHIE. (7,179 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. Another good picture that means nothing at the box office. This one will please the movie fans but no one will shout its praise as it is just another good picture and by no means a big one. Program only, and not to be featured big. Title and cast mean very little at the box office. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw from industrial center of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

CAFE IN CAIRO. (5,656 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Good. Dean well liked here, that's what helped put this one over. Tone questionable. Appeal 95 per cent. here. No for Sunday or special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

CHORUS LADY. Star, Margaret Livingston. Very good. Lots of fun, and good drama. Acting good. Liked by all. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FLAMING FORTIES. (5,770 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good Saturday picture. Have finished first Carey series and find all good. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

GIRL ON THE STAIRS. (6,234 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. A fair program offering. The same old story. Good for a small house for one day. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

RECKLESS ROMANCE. (5,530 feet). Star cast. A good, clean comedy drama that kept you tickled all the way through from beginning to end of show. Had it Saturday night and my people all came out smiling. Fine tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw country and town class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star Priscilla Dean. This is a one hundred per cent picture in this town. "Nothing but" a good picture. Good tone. Appeal here 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and as special. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SIREN OF SEVILLE. (6,724 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good action picture but Miss Dean doesn't draw so well for us. The direction is good, plot good and should go over big where Miss Dean is liked; she certainly is an actress. Tone O. K. Appeal here 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. William A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

TROUPING WITH ELLEN. (6,462 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Not much good; nothing to it. No for Sunday. Appeal, nothing. No for Sunday or special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

United Artists

THROUGH THE BACK DOOR. Star, Mary Pickford. An old picture, but I received a new print. People thought it was very good, but acting now is a lot different than it was five or six years ago. Excellent tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farm and country class, town 1,200. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

Universal

DANGEROUS INNOCENCE. (6,759 feet). Star, Laura LaPlante. This is a fine little picture and is a credit to the White List and to Carl. Tone, appeal and for Sunday, yes. No as special. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Better than average Hoxies. Some very good riding in this picture and altogether it affords a good evening's entertainment for those that like the "westerns." Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. D. B. Rankin, Co-Operative Theatre, Idana, Kansas.

FIGHTING AMERICAN. (5,251 feet). Star cast. Fair picture. Nothing big, but those who said anything said "good." Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20 and 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

FLYING HOOFS. Star, Jack Hoxie. Just average. Hoxie does not seem to be getting as good stories as he used to. Tone O. K. Appeal circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

FLYING HOOFS. Star, Jack Hoxie. For me, rotten—A No. 1 flop. Draw from town 3,500. Admission 15-25. E. C. Bays, Globe Theatre, Buena Vista, Virginia.

FOOLS' HIGHWAY. (6,800 feet). Star, Mary Philbin. This is just a fair program picture. No good for small town. Mary Philbin's acting not as good as in "Merry-Go-Round." Appeal 70 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre (190 seats), Kadoka, South Dakota.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Pleased our audience as well as any picture we have had for a long time. Play this one. Good tone. Appeal practically a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

HIT AND RUN. (5,508 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This is a semi-western; and when you run it step hard on the advertising as it is a knockout baseball story. Print fair. Very good appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

HURRICANE KID. Star, Hoot Gibson. This is a good Gibson, and if you will use it on a Saturday will go over good. Hoot appeals to the farmer and the working class. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, town 3,600. Admission 10-20. W. A. Clark, Sr., Castle Theatre (400 seats), Havana, Illinois.

I'LL SHOW YOU THE TOWN. (7,400 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Sweet Papa! What a picture. I sure batted a home run with this one! If this one does not please them, close up the joint and throw the key in the creek. Tone, yes. Appeal, zowie! Yes for Sunday and as special, you bet! Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A first class comedy drama, with a little of everything, and a real picture, good enough for anybody. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and as special. Draw working class, city 13,000. Admission 14-20. G. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (168 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

RECKLESS AGE. (6,954 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. This is a dandy program picture. You make no mistake when you book this one. A laugh from start to finish. Had a good crowd on this one. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre (180 seats), Kadoka, South Dakota.

RED RIDER. Star, Jack Hoxie. Did not like this personally, but the western fans ate it up, so I should worry. Yes as to tone. Some appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw from small town, 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

RIDIN' KID FROM POWDER RIVER. (5,727 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Better than the average western and pleased nearly all who saw it. Tone O. K. Appeal 90 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

SMOULDERING FIRES. Star, Pauline Frederick. This is a very good program picture but nothing to rave over and, here, absolutely no box office attraction. Don't try and set the world afire with this for it hasn't the pulling power. You can, however, promise your regular patronage a good entertainment in this feature. Excellent cast. O. K. for tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw from industrial center of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

SALLY O'NEIL

This little girl has reversed the order of things in the usual story of the struggle for screen fame, for without previous experience she suddenly found herself in the leading role of "Patsy," Marshall Neilan's comedy-drama of railroad life in the far West, produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. She is now at work on Alf Goulding's "Don't," after which she will play the leading role in King Vidor's production, "Lovey Mary."

SPOOK. Star, Hoot Gibson. Not the best that he has made but a good, entertaining picture with lots of laughs and action. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, Mexico.

Vitagraph

BARREE, SON OF KAZAN. (6,803 feet). Star, Anita Stewart. Barree is an extra good feature. It hit us on a hot night, yet we did capacity business and all were pleased. Tone O. K. O. K. for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 3,300. Admission 15-30. P. L. Vann, Opera House (650 seats), Greenville, Alabama.

FEARBOUND. (5,700 feet). Star cast. Very good picture; something different from the general run and well acted. Good tone, fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town and farmer class, town 600. Admission 10-20, 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

HAPPY WARRIOR. Good picture and story, photography excellent. Pleased good business, too. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw middle and working class, city 23,000. Admission 10-25. Ed. C. Curdts, Bijou Theatre (360 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

MYSTERY OF LOST RANCH. Star, Pete Morrison. Out of the ordinary rough western, pleased working class people. Excellent Saturday business. Morrison popular here. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. Draw middle and working class, city 23,000. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Greenville, South Carolina.

PAMPERED YOUTH. (6,640 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. A good picture for the highbrow trade but a real flop for the ordinary picture-goer. This old-fashioned costume stuff does not go over any more. Good tone. Yes for Sunday, no for special. Draw miners and railroad class, town 3,500. Admission 10-35. Giles Master, Strand Theatre (730 seats), Gallup, New Mexico.

RANGER OF THE BIG PINES. (7,023 feet). Just a fairly good program picture. Plenty of action but not much good story. Will get by with the average movie crowd, though. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw from industrial town 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis,

Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Warner Brothers

HOW BAXTER BUTTED IN. (7 reels). Star, Matt Moore. Good—with Matt Moore doing his part as never before. Laughs all the way through. Ran trailer and brought results. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

LIGHTHOUSE BY THE SEA. (6,700 feet). Star, Rin-Tin-Tin. An extra good dog picture; but it is different from the general run of dog pictures in that it is a sea-shore picture. It has lots of action; did a nice business and pleased my people. But still I personally do not like the dog: his actions are strained. You can see that someone tells him what to do next. He should be trained to do his stuff without looking towards the camera. Tone O. K. Good appeal. O. K. for Sunday, as special questioned. Draw all classes in small town, 2,500. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

LITTLE JOHNNY JONES. (6 reels). Star, Johnny Hines. A very good picture. Lots of laughter and thrills. Worth running if you don't pay too much. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

LOVER OF CAMILLE. (7,180 feet). Star, Monte Blue. I could not say much for this one; Monte Blue's acting good. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

THREE WOMEN. Star cast. Went over nicely, pleasing ninety per cent of my patrons. I haven't found a big Warner picture yet; but the average is good although they have not all been box office pictures. This one is better than their average and the box office receipts were a little better than the average. Tone O. K. Fair appeal. No as special. Draw all classes, small town, 2,500. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre, (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

Comedies

TIRE TROUBLE. (Pathe-Our Gang). Up to the "Gang" standard. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WEDDING SHOWERS. (Educational). As usual with Educational, very good comic. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WESTBOUND. (Universal-Gumps). This is the best of this series and should be a good send-off for the new series. Print good. Yes for Sunday. Good appeal. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

If you book your shows by guesswork when this dependable tip department is crammed every week with generously sent information that is yours for the using, you are like the fellow who wouldn't use a fountain pen because his grandad's quill pen was good enough for him.

If you're not sending tips—you still have a duty to perform for your brother exhibitors.

Book by tips—and send some!

WESTWARD WHOA. (Fox-Imperial). Stars, Monkeys. A burlesque on the "Covered Wagon." A very good one; lots of laughs which is, here, something unusual in a Fox comic. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvanla.

WHAT'S THE USE? (Universal-Gump). My first one of these and was well pleased. Many funny scenes in it and most everyone enjoyed it. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

Serials

FIGHTING RANGER. (Universal). This is a very good serial but not as good as "Riddle Rider" by any means. However, it will please your serial fans. I find that my serial fans want western serials and that ones of this type are best suited for that patronage. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. O. K. for Sunday. Draw from industrial center of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

RIDDLE RIDER. (Universal). Star, William Desmond. This is positively one of the best serials I ever had in my house and you can advertise this as big as you ever did any serial and it will back you up in your campaign. My people liked this one and it is one serial that really registered at the box office. It's fast action all the way through. Good tone. Appeal 85 per cent. O. K. for Sunday. Draw industrial center of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Short Subjects

AESOP'S FABLES. (Pathe-Terry cartoons). This is the best short subject that I've ever run in my house. It will build up your trade, especially with the kids; the grown ups will like them too. Draw railroad and farm class, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

PACEMAKERS. (F. B. O.) Stars, Vaughn-O'Hara. These are very good short subjects and if these popular stars have proved a good bet for you in the past with their other series they will live up to the record set, in this series. If you played the others you know what to expect as these are about the same. These subjects will mean more to any exhibitor than ordinary comedies. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Sunday yes. No as specials. Draw from industrial center of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Independents

DOUBLE FISTED. (Enterprise). Star, Jack Perrin. Pretty good western with fast action. Ran it on Saturday to fair crowd. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

DUPED. (Independent). Stars, Desmond, Holmes. This is a real good melodrama with lots of action. Print good. Good tone, fair appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

FIRE PATROL. (Chadwick). Stars, Anna Q. Nilsson, Madge Bellamy. Nearly everyone was very much disappointed in this one. Good acting but a disappointing picture. Tone O. K. Small appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

MIDNIGHT EXPRESS. (Columbia). (6 reels). Star cast. A good railroad picture, full of thrills. Title drew well. Good tone and appeal. No for Sunday or special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

PIONEERS OF THE WEST. (State Right). Star, Wm. Mix. This should clean up in transient trade houses—Indians, cowboys and everything! Paper good. Print new. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

SPEED SPOOK. (C. C. Burr). A pretty good comedy-drama. People seemed to enjoy it—why?—because it's hokum and is mostly laid outside, outdoor stuff. Draw mixed class, town 3,000. Admission 10-20. Chas. Martin, Family Theatre (300 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

STRANGE RIDER. (Arrow.) Star, Yakima Canutt. Just what you expect a western to be. Print new. O. K. Good appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, big city. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre, Baltimore, Maryland.

TRAVELLIN' FAST. (Progress). Star, Jack Perrin. Didn't get to see this one but reports not so good. Average attendance. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Harry Storin Stages Disaster Benefit For Sufferers in Mackinac Explosion

MOST newspaper readers are familiar with the details of the recent boiler explosion on the steamer Mackinac, off Newport, in which more than half a hundred were killed, mostly through scalds and burns. Most of the dead and injured were residents of Pawtucket, R. I., who were on an excursion to the Capital.

There is a motion picture angle to the happening, for Harry Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, was one of the first to kick in with an idea for the Red Cross benefit fund. At his suggestion, and largely through his efforts, the managers combined in a monster performance at the Leroy, the largest auditorium in town, and more than $5,000 were added to the fund from the performance of August 31. Two days later Storin, all in, came down to New York for a little rest up, and he look as though he needed it.

He explained that he had not even been able to go to dinner the day before the benefit because he was kept busy answering telephone calls from those who wanted to get tickets.

A Monster Turnaway

The entire house had been sold out long before, but there were hundreds who seemed to feel that he could fix them up, so they gave him a ring. It was one of the prettiest jobs of exploitation he has done, for he compressed a long campaign into a whirlwind rush that carried the town, already all sympathy with the project, off its feet. Some $50,000 were raised, and of this a tenth came through the joint benefit.

Every night two New England broadcasting stations put an appeal on the air, and one noon all of the talent in town gave an open air ballyhoo to sell tickets. There was a turnaway of several thousand.

The Governor was there with his staff, sitting in a box for which he had insisted upon paying, and the Mayor started off the show.

And it was a wonderful show, with a number of imported acts, and even those who sat in premium seats felt that they had been given their money's worth.

Got Approval

And while all of the theatres in town collaborated on the program and the effort, it was Storin who put it over, and to him goes a major share of the credit, or rather to the Leroy, for Storin works for the theatre he manages rather than for his personal publicity, and he has built up a wonderful goodwill for the house.

It is by no means his first stunt in this direction, but easily the biggest, for he tied to the most important news of the moment in a practical and profitable fashion, and put it over to the limit.

When the Leroy was built there were not wanting carpers who declared the house too large for the town. It was freely declared that the house would be a white elephant. But almost from the start he has made it a winner through constantly keeping it to the fore, and, though he has plenty of formidable opposition, it still is "the" theatre.

Storin is a deceptive sort of chap. To look at him you would not suppose him to be capable of running ten miles an hour under forced draft. But the busy old brain keeps on spinning under the falsely calm exterior, and he keeps the Leroy to the front. He isn't going to rest on his present laurels, either. He's going to hustle right through the winter. "Watch this space," for he is one of our most faithful reporters.

Henry Helped

Because the Ford car has an important role in Zander the Great, the Granada Theatre, Santa Barbara, let the local Ford agency take care of a lot of the exploitation for the Davies play.

The agency set out 2,000 letters to prospects, paraded a long string of cars, properly bannered, and gave an attractive prologue in which an assembly crew put a Ford together on the stage before each showing.

The crew established a record of getting all the parts together in one minute, seventeen seconds, which can be shot at by other service stations.

It was a regular cleanup at the Granada for Zander.

Ford Agents Help With The Tourist

Evidently The Tourist is going to bring in a fine lot of cooperation with Ford dealers, for the picture shows the car making the cross-country trip and is one of the few releases to suggest that the Ford is an automobile and not a cross between an angleworm and a flying machine.

Just as a sample of what you can get, look at this display made by one of the New York agents right on Broadway, when the picture played at the Rialto. This is a life size painting of Johnny Arthur working over the mechanical hero of the story, and it is backed by ten stills.

The company liked the attention it got and obtained permission to make the display in its uptown branch the following week.

Your local Ford man will be glad to come in with you on any exploitation on this picture.

Dolled Up

Louis Santikos, of the Palace Theatre, San Antonio, Texas, used an elaborate wedding tableau, employing between twenty and thirty dolls, for his lobby display on The Marriage Whirl. It got almost as much attention as a toy train, and it was not only the women and children who stopped to inspect the tableau.

An Educational Release

ONE OF THE FRUITS OF USING A FORD IN A COMEDY

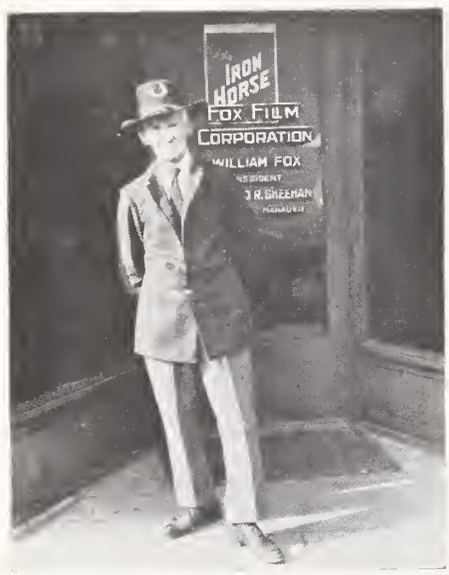
That is to say, using it respectfully. Get that last word. You can't guy the car and get dealer co-operation, but be nice and you can get a display like this on The Tourist. The Rialto did, and the company shifted the display for a second week.

Rubed Minneapolis for Lightning Run

Opening with Lightning for the Greater Movie Season, the Fox exchange cooperated with the Aster Theatre to put over the picture with proper prominence.

A very nicely decorated car was entered in the G. M. S. parade, the feature being the nice placement of the banner, which was fully advertised and yet was not hurtful to the general effect. This is due to the fact that the banner was shaped to the opening between the fenders instead of being the usual rectangle. It looked to be a part of the display instead of something added after the car had been decorated.

Another good stunt was the use of a street man, dressed as old Bill Jones of the play, who perambulated the streets for several days. He also appeared in the car during the parade, to visualize the character.



A Fox Release

If you can get an actual G. A. R. man to pose in your lobby, it will help, but don't parade him. Keep the suggestion dignified.

Getting hold of one of those fixed up Ford cars that tries to masquerade as a racer without deceiving anybody, Frank J. Miller sent it around town with a chauffeur in a red devil's dress to advertise the fact that The Lucky Devil was at the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

To harmonize with the feature photoplay, "The Fool," the prologue employed a female quartet and a male quartet, and was staged in a setting which represented, first, the exterior of a church, and, then, the interior. The eight singers who took part in this prologue were also used in an incident called "Southern Memories." These two offerings were the only presentations on the production stage, the remainder of the program being made up of a xylophone solo with the musician in his accustomed place in the orchestra, and the Mark Strand Topical Review.

The entire show ran 2 hours and 14 minutes, divided as follows: the feature photoplay, "The Fool," 1 hour and 46 minutes; Topical Review, 8 minutes; "Southern Memories," 12 minutes; xylophone solo, 3 minutes, and the prologue to the feature, 5 minutes.

"Southern Memories" opened each de luxe performance, being staged as follows: the stage setting consisted of a foliage back-drop with a wall in front of it running across the stage with a double gate in the center. Properties included 2 large magnolia trees 12 feet high, in blossom. A bench was placed at either side of the stage in front of the wall. Performers in this number with costumes of 1830. At opening the orchestra played a few bars of "Old Kentucky Home" as 2 southern belles came on outside the fence and entered through the center gates. These 2 girls, members of the ballet, then held the gates open while the Amphion Male Quartet and the Hemstreet Singers, female quartet, came on in single file, the women from one side and the men from the other. The female singers grouped themselves to one side of the stage while the men occupied the bench on the other side, and the 2 girls made their exit. "Heaven, Heaven," the negro spiritual, was then sung by the men, followed by a dance by the 2 girls to music of "Carolina in the Morning." Then came "Dry Yo' Eyes" by the female quartet. The presentation closed with the women singing "Dixie" and the men "Old Folks at Home" as a counter melody. Lights: light pink and light blue side spots picked out the branches of the magnolia trees and fell on the fence and wall. Light blue opened-box lamps from the side flooded the balance of the set. The front lights consisted of blue foots and borders, with 2 purple Mestrum floods on the musicians from the projection room. Two violet Mestrum floods covered the ceiling drapes and sides of the orchestra, being thrown from the booth.

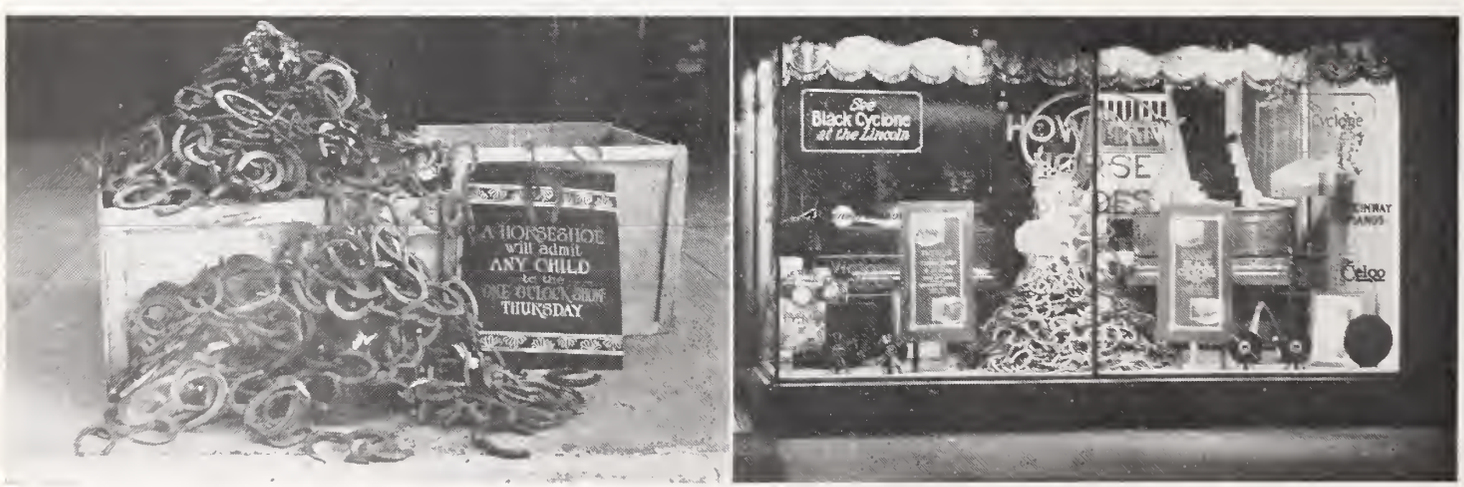
The xylophone solo, played by Harry Breuer, was "Russian Rag." The purple draw-curtains were closed over the small production stage, as the musician stood at his accustomed place in the orchestra. An amber spot thrown from the projection room was on Breuer, while the draw-curtains were lighted by 4 lemon arch spots.

After the Mark Strand Topical Review came the prologue to the feature. The scene used was a P. Dodd Ackerman painted scrim representing the exterior of a church. After a short orchestral prelude, this scrim, mounted on a traveler, was opened showing the interior of a church, with the 4 male singers and 4 female singers standing in a line well to the front. A scrim was closed across the stage, the whole presentation being lighted from behind this curtain. Blue overhead spots well on the singers as they took up the notes of Schubert's "Omnipotence." On the closing measures, a big stained-glass window in the center opened disclosing 2 angels kneeling. The balance of the set was lighted by 8 deep blue box lamps to give depth to the scene. On the last note of the song the title of the film was shown on the scrim, tying up the prologue directly with the feature picture.

Card Kisses

A red ink lip impression on a white card printed in blue with "Marie Prevost and Monte Blue in Kiss Me Again, Strand Theatre, Next Week" was what brought in the money to D. Roscoe Faunce, of the Strand Theatre, Birmingham, Ala.

Girls gave them out the previous Saturday afternoon, using 5,000 cards, the usual visiting card size.



A Pathe Release

CHARLES F. SHIRE, OF THE LINCOLN THEATRE, GETS AN EXTENSION ON HORSESHOES

After the usual horseshoe matinee, he displayed them in a window with phonograph record prizes for the most accurate estimates as to the number of shoes. This got the adults where the matinee won the youngsters. The shoes were good for admission tickets only at the one o'clock show the opening day. Four men and two women riders with an unmounted "Black Cyclone" were used for a bally.

A First National Release

AN ODD FRONT ON THE DESERT FLOWER FROM SAN ANTONIO

The Palace Theatre used cutout heads for the front of the marquise and ten cent sombreros for the sides. A semi cartoon style of painting got unusual attention for the announcement. Note Colleen behind the bars in approved Spanish fashion.

Two Contests to Sell The Beggar

Remembering the good the contest idea had done The Goose Hangs High, Lester L. Pollock, of the Kettler Theatre, West Palm Beach, used two contests for Beggar on Horseback. Both were tied to the newspaper for small prizes, and the number of replies received was very encouraging.

The first contest was too sell the title and offered $10 for the best explanation of the origin and meaning of the phrase. The second prize was $5 with six tickets for the third and a number of singles.

The replies were limited to 150 words and it did not hurt in the least that the first prize was won by a prominent minister.

The second contest was to emphasize the dream phase of the story and a similar set of prizes were offered for the most fantastic dreams. This permitted stress to be laid upon the fact that this play was largely a most fantastic dream, and it brought the spectators into the theatre ready for what they were to see. Being in the proper frame of mind, they enjoyed the play better than if they had spent half the time trying to figure it all out.

The cost was only $30 and it brought a very large return on that investment.

Gave Lucky Pennies on Lucky Horseshoe

One of the floats in the Minneapolis Greater Movie Season parade was devoted to the Fox releases presently to be shown at the Aster Theatre, this being additional to the float advertising Lightning, then showing.

To get additional attention, the Fox exchange tied up the thrift idea and threw out envelopes printed on one side with: "A lucky penny from Tom Mix. See him at his best in The Lucky Horseshoe, Aster Theatre, Playing Fox productions."

The reverse had: "This penny, with 99 more, will start a savings account with the Hennepin County Savings Bank, the oldest savings bank in Minnesota."

The bank supplied several thousand pennies and in addition shared the cost of the envelopes. The stunt would have been better had bright new coins been used.

Watch Out, Buddy!

Lawrence ("Buddy") Stuart, of the Fenway Theatre, Boston, is not the only manager with a talented house staff, though Buddy was the first to use his secretary and ushers in a jazz number.

For Night Life in New York, C. B. Stiff, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., obtained the services of a jazz band in return for the advertising he gave them. Sam Hammon, his assistant, did a dance, while Eunice McLean, of the office staff, sang a blues number without demanding more salary, and he got a pretty prologue free, for nothing.

And it helped to run business up to the top of the tube with the mercury in much the same position.

Pleased Quebec

Quebec tore loose on A Woman's Faith, a story dealing with that locality and with the climax coming at the shrine of Ste. Anne de Beaupre.

The picture was launched at a special showing in the ballroom of the Chateau Frontenac where there was a notable attendance of French society, and with special posters in French, the Universal-Jewel beat a lot of the seventeen reel super-special features.

Breaks a Record to Get a Record

Here is another nifty from Edgar Hart, of the Colonial Theatre, Portsmouth, N. H. It can be worked on almost any picture not too dignified to be sold with a smile. He worked it on Chickie.

He got a broken record from a phonograph store. Most phonograph stores have some breakage. He also borrowed a machine and one of those dancers working on the centre pin.

The cover was removed from the cabinet which was boxed in with compo board, a miniature proscenium being cut into the front so that the footlight line was about level with the turntable of the phonograph.

This opening was backed up with draperies and lighted with concealed lights, the effect being that of a dancer performing on a miniature stage; the stage being proportioned to the height of the doll.

A Broken Melody

Above the arch the pieces of broken record are tacked or glued to take the place of one word in the legend "Chickie has broken the record everywhere."

That's all there is to the idea, but there's enough to it to make people stop, look and think, for it takes them a moment to connect the broken record with the complete legend.

Now you can do it, too, and we hope it makes as much money for you as it drew for Edgar.

Use a repeating attachment, a loud needle and a jazz record.

Boy Racers

Small boys with home-made scooters and pushmobiles were used to advertise The Lucky Devil by the Rialto Theatre, Pueblo, Col., when E. P. Briggs obtained permission to rope off a side street near the business centre for an hour while he pulled a series of races for pass prizes.

More than a thousand persons gathered to enjoy the fun, and they had plenty of time to learn all about this racing story between heats. Now that school is in you will have to wait for a Saturday, but you are overlooking a bet if you don't get the kids to help you exploit.

An Odd Style Cut Catches the Eye

This cut on The Wife of the Centaur is not exactly an artistic gem, but it's a darned good advertising cut, and that is of greater importance. It catches the eye with the silhouette, but someone showed unusually good judgment in setting the line above in spaced capitals to connect with the cave man picture.

AN EYE-CATCHER

This necessitated an extra line, but it was worth the investment, for spaced, the capitals are much more readable than when set close, and it does not much matter which gets you first, the line or the cut. The effect is the same either way. The middle section is just ordinary, rather too light and complicated to fight its way through the black ground, but it doesn't matter much. It merely leads from the cave man idea to the modern theme, and the chances are that the sale was consummated before the reader came to that portion of the space. The bank of type is merely a clincher rather than a seller. There is too much of it to make for a quick sale, but it does not hurt any and it may help. We think that most of the selling is done on the combination of the top cut and the top line. Paneling in the smaller features seems to be something new for Baltimore, and yet small features can be made a distinct sales asset. Eddie Hyman sells more tickets to the Brooklyn Mark Strand on his general program than he does on the feature, and he plays the program in full. Some towns seem to be ashamed to confess that they have anything other than the long feature. Baltimore generally adds the small titles if they have the space, but none of the houses is much given to a play up. Probably this paneling was done only because the shape of the cut lent itself to the layout, yet we think that the Century would find it profitable to continue the idea.

Got a Half

Ann McCurdy, Universalist, wasted a double truck idea on a half page co-op when she landed some merchants on "I'll Show You the Town" at the Merrill.

The idea was to count the number of times the words of the title appeared in the advertisements, but they had to be the exact words. For example, "I will" was not accepted as "I'll." The words had to be ringed and brought in to the newspaper for verification.

The ads were written to bring in these words.

use the cartoon cuts supplied as accessories, but we have selected for reproduction the display of the Lyric Theatre, Lincoln, Neb., because it not only shows effective use of the cut, but it carries out the best principles of advertising in that every program item is announced on the principle that something may appeal in addition to the feature. It does not always hold good that a comedy should be advertised with a cartoon, but in a majority of instances the cartoon is the best style of cut, particularly where the cartoon really is clever. This particular cut has served so well that at least one manager had it enlarged, in color, for the centerpiece of his lobby on Introduce Me. In selling a comedy the main idea is to sell laughs, and if you can offer a laugh in the cut the suggestion is a factor for good. You are certain to get the idea of humor from this cartoon, and the picture will back up the sketch. Press books that supply this type of material are real aids.

Doubles His Space For Bronson Play

Frank H. Burns took about double his usual space for the Beacham Theatre, Orlando, Fla., for Are Parents People, figuring that the star of Peter Pan should pull them in again. He uses a larger plan book cut than he generally affects, because it tells the story, and takes a four column space for a three column cut, knowing that the extra width is what gives real value to the cut. It drops ten inches. He does not especially stress Miss Bronson, and makes no mention of Peter Pan, but spends most of his words selling the idea that this is an unusually entertaining play. The copy reads: "No question about this one—it's the laughing hit of the year. A delicious comedy of marriage and divorce produced with a perfect cast." He does not go into the details. The "Paris" and "Reno" tags on the suitcases tell that. He builds up on the situation. This carries more ink than the usual Burns display, but he probably figured that the cut was too good not to be used. We are inclined to agree. When you can put the bulk of the story into a single cut, that cut is worth while, and that is what M. A. Bottsford has done in this sketch. Most Paramount plan book cuts are useful, but this is better than usual.

fall season, Loew's Palace Theatre, Washington, D. C., comes back to its former space with a very excellent layout for this Follies story. As usual, the type valuations give big display in what many managers would regard as a small space; a little more than five inches across three, or 75 lines. The girls' heads and the dancing figure belong to, and form the story. They also form a strong attractor, but without cuts this nice type display would sell, for the heavy lines are held so that they do not interfere, though we would like to see what upper and lower would do for the player names. It is not improbable that the paper did not have a display font in this size other than the gothic, for the city newspapers are not so well provided with good small display faces as are the smaller offices where job work is an important side line. There is one thing you almost always get from these Washington ads. The cut surface is just about what will pay. An excess of cut is not used just because there is a large cut handy. They seem to know just when a cut becomes an expensive luxury and usually they stop short of the border. These cuts sell Pretty Ladies. Twice as much cut might not sell as well.

Suggestive Cut Help to Raffles

This is a plan book cut on Raffles, run by the Strand Theatre, Crawfordsville, Ind., as a three nines. The cut is particularly clever in its suggestion of the characters stepping out of the novel, the two safes being shown as partly in and partly out of the book. We do not particularly care for that "Guard your valuables" which starts off the sales talk, but this is better, perhaps, in a small town, and it does not undo the effect of what follows. Raffles is more than half sold in advance. All that is needed is a tie in to the well-known character, and this has been nicely done. However that "guard your valuables" should have been held for sensational dodgers and that sort of thing.

Revival Week is Good Summer Idea

Picking its revivals from the United Artists, the Valentine Theatre, Toledo, got four real sellers at one booking and probably paid less for them than it would lay out on a program feature. With four such titles practically no selling was necessary, and the layout as shown was about as good as could be devised on this set. Revival week is only good for a now and then, but in a city the size of Toledo there should be many who would wish to see any one of these again, and business should have been over the average. It is a good idea well sold.

Figuring that the cuts should do some of the selling, the Garden Theatre, Baltimore, uses only one sales line: "Gold and her beauty were the lures that drove men mad." The gold is on the left and the beauty on the right. That probably is Curwood under the drip from the icicles, with his name just below, for the Garden knows that the Curwood name is as good a selling proposition as a favored acting star. This is virtually a three fives, and good use has been made of the space. As much cut might not be advisable in the case of a society drama, but picture will sell melodrama often better.

Most managers would have played up the Griffith name above that of the play, but the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago, figured that the sawdust flavor would be worth the play-up this time of year and that the producer would get over in a slightly lighter line. With Griffith swinging back to his earlier style and with the always salable circus idea, this should be worth extra space to most managers.

COLOR DEMONSTRATION AT EASTMAN THEATRE

AN interesting communication was received this week relative to an unusual presentation which we believe worthy of a special space in this department.

The possibilities that lie in the development of dynamic color were demonstrated at the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., during the week, which took the form of a four minute presentation which was programmed "Flowing Color Harmonies." The demonstration was a resume and interpretation of the results so far achieved in color experimentation by the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company. The adaptation of this demonstration to an entertainment plane was based on the beliefs of various authorities who contend that the day is not remotely distant when color compositions will enthrall through the eye just as the works of the master musicians now appeal to the ear. Not only by way of embellishment or accompaniment of other arts, but as an independent means of artistic or emotional expresssion will these color sequences have their place in the entertainment and cultural fields.

The presentation was given a musi-

tion just as auditors at a symphony concert, provided they have no printed analytical guide, may read varying meanings into the work of a musical composer. Music appeals to the ear and a well ordered succession of sounds will influence the ear. Color appeals to the eye and a well ordered successsion of colors should exercise a similar influence.

The color presentation was arranged by Lloyd A. Jones, physicist in the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company, assisted by Clifton Tuttle, of the same department, who collaborated with Lewis M. Townsend, chief projectionist of the Eastman Theatre.

Mr. Jones, in discussing the use of color in the embellishment of the motion picture program, said that "in the leading theatres the programs including ballet, organ, orchestral and vocal numbers, it is noticeable that the use of colored lighting effects in conjunction with these numbers has already been developed to quite an extent. There seems to be little doubt that an artistically arranged and carefully executed color accompaniment is very satisfying and materially enhances the enjoyment of other visual and auditory sensations.

"The successful use of such color effects as an accompaniment to the orchestral, vocal and ballet numbers, or even by themselves as a prelude to the feature picture, at once suggests a form of art which has frequently been designated as "Color Music," but for which the term "Dynamic Color" or "Mobile Color" is more appropriate.

"I do not believe that the future development of the art lies in attempting to harness it to music. There have been many efforts within relatively recent times to develop an art of Dynamic Color. In many cases this effort has not been well directed and attempts have been made to establish a specific connection between music and the art of Dynamic Color. There is little doubt that such effort is vain, and we feel that if an art of Dynamic Color is to be developed it must stand on its own merits as a means of artistic or emotional expression and entirely independent of the art of music."

TIVOLI THEATRE ALTERATIONS

THE Tivoli Theatre, Chicago, is celebrating its fifth anniversary with Musical Director Nathaniel Finston and Solo Organist Jesse Crawford as guests in the same capacity as when the house was originally opened.

B AND K NEW PROGRAM POLICY

SWINGING entire organizations around a circle of three large theatres has been instituted by Balaban and Katz as a business stimulator for the Chicago, Tivoli and Uptown Theatres. The innovation can be properly worked in this particular instance as the various theatre organizations are efficiently constituted and the units are well organized. This new plan forms three separate producing units which work under the supervision of the General Production Department, with each unit creating a new show every three weeks. The entire personnel of each theatre moves to another, including the Musical Conductor, Solo Organist, Electricians, Stage Productions and Pictures. The main office of the operating firm have announced in full page advertisements in the dailys that this progressive step means to the patron that "it will inspire a spirit of competition in our own organization and result directly in fuller, better, snappier and more ambitious productions, in greater originality and more thoroughly satisfying entertainment."

WHO'S WHO IN PRESENTATIONS

WE have received several requests from various sources to conduct a series of brief biographical sketches of the producers, musical directors, ballet masters, artists, and others who make up the recognized personnel of the presentation field. Encouraged by material and photographs we have received to date we feel that such a series can be conducted successfully at this time. To those producers and associate members of production staffs, no matter what part of the world you are operating in, we want to hear from you and introduce you to our great family we meet each week through the medium of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD. We would appreciate a personal photograph to accompany the brief sketch. A few lines telling of your experience in the general show business, music or art work, plus data of what you are doing now, will give the information needed.

Detailed information relative to the production of the presentation suggested are printed herewith. Permission is given to any producer or exhibitor to use the Colby Harriman suggestions appearing in this section. Any other information desired to stage the presentation may be secured upon request.

"ECHOES FROM THE SEA"
A "Moving Picture World" Presentation
Devised By COLBY HARRIMAN

THE sea, its tales of adventure and romance, its picturesque characters, mythical and mortal, usually meet with favorable response from audiences. This subject lends itself to a variety of treatments, all of which are basically simple to devise and produce.

There is a wealth of material awaiting the producer which is particularly applicable to this subject. Virile songs, romantic ballads, spirited dance motifs, and a myriad of stories suitable for pantomimic adaptation.

In devising the presentation suggestion for the week, it was our idea that this subject could be made to reflect many novelties and also introduce some attractive scenic effects. If a producer does not care to use the suggestion in its entirety, any of the three parts will form a suitable background for a number.

THE ROUTINE

The curtains open on a dark stage. A blue flood is slowly brought up, and at the same time, water wave effects are cut in giving the appearance of a tank of water. The scrim should be toned upwards to a blue green. Some dancers, clad in green diaphanous costumes emerge from a blanket of sea weed which covers them as they lie prone at various parts of the platform. A dark green tone, blended with a blue, is thrown in from the sides down in one, masked to highlight the dancers, attention being given that no spill-light falls on the drop or scrim. The dancers render a number on the platform, which is given a series of irregular elevations to give the effect of dancers "riding the waves." Towards the finale of the dance selection, the lights changed to emphasize the outlines of the ships painted upon the scrim hung in one back of the platform. A very good effect can be secured by painting the design with radium paints. Colored paints can be used. Following the dance a song can be introduced, and as the draw curtains, used to back the scrim, are operated, the lights back stage are brought up and the singer is revealed, on the halyard of a ship. The mast and rigging can be silhouetted. The setting may revert to its original treatment, if desired, and the action end with a spirit ballet number with the painted scrim as a background.

The general construction and production data follows:

1. DESIGN FOR PAINTED SCRIM

The design done in radium paints of various colors will prove effective. It is suggested that a line drawing be used as this will prove more effective with this particular paint treatment.

The Prologue to "The Phantom of The Opera"

Opened Astor Theatre, New York City, September 6th

A SPECIAL prologue has been arranged by Universal to precede the showing of this much-heralded picture. It consists of a ballet conceived and produced by Albertina Rasch, with a phantom effect by Thurston, who is programmed "The Great Magician." The setting, designed and executed by Robert Law, is extremely simple, and consists of four large fabric columns, two on either side of the stage, basically toned in gray, and mounted on a high boxed base. The columns are jointed to the top of base at a circular cap. The bases are painted gray. Up stage a painted wood drop is hung, the drop is cut in the center with an elliptical top, leaving an opening of about eight feet, which is backed with a black drop. The painted drop carries a very formal tree trunk and foliage design, which with gray-brown trunks and green cropped branches highlighted with white form the balance of the scenic investure. This drop is hung in folds which atones for its severity, as the folds lend a certain thickness to the tree trunks. The fifteen members of the ballet are dressed in white ballet costumes, the skirts tinted an orchid. They present a most attractive routine and too much could not be said in praise of the sincerity which each dancer manifests in her work. The Ensemble work is particularly effective. The set is toned amber and rose from four footlight spots equally distributed, with green and amber being thrown in from spots on the sides, highlighting the performing area, and also toning sections of the fabric columns. Blue borders and foots with a canary mixture are used at the opening. At the conclusion of the dance routine the girls engage in a bit of pantomime suggestive of the approach of "The Phantom." They leave the stage in confused formation, with accompanying shrieks of fright; the lights are gradually dimmed to a blackout; the black curtains up center are drawn, revealing the form of a man highlighted with blue green; the man appears to be dressed in a radium-treated costume, standing on a black dais. He gives the appearance of being suspended in the air. He engages in a few weird movements with his arms as the lights dim out and the opening titles of the picture are flashed on the screen, which is revealed following the close-in. There was really nothing unusual about this Phantom effect and we were disappointed with the results, as the illusion was not sufficient to even secure a hand. Interest built up by the ballet formed an excellent basis for a terrific climax and we were disappointed that with all of the knowledge Thurston has of conjuring, he should overlook the opportunity of producing the illusion of a phantom which would be more convincing. We know of two illusions in particular which are most baffling in their appearance, and are real thrillers when introduced, and it is surprising that Thurston did not avail himself of one or the other of these tricks. The routine of the prologue is a very good one to copy by other houses who will play "The Phantom." Particular attention should be given to the musical score by Eugene Conte, which was very interpretative of the picture and did much in instituting the proper emotional background.

Capitol Grand Orchestra, with David Mendoza conducting, presents "Espana," by Chabrier, as the overture feature. Pietro Capodiferro, first cornet of the orchestra, renders Gounod's "Ave Maria" in the Divertissement group. An overture scenic by Robert C. Bruce reveals some pretty shots of "Montana Clouds." A Ko-Ko Song Car-Tune of "My Bonnie" resulted in enthusiastic community singing.

(a) Gladys Rice

This popular singer renders "Li'l Black Rose," by David Guion, in a character costume, with an appropriate scenic background. A painted drop is hung back, depicting a typical southern landscape with blooming cotton fields and surrounding foliage. A cut drop is hung in one, with a sweeping foliage border extending to left and adjoining a leg which is painted to represent foliage. The end of a cabin is also seen. The end of a three-rail fence is visible at right, with end post placed right center. The singer is seated at center beside an old-fashioned cradle. A purple and magenta from the sides highlight the drop; amber and light blue are thrown in from one to highlight the singer at center. The sky area of the back drop is tinted rose, which accentuates the painted clouds. A water rippler is operated on a stretch at left center of the drop.

(b) Mme. Gambarelli

The Prima Ballerina renders "Mignonette," by Friml, in an excellent setting. A black drop with a large circular opening is hung in two. Two transparent curtains toned maroon are caught in a large sweeping fold in front of the drop, the folds clearing the circular opening. Back of the drop two fabric columns are suggested, appearing to be silver metallic cloth cut in a cluster and hung right and left of the opening, dividing the opening into three sections. The dancer appears in the center section on a platform level with the bottom edge of the opening. Two steps are placed in front of the drop leading from the platform to the stage. A blue tab drop is hung back of the opening. Green and magenta from the sides tone the column. A magenta flood on the transparencies in front of the drop and the dancer works in a pink spot.

Gladys Rice and Douglas Stanbury sing the well-known duet by Trotere. Setting is one which was used during a previous rendition of a "Carmen" selection, but proves to be a satisfactory background. A painted drop representing a Spanish street with stone buildings, and supporting spans with an areaway at center through which a green toned sky is visible. The singers in costume appear at center. Blue and red mixed to secure a rich purple form the basic lighting treatment on the drop. An amber light is used back of the window which is cut right center of the drop.

This number proved the most enjoyable of the entire program and received the greatest amount of applause. Mme. Gambarelli, Doris Niles and the Capitol Ballet Corps render the following numbers of the Tschaikovsky composition:

(a) "Valse des Fleurs"
Mlle. Gambarelli and Capitol Ballet Corps
(b) "Dance Chinoise"
Miss Niles
(c) "Danse Dusse-Trepak"
Capitol Ballet Corps

Note: Tschaikovsky's "Nutcracker Suite" was first produced in St. Petersburg in March, 1892, and was received with enthusiasm. In December of the same year it was performed at the Opera House in the presence of the Emperor and the Court. The Suite charmingly displays a subdued and whimsical humor, and is the composer's "chef d'oevre" as regards charm and novelty of instrumentation. It conveys an interesting lesson; that musical ideas which have no pretentions to sublimity may be made exceedingly fascinating by means of brilliant orchestration and piquant accessories.

The first scene consisted of three green transparent arched drops hung in one, two and three, the arched openings receding in dimension towards the back. A blue sky drop to back. A large urn with a massive floral piece was placed up center. The set was flooded with green, a deep blue on the back drop and the red foots brought in to about half to tone the foreground. The girls were dressed in various colored dia-

2. DESIGN FOR SET PIECE

The set piece, detailed later, should be placed back of the circular opening to give a silhouette effect. The balance of the design which includes the sky, sea and ship, can be painted on a back drop.

3. CONSTRUCTION DETAILS

The GROUND PLAN as shown in Fig. 1 consists of Scrim hung down at the curtain line, battened at the bottom and screwed to the floor. Make this taut. A Platform (detailed later) extends across the entire stage in one. A Painted Scrim with Sailing Ship motif is hung back of the platform. A set of black Draw Curtains are hung on a track back of the painted scrim. Back of the draw curtains a Drop with a circular opening is hung. The Mast Set Piece is placed center back of this drop, and a Painted Drop (Sky and Water) is hung back to complete the set.

PLATFORM UNITS

Figure II. gives a side view of the platform which occupies the entire stage space in one. The various angled tops of the platform can be constructed of various length platforms and adjusted to the parallels with extra braces. The inclines should not be too steep, but set on elevations that permit a graceful movement of the dancers as they work over the surface of the platform. The top should be painted black and the body draped with black material. A light material can be used on the front and sides providing a water effect is focused on same.

MAST SET PIECE

Figure III. gives a detailed description of the set-up for the mast which is placed back of the drop with the circular opening. The mast can be constructed out of battens, or a section of a real mast can be used. This is not necessary, however, as the set piece should be in silhouette. The constructed mast should be set into a mounting box, this fastened to the floor, and four braces attached to the mast and screwed to the floor will firmly anchor the mast. At the top of the mast, an eye-bolt should be fastened to which two cables can be attached, one cable to have a center purchase, and the other being fastened at a point at right. The circle marked "opening," is a designation of the part of the set piece visible to the audience through the circular opening in the drop. A small platform, or "crow's nest," should be attached to the mast, and strong enough to support one person. The various units of "ships rigging" can be attached, especially the halyards. The singer can be discovered on one of these units and gradually ascend to the platform attached to the mast.

SCENIC TREATMENT

A dark blue scrim at the curtain line. The scrim hung in one upon which a "seascape" can be painted with various colored radium paints. The space within the "moon" disc can be treated with yellow. Black plush draw curtains hung back of the painted scrim to lend the needed opaqueness and body. The drop with the circular opening cut in the center should be painted black. The mast, etc., comprising the set-piece painted a deep blue or black with the edges highlighted with gray. The back drop painted with a green-blue sea studded with "whitecaps," a deep blue sky, and a mellow toned moon which can be painted on the drop, and a light back of the drop flooding it. The balance of the back of the drop can be opaqued to prevent light leakage. The ship on the horizon can also be painted on the drop.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

Open with dark stage, gradually bring up blue foots to half, then introduce green and blue borders. As the action begins, bring up green and blue spots from off stage in one to cover the dancers on platform. Towards finale of dance number, bring up lamps toning the radium effects on the painted scrim, as the blue foots and the green blue border is dimmed down. When the scene is ready for change, dim the effect lamps, and slowly bring up lights back of the circular opening and drop. Use orange amber to tone the set piece from the sides with green and blues plus a medium mixture of red to give a greenish-purple haze on the backdrop. Water wave effects should be used down in one on either side of the platform, set to cover the dancers during their number. A water wave effect can be used on the back drop, and a cloud effect shot through a medium with the lower part amber and the upper part blue can be used to advantage. Canary or light amber flood back of the drop to tone the moon spot. The mast should be in semi-silhouette.

phanous costumes with silver belts, and Gambarelli entered dressed in white with the costume trimmed in silver. Amber was used from the sides to highlight the dancing area. The second scene consisted of a black plush cyc with a narrow red panel bearing an oriental design of gold. The panel was hung over the plush at center. Eight Japanese lanterns were hung in irregular formation in front of the black plush, four lanterns being on either side of the panel. Miss Niles was dressed in a colorful Chinese costume of a rich gold brocaded jacket and green trousers. She was highlighted red and green from the sides; green foots were used to tone the foreground. The third number consisted of a black plush cyc hung back. The dancers appeared in colorful Russian costumes and worked in an area which was flooded amber and canary from the sides, with a mixture of red and blues from the foots and borders to tone the dancing area.

Music

The overture, played by the Colony Melody Masters, with E. Chas. Eggett conducting, is programmed "Pucciniana," being a well arranged composition embracing some of the well-known selections from Puccini's operas. Dr. Edw. Kilenyi has arranged an excellent score for the featured picture, with particular attention given to the musical accompaniment for the short features. John Priest at the console.

Memphis Five

This group of syncopation artists is one of the best orchestras of its kind which has appeared recently at this theatre, and goes to prove that the number of pieces does not mean as much in a jazz orchestra as quality musicians. The five musicians are grouped at center; grand piano is placed center, with four musicians seated in front of it. The setting is very colorful, consisting of the light gold fabrics hung as a background, which are flooded magenta from the sides and tipped with blue borders. A cluster of bridge spots with purple, light blue, magenta and green are focused on the upper portions of the drop at center. Black border and returns are hung down to mask and at the base of the returns an hemispherical cut-out is placed, extending on stage about four feet from the return. This is covered with black plush. Red and blue foots in a warm blend are used to tone the foreground. Light blue flood is used on the band.

Butterfly Ballet

This number, produced by Meyer Golden, appears regaled in typical vaudeville vestments. The setting is supposed to represent a flower garden. Two cut drops painted with large flower designs in vivid colors, the edges cut out, forming an arched opening, are hung in one and two. A blue sky drop is hung back. Up center is a large fan-shaped flower set piece, in front of which are two steps covered with a colorful fabric. Box-shaped floral set pieces are placed right and left of the steps at center and used to mask and dress the area up stage. Set sunflowers and hollyhocks are distributed up stage in alignment. The dancers appear in a series of ballet numbers, first garbed in costume with butterfly wings attached to rods which they wave in rhythmic temp. Four girls dressed in suggested white rabbit costumes do a number and two solo dancers furnish the regular terpsichorean routine. Blue and red in the foreground tone the cut drop in one, magenta from the sides highlights the cut drop in two and amber and magenta highlight balance of the set.

"The Phantom of the Opera"

Chaney Triumphs Again in Production That Is Masterpiece of Spookiness and Sustained Suspense

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Universal's long-heralded super-production, "The Phantom of the Opera," has now reached the public. Based on a novel by the French author, Gaston Leroux, the story was suggested by the fact that the celebrated Grand Opera House in Paris is built over a maze of cellars, sub-cellars, passageways and canals used in generations past as dungeons and torture chambers.

Seizing upon the striking contrast of the gayety and revelry of the opera and the dark and mysterious chambers beneath, Leroux has woven a fantastic story, having for its main character a mysterious person known as The Phantom of the Opera, an insane musician and magician who wore a mask to hide his terrible ugliness and by mysterious means made a young singer famous and then sought to impose his love on her as a reward.

The keynote of this picture lies in the element of mystery, spookiness, ghostliness and atmosphere of the unknown and unreal. In fact, apparently having in mind the success of plays like "The Bat," "The Cat and the Canary" and "The Gorilla," which cater to similar emotions, Universal has gone them all one better and with the aid of the greater resources of the screen has produced a picture that is undoubtedly a masterpiece of its type.

Very early in the picture the spookiness of the story is established and except for momentary touches of comedy relief, never is this element lost sight of. Due apparently to too close cutting the continuity is choppy at times, but the story thrills and intrigues, holds the interest so taut and the emotions so tense that it keeps you at the edge of your seat throughout. We consider it the finest example of sustained tension and suspense we have ever seen.

The story has been produced on a stupendous scale. Among the sets are those representing the interior of the famed Opera House, possibly the most elaborate in the world, and they are said to be authentic in every detail. This effect has also been enhanced by presenting many of the scenes in natural color. The most striking color effect, however, is where The Phantom in flaming red and wearing a death's head mask, with his cloak outstretched like bat wings, climbs on a statue on the roof and listens to the conversation of the lovers below.

Obviously the title role was one for Lon Chaney and he gives a superb performance. Here was another chance to distinguish himself as an unrivaled artist in character make-up and he has done just that. He has made his appearance ugly to the point of repulsiveness, but rather more hideous and grotesque than horrible. To many it will probably not be considered as revolting as in "The Hunchback of Notre Dame."

Several points of similarity invite comparison between these productions. Mr. Chaney's role in "The Phantom" is almost entirely without the element of sympathy in "The Hunchback," nor does he have as much opportunity for facial expression. His role here is more dominating. It sweeps everything before it by its force and when the climax comes you are more concerned in seeing this monster obliterated than in the rescue of the girl who is in his clutches.

Mary Philbin is attractive and appealing as the girl and Norman Kerry, playing opposite, is a handsome lover. Arthur Edmund Carewe is excellent as the detective, and a number of minor roles are admirably handled.

Differing so greatly from the usual production, its public reaction is difficult to gauge. It will depend on whether the picture spectator will respond like the stage audience to this type. All of us have experienced the tremendous hold of a ghost story, and while this one is not really ghostly it arouses to a tremendous pitch the same emotions and holds them there. We believe that the public will be thrilled and intrigued by "The Phantom of the Opera" and uncannily fascinated.

Length, 8,464 feet.

Story

Christine, a young singer in the Paris Grand Opera, is loved by Raoul DeChagny. The employes are terrified by stories of a weird phantom who is supposed to inhabit the subcellars under the opera house. Guided by a strange and commanding voice that she hears from the walls, Christine finally achieves success as a singer. Then the mysterious voice summons her and she finds its owner is a huge man wearing a mask. He takes her to his hiding place and demands her love in payment. Tearing off his mask she finds him a horrible and grotesque monster. Due to her pleading he allows her to sing once more and, breaking her promise, she manages to communicate with Raoul, who plans to save her. The monster, who is the Phantom, learns of the plan and again kidnaps her. Raoul, aided by Ledoux of the secret police, seeks to rescue her, but they are trapped in fiendish ways by the Phantom, who has been identified as an insane musician and magician. The Phantom finally captures them but the brother of Buquet who was murdered by the Phantom leads a mob to the hiding place. The Phantom escapes to the street with Christine and gets in a carriage which overturns. Raoul rescues Christine and the mob finally captures the Phantom, beats him to death and hurls him into the River Seine. Raoul finds happiness with Christine.

"The Dark Angel"

Vilma Banky, New Goldwyn Star, a Real "Find" in Excellent First National Picture

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Unless all signs fail, a new star appears in the motion picture firmament in the person of Vilma Banky, feminine lead in First National's "The Dark Angel," produced by Samuel Goldwyn and directed by George Fitzmaurice. This blonde beauty, brought from the other side of the ocean by Goldwyn, scores astonishingly in a highly emotional role. She is dramatic in the climaxes and yet so simple and natural as to suggest absolute realism. And she is marvelously beautiful to look upon, whether dressed for boudoir, dinner or street.

Except for a few minor slips, this picture ranks high among dramatic offerings. The story is exceptionally well-knit, with a novel as well as striking denouement. Colman and Miss Banky are nearly letter-perfect in their roles, and the action is generally smooth. The slips are too much footage in the early scenes of a lovers' parting, some slight difficulty that Colman has with his eyes in acting the blind man, and a bit of inexcusably risque comedy.

The story deals with war days but particularizes on the results of the war in England rather than at the front. The few battle scenes are picturesque and vividly realistic. The plot centers around the blinding of an officer and his subsequent determination to avoid his sweetheart rather than allow her to nurse him for life. When she at last finds him, he poses as in full possession of his sight and simply not desirous of marriage.

There is a real kick in the ending where Colman as the officer fakes possession of his sight and greets his fiancee coolly. All the drama in the world is compressed into those few scenes and Colman and Miss Banky perform extraordinarily well. The events leading up to this denouement are deftly handled by Director Fitzmaurice. He often resorts to the device of frustration by having his characters barely miss meeting, and uses it better than most directors succeed in doing.

"The Dark Angel" strikes a real human note. Highly emotional, it nevertheless is not extravagant. And it introduces one who, with very ordinary good luck, will become a really big star of the screen.

"The Golden Princess"

Betty Bronson's First Real Starring Part Is a Bret Harte Western Story of Days of '49

Reviewed by Epes W. Sargent

Although the leading player in most of the stories in which she has appeared since "Peter Pan," Betty Bronson gets her first "in" instead of "with" in "The Golden Princess," done from a Bret Harte story.

Bret Harte discovered that atmosphere could, in some measure, replace plot, long before Col. Selig and George Spoor, and this story is no exception. The plot is thin, not always as intense as it tries to be, and yet careful production and the setting in the west gives real scenic value, while the scenarist has worked hard for comedy relief, mostly entrusted to Edgar Kennedy. Exceptional care has been exercised in the selection of locations, and there is an interesting built-up set showing the San Francisco of the early days. These all serve to make acceptable a pleasantly told story.

Miss Bronson has not yet learned that pantomime is not so much the generous use of facial expression as the poignant meaning of the fewer expressions used. In the midsection of the story she overworks her face at times, detracting from the interest she has already created because the character then becomes unreal. She also seems to suffer from over-direction in places where her facial and body movements seem too studiously planned. Her Betty will not take place alongside "Not So Long Ago." She is overanxious.

Neil Hamilton is a likable youngster as Tennessee, and Rockliffe Fellowes as excellently bad as a villain can be. Phyllis Haver in her early scenes is capital, but the assumption of middle age is too much a matter of grease paint; chiefly four carefully penciled wrinkles on her brow. In spite of the makeup she holds interest. The two children are charming. "The Golden Princess" does not rise above the average of the program picture of the better sort.

Story

Bringing his family to California in the days of the gold rush, William Kent is too busy in his fruitless efforts to pan gold to guard his pretty young wife against the advances of Tom Romaine. She goes with Tom, taking her little daughter. A broken buggy wheel delays the pair and enables Kent to overtake them. He is shot by Romaine, who carries off the wife, who has fainted. "Tennessee" Hunter, a lad who has been befriended by Kent, takes the child to a priest to be cared for. When the priest dies Betty comes to Tennessee, the only one she knows, and he and his partner abandon their shack in her favor. A strike causes the invasion of the district and brings Romaine, who learns Betty's story and plans to palm himself off as the long-lost father. He enlists Kate to aid his deception, but Tennessee recognizes them both. Kate, learning of her husband's murder, shoots Romaine and is herself killed without being made known to her daughter. Tennessee's love supplies the happy ending.

"The Coming of Amos"

With Rod La Rocque as Star, Prod. Dist. Corp. Offers Entertaining Film Based on Locke Novel

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As a second production presented by Cecil B. DeMille through that organization, Producers Distributing Corporation is offering Rod La Rocque in "The Coming of Amos," adapted from a novel by William J. Locke and directed by Paul Sloane.

The story concerns a wealthy but uncouth young Australian who visits the Riviera in France, falls in love with an exiled Russian princess and finally after exciting adventure rescues her from a polished villain who has forced her into a loveless marriage.

The picture starts off as a straight comedy drama. It is entertaining and contains much that is amusing. The work of the title writer adds considerably to this with a number of witty epigrams. In the latter portion there is injected a melodramatic thrill of the type found in serials, where the heroine is placed by the villain in a subterranean chamber that is flooded with water, which eventually proves to be the deathplace of the villain.

A novel element in this picture is the use of the Australian boomerang by Rod La Rocque. In one scene he hurls these "comeback" weapons with such skill that they circle behind a castle parapet and fell the henchmen who are holding La Rocque at bay.

Rod La Rocque gives a good performance and Jetta Goudal is excellent as the Russian princess, besides being a fine type. The best acting in the picture, however, is contributed by Noah Beery, as the sinister, polished villain.

"The Coming of Amos" should provide pleasing entertainment for the majority of picture patrons.

Story

Amos owns a big sheep ranch in Australia. In accordance with his dead mother's wish that he see something of the world he goes to visit his uncle David a swell artist on the Riviera in France. His uncouthness and originality first amuses Nadia an exiled Russian princess but soon they are desperately in love. Ramon Garcia, a polished villain appears nad warns her of the fate of her former admirers. She discloses to Amos that Garcia is her husband having tricked her into a marriage. During a carnival Garcia kidnaps Nadia and takes her to his castle and to force her to do his bidding places her in a dungeon which he fills with water. Amos follows and by means of his boomerangs he felis the henchman and fights Garcia who finally falls through his own trap door into the dungeon and is drowned. Amos' friends find him witn Nadia in his arms.

"The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted"

Irene Rich and Huntly Gordon in Warner Picture of Romance and Intrigue

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted" is an unreal but distinctly dramatic Warner Brothers picture. The story is of a district attorney who, on the eve of election, decides to prosecute his son for killing a woman with his auto, though his wife tries to dissuade him. She, to foil him, consents to a scandal to prevent her husband's re-election.

Irene Rich is the outstanding figure in the film. She occupies the center of the stage most of the time and her skilful emotional acting almost makes one forget the unreality of the story. Huntly Gordon is a sincere figure as the district attorney, and John Harron and June Marlowe present a charming youthful romance, with Harron later called on for dramatic work when jailed. Gertrude Astor and Elinor Fair have small parts. The acting is very good.

In order to make this picture sure-fire, Director James Flood enhances the original story with a forest fire, the bursting of a dam and a near railroad accident. These scenes occur near the end and simply heighten the unreality. Otherwise, they are effectively put on.

"The Wife Who Wasn't Wanted" impresses as a picture that will please those fans who want drama whether it is plausible or not. The psychological idea of the title isn't carried out strongly, but, rather, the picture simply features the mother's efforts to get her son out of jail, at the sacrifice of her husband's ambitions.

Story

Bob Mannering is in an auto when a woman is killed by it. John Mannering, district attorney, decides to prosecute his son for homicide, as Bob's jazzy friends accuse him of driving the car and Bob will not say that a girl was responsible. Mrs. Mannering seeks to foil her husband's plans by preventing his re-election. She stages a scandal by going to a hotel with a crook in the employ of a politician, and is double-crossed. "The Timber Wolf"

Buck Jones the Star in Excellent Western Picture Produced by Fox

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

Western audiences will vote "The Timber Wolf" one of the best yet. Fox made a wise choice when it selected this vehicle for Buck Jones, for the story has real dramatic elements and strong characterizations. It deals with a sort of Robin Hood who ranged the forest alone and befriended the weak. Add a gold mine, evil men, a girl and a misunderstanding and the result is action from beginning to end.

Jones does splendid work as the "Timber Wolf." He is an heroic figure on his white horse, and convincing when guns are drawn or fists clenched. Elinor Fair is a charming heroine who scores in the big moments. The remainder of the cast is similarly fine, with Sam Allen perhaps topping them with the characterization of an old prospector. Dave Dyas is seen as an honest-to-God villain and puts up a stiff scrap with his fists.

Theatregoers will especially like one sequence that savors of sheik stuff. Jones abducts the girl and takes her to his cabin, threatening to force her to marry him. In the crisis she jibes at him until he, whose only defense is his fists, is at a loss to know how to combat her jeers. There is real pathos when he allows her to go.

The direction of "The Timber Wolf" is fine. The backgrounds have been well selected and the riding and fighting scenes are well staged.

Bruce beats a whiskey peddler and is upbraided by Renee Brooke, Deveril's fiancee. Bruce frees Terry from jail, then goes to the hotel and has a fight with Deveril, and abducts Renee. At his cabin she begins to respect him, but she finds a map to the mine and remembers that Deveril wants it, still believing Bruce a thief. "With This Ring"

Schulberg Picture Is Romantic Drama with Strong Box-Office Angle

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"With This Ring," B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Picture, boasts an exceptionally good cast, a romantically dramatic story with a box office angle and smooth direction. The plot has to do with the supposed death of a wealthy boy and the struggles of his wife and child, scorned by the boy's aristocratic relatives, to make a living.

The picture starts in picturesque fashion with scenes of the boy and girl marooned on a Pacific island. In these colorful surroundings the boy wages a desperate battle with a half-insane Portuguese and the girl, rescued by pearl fishermen, leaves him behind as dead. The remainder of the picture deals with her various repulses in her efforts to give her child a name.

Alyce Mills does exceptionally well with her role of the wife, and Donald Keith is equally good as the boy husband. Working together, the two manage to arouse a lot of sympathy for their predicament. Eulalie Jensen, Martha Mattox and Lou Tellegen are fine as the hard-hearted relatives. They make a picturesque group. Dick Sutherland is appropriately repulsive as the Portuguese. Forrest Stanley is convincing as the lawyer.

This picture undoubtedly takes liberties with the realities, but it is good romantic, box-office entertainment that should please a majority of fans.

"The Storm Breaker"

House Peters Starred in Universal Sea Town Melodrama

Reviewed by Tom Waller

Universal's "The Storm Breaker" stars House Peters, as an agnostic braggart of a tiny sea-faring town on the Nova Scotian coast. It has to do with his being reduced to a humble suppliant by stormy and domestic circumstances forcing upon him the realization that he is not actually master of all that he surveys.

The story is one of familiar trends and the termination is one of agreeable sacrifice, but may be considered abrupt by some audiences. It leaves one with the impression that Peters, as John Strong, will return to his picturesque house by the sea and claim Judith Nyte, played by Nina Romano, as his mate for all time. Judith is a product of the town, while the lissome creature Strong first selected, Lysette DeJon, essayed by Ruth Clifford, was more the type of his poetically inclined brother, Neil, interpreted by Ray Hallor.

This picture runs over six reels. In parts it drags; especially in the constant flash backs to the sitting room of Strong's home. Were some of the footage showing frequent conversations in this room deleted, we feel that it would greatly enhance this production from the standpoint of consistent action.

Strong rescuing Neil, after he has learned from Judith that his brother has apparently been responsible for the surcease of Lysette's affections, furnishes the climax. This storm scene with its nocturnal atmosphere, the life boat, and Neil being buffeted about by huge frothy billows, should make "The Storm Breaker" a good attraction at the average box office.

This Hal Roach comedy features Charlie Murray and Lucien Littlefield as two buddies in an advanced zone of the World War. These two capable comedians strive to be funny, but they have been given very little in the way of ideas to work with, hence the humor is forced. There is no new angle. Littlefield plays the dumbbell who runs before shells and shouts when noise means death, and Murray is the experienced campaigner who pities the poor sap. Each familiar gag is expoited to the fullest, and consequently the action drags, but will doubtless amuse many. James W. Horne directed under the supervision of F. Richard Jones.—S. S.

This Century Comedy with Edna Marion possesses a lot of good humor. The action is smooth and rapid, the gags good and the acting wholly satisfactory. Edna is a country girl who gives visiting movie men permission to make "Uncle Tom's Cabin" with herself as Eva, and the result is an excellent burlesque. She dies in beautiful fashion, but the rope pulling her up to heaven snaps and she falls into a rain water cistern. The ice scene is good. "Life's Greatest Thrills"

(Universal—Special—Two Reels)

Here is a highly entertaining compilation of notable and thrilling events, gathered together to frankly exploit the enterprise of all news reels and especially the enterprise of International Newsreel. It is offered free to exhibitors because of this advertising angle, and it will hugely please audiences because of its contents. Some of the scenes are: the Los Angeles breaking through a smoke screen, a revolution in Berlin, a steeplechase, a parachute drop, a tidal wave in Japan, Vesuvius during an eruption, a rescue from a foundering ship at sea and an automobile race accident. Every one of these has a definite and striking interest that will hold audiences enthralled, particularly that "shot" of the auto accident, which is the most startling we have ever seen. The car turns over and the driver is actually flung thirty feet into the air. Another striking sequence deals with the volcanic eruption and shows walls of molten lava crushing Italian villages. Also worthy of special mention are the views of the first motion pictures made of the Pope. The subject is well worth booking, but as advertised, it's not for weak hearts.—S. S.

"Fair Warning"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

"Fair Warning" bags many of the old gags and some new ones. For a two-reeler it drags in places but then livens up in abrupt spurts. The ending is the best of all from the standpoint of real action. Then Al St. John finishes a hectic ride on a barrel truck just in time to see his own burglar pursuers go up in the air, with the truck, under the bomb which was timed for him. A dog in the comedy will interest a lot of audiences. He does all kinds of tricks, both of the gymnasium and drawing room variety. St. John, as the self-conscious bank messenger, provides a series of laughs by the caperings he indulges in while proposing to his boss' daughter. Chickens gulping down costly pearls of a broken necklace furnish another amusing situation. There are a few other things in this comedy which, all in all, make of it a good number for the average program. Otto Fries, Virginia Vance and Bert Young render good support.—T. W.

"With Pencil, Brush and Chisel"

(Fox—Magazine—One Reel)

This Fox Variety features the artistic genius of Emil Fuchs, sketcher, painter and sculptor. His versatility is exploited in a number of interesting scenes, showing that in addition to the forms of art named above he also is an expert etcher. The artist is shown beginning and completing paintings that art authorities everywhere know. It is a brief study into the routine life of an artist, and interesting as such.—S. S.

Big Production Schedule Marks Fifth Birthday of Paramount's L. I. Studios

ON September 11 the Paramount Long Island Studio will celebrate the fifth anniversary of its founding with the busiest whirl of production it has ever had. For that reason there will be no gala birthday party or anything of the sort. The schedule will show six companies hard at work.

During the past five years eighty feature-length photoplays have been turned out of the Astoria studio and some of these have been among the finest in cinema history.

The huge, armory-like structure across the East River, which generally is regarded as the best equipped studio in the industry, has more than justified the faith of its founders. Considered in the nature of a costly experiment five years ago, the Long Island studio has demonstrated that pictures can be made just as successfully in New York as in California.

A generous share of the credit for the successful operation of the Long Island studio is awarded by those intimate with film production to Edwin C. King, its general manager. Mr. King has achieved the difficult task of combining the artistic faculties of the film producer with the economical efficiency of the head of a vast business enterprise. He makes the wheels of production grind smoothly, with never a delay in schedule.

The studio has been busy continuously with the exception of one span of ten months two years ago when a surplus of Paramount product caused a cessation of activity.

Although actual sets were constructed in the studio during August of 1920 it was not until September that John Robertson, then directing "Sentimental Tommy," moved his cameras in and began photographs. "Money Mad," a George Fitzmaurice production, commenced at about the same time. Followed almost immediately Billie Burke's "The Education of Elizabeth" and Thomas Meighan's "The Quarry," part of which was filmed on the West Coast later.

Some of Mr. Meighan's finest photoplays are claimed by the Long Island studio, among them being "The Conquest of Canaan," "Cappy Ricks," "Back Home and Broke," "The Ne'er Do Well," "Homeward Bound," "Pied Piper Malone," "The Confidence Man," "Tongues of Flame," "Coming Through" and "The Man Who Found Himself."

The Long Island Studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, one of the largest in the world, and greater than any other housed in one building.

Now Meighan is hard at work completing "Irish Luck," the exteriors of which he made in the historic and picturesque spots of Ireland.

Gloria Swanson's outstanding hits during the past two years have been eastern productions. Her initial starring film at Astoria was "Zaza," started in May, 1923, under Allan Dwan's direction. Since, she has made "The Humming Bird," "A Society Scandal," "Manhandled," "Her Love Story," "Wages of Virtue" and she is now making "Stage Struck" there, under the direction of Allan Dwan. They have returned from a two weeks' location trip to New Martinsville, West Virginia.

Richard Dix and Bebe Daniels have recently made a successful series of starring pictures at the studio. At present Dix is making "Womanhandled," with Gregory La Cava directing. Pictures he has made in the East include "Manhattan," "A Man Must Live," "Too Many Kisses," "The Shock Punch" and "The Lucky Devil."

Miss Daniels' Eastern pictures have been "Dangerous Money," "Argentine Love," "Little Miss Bluebeard," "The Crowded Hour," "The Manicure Girl," "Wild, Wild Susan" and "Lovers in Quarantine."

Rudolph Valentino made the magnificent "Monsieur Beaucaire" and "The Sainted Devil," his two last Paramount pictures at the Long Island studio.

Herbert Brenon began work in the studio on March 17, 1924, with "The Sideshow of Life." Since, he has made "The Little French Girl" and "The Street of Forgotten Men" there and is now absorbed in transferring to the screen Barrie's fantasy, "A Kiss for Cinderella," which is one of the most pretentious films ever made in any studio.

Besides Meighan's "Irish Luck," Dix's "Womanhandled" and Brenon's picture,

"Big Bill" Edwards Running For Comptroller in New York

PICTURE folk not only in New York, but throughout the country have an unusual interest in the Primary Election campaign that is now on in New York City. First of all, there is Jimmie Walker, long identified with the industry, waging a battle for the Democratic nomination for Mayor. Opposed to him is Mayor John F. Hylan, backed by the support of W. R. Hearst, who has certainly put enough dollars into the industry to justify ranking as a producer.

And then there is "Big Bill" Edwards, close friend of hundreds of prominent film men, with bright prospects of nomination and election as Comptroller. "Big Bill" is waging a two-fisted, clean fight typical of the man, and in order that his many friends in the industry might have a sample of his work, Moving Picture World is publishing the following statement issued by him:

REGULAR
by
WILLIAM H. (BIG BILL) EDWARDS

Look up the meaning of the word "Regular."

It is a very important word in the English language.

My notion of "Regular" is that a fellow that lives his life giving a square deal to his fellows is entitled to the name "Regular Fellow."

In politics a man must be "regular" too if he expects the support of the members of his party—the enrolled voters, if you please.

I am a Democrat, first, last and all the time. I have never swerved one iota from the principles of the Democratic party.

I am running in the primaries for the office of Comptroller of the City of New York—the greatest city in the world.

There is no office that brings a man in closer touch with the people of New York than that of City Comptroller.

A man must be inherently honest to be City Comptroller, to dispense the great amount of money in his control for the general and best interests of the people of this great municipality.

My record proves my interest in the general welfare of this great city.

Frankly, I would rather be Comptroller of the great City of New York than to hold any other job within the gift of the people of America.

It is a great position—one imposing on one holding it the greatest possible responsibility.

I ask the enrolled voters of the Democratic party to give me their support at the primaries to be held on September 15th.

Why? Because I am a "Regular" Democrat and, I hope, a "Regular" fellow—playing the game on the level always.

I am in my 49th year—just at the threshold of that "maturity" which is so essential in qualifying one in judgment and experience to serve his fellows intelligently and honestly.

My opponent for the nomination of Comptroller is unquestionably a high-class, able gentleman. If you choose him in preference to myself, well and good. I will support him at the general election, and will do all I know how to contribute to his election.

Why? Because I am a "Regular" Democrat. I don't believe in harboring resentments if one is defeated in the primaries. A soldier—a "Regular Fellow" never sulks.

I am on the ticket with Mayor Hylan—my personal friend. I hope he will win in the primaries to be held on September 15th, but if he should not win and the voters—the "Regular" enrolled Democrats—should give a preference to Senator Walker, I will support Senator Walker for election.

Why? Because I am a "Regular" Democrat. The voice of the people is my voice.

I ask every enrolled Democrat to consider impartially my qualifications for the great office of Comptroller of the City of New York.

It seems to me that I am entitled to the votes of "Regular" Democrats based on my record of service to the public which all know, or should know, has been far from selfish motives.

If I should win the nomination for Comptroller of the City of New York, I promise to give the people the best service I am capable of rendering.

The people's interests will be my interests—for am I not one of you—a "Regular" fellow?

Ask any man you meet if I have ever in any way defaulted in my appreciation or recognition of the rights of my fellow citizens at any time or under any circumstances.

WILLIAM H. EDWARDS

Big Houses Book Red Seal

Red Seal Pictures are having a banner month in the New York district scoring heavily with Manhattan's Big Three, sa well as in the smaller houses.

This week the Capitol is playing a Ko-Ko Song Car-Tune, "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean," that is drawing as much attention as the feature film. Across the street, the Rivoli is showing another of the "Marvels of Motion" series, made by the famous Fleischer-Novagraph process. And for the following week the Strand has booked "Ko-Ko on the Run," an Out-of-the-Inkwell Cartoon, also from the pen of Max Fleischer.

Paramount's Birthday Production Schedule

Monta Bell is now directing Adolphe Menjou in "The King on Main Street," D. W. Griffith is making his first Paramount film, "That Royle Girl," with Carol Dempster, Harrison Ford, James Kirkwood and W. C. Fields, and Frank Tuttle is beginning "The American Venus."

Statistics are not always impressive, but, considering the efficiency with which Long Island studio operates, in this instance they convey some idea of what a production center it is.

The plant has two stages. Both are the same size, 257 by 120 feet, but one is forty feet high and the other only twenty-two feet high. Besides, there is an open lot where exterior scenes are made. Surrounding the stages are executive offices, dressing rooms, carpentry shops, dressmaking establishments, wardrobes, etc. At present 500 workers are on the studio payroll, not including the players who in certain scenes of "A Kiss for Cinderella," numbered 400. The average number of studio employes ranges between 300 and 350.

The Long Island studio is complete in itself as a production center. It has its own scenario and editorial staffs under the supervision of William Le Baron and E. Lloyd Sheldon. It maintains its own art, carpentry, machine, wardrobe, dressmaking and casting departments; several warehouses in which set furnishings are stored; a laboratory and a film storage depot.

This laboratory is one of the marvels of the studio. It employs 160 persons and turns out on an average of 1,300,000 feet of film every week. The film storage depot has millions of feet of film in reserve subject to call from the exchanges.

Besides all these activities, the studio is now engaged in an undertaking which gives promise of being one of the most significant in film history. That is the Paramount Pictues School where sixteen especially chosen talented young men and women are receiving a most comprehensive course in every phase of screen acting. It is confidently expected that at the end of their six months course some of these students will be worthy of playing important roles.

Along this line, studio officials, including Mr. Le Baron, Mr. Sheldon and William Cohill, casting director, are constantly searching among New York stage people for the suitable movie talent. They find that their problem is considerably different from that of the West Coast in this respect. The Hollywood studios can always call upon a big supply of trained movie talent. The Long Island studio is obliged to obtain actors from the legitimate stage for important parts.

Scott Dunlap to Direct

Scott Dunlap has been selected by Henry Ginsberg and the Banner officials to direct "The Checkered Flag," the fourth Banner Production, a story of the automobile speedway adapted from the novel of the same name by John Mersereau.

"Gold Rush" Crowds Three Atlantic City Theatres

OPENING with a special midnight matinee, playing day and date in three houses, packing each theatre to capacity, and breaking attendance records for each, is the record made by Charlie Chaplin's new dramatic comedy, "The Gold Rush," in Atlantic City, N. J.

The special midnight premiere was had at the Strand, and drew a capacity audience, in which were several well-known stage stars. Among these were Al Jolson, Julia Sanderson, Donald Brian, Frank Crummit, Johnnie Hines, and officials of Atlantic City.

The picture played simultaneously at the Strand, the Bijou and the Ventnor, packed them at every performance and broke house records for attendance and receipts at each.

The advance lithograph campaign consisted of fifty 24-sheets, a big assortment of sixes, threes and window cards, with a heavy display of lobby cards in each house. Liberal newspaper space also was taken.

The second week opened just as big as the first. Manager Mort Lewis invited 200 crippled children from the various institutions of Atlantic City to attend the second Monday performance. There was a parade for these youngsters on the boardwalk, led by Frank Sauter's son made up as Charlie Chaplin. The lad had with him his little Shetland pony, the smallest pony in the world. The children received toys and candy.

Georgia Hale, Charlie Chaplin's leading lady in "The Gold Rush," the United Artists picture now sweeping aside all records in theatres the world over.

"Freshman" in Demand

New Harold Lloyd-Pathe Picture Goes Back To Ocean City, N. J.

Although "The Freshman," Harold Lloyd's latest and best Pathe picture, has just played a week's engagement at the huge Auditorium in Ocean Grove, New Jersey, with its enormous seating capacity, accommodating 9,000 people, vacationists at the New Jersey Shore resort have requested continued showings of the attraction. So, to meet popular demand, the Ocean Theatre at Asbury Park, adjoining Ocean Grove, will show this big entertainment feature the entire week of August 31st.

"The Freshman" holds the distinction of being the first attraction of any kind to play the immense Auditorium for more than a day or two at the most. The fact that this film had sufficient drawing power to fill this huge theatre every evening for a week attests strongly to its value as entertainment.

New "Don Q" Record

Latest Doug. Fairbanks Picture Captures Atlantic City Throngs

Exceeding all records in Atlantic City for any Douglas Fairbanks production, "Don Q, Son of Zorro," played to capacity business at the Strand Theatre.

There was a strong advance campaign consisting of a heavy display of twenty four sheets, sixes, threes and window cards and 15,000 heralds. An automobile tie-up was made, with covers being painted with the picture title, "Don G."

The front of the theatre was dressed with a display of Fairbanks and the Australian whip; ushers were in Spanish costume; a man dressed as "Don Q" travelled the city on horseback, with a shield banner.

There were displayed in all cigar stores a "Don Q." on horseback as a cutout, which attracted much attention.

Valentino's "Eagle"

Photography Completed on His First United Artists Release

Photography on "The Eagle," the title definitely decided upon for Rudolph Valentino's first production for United Artists Corporation, will be finished in two weeks, according to announcement from Hollywood, if the working schedule of Clarence Brown, the director, is not upset by unexpected circumstances. It is said that the picture will be rushed to the theatres.

Even though "The Eagle" is nearing completion, prominent names still are being added to the list of players. The latest is that of Russell Simpson.

The cast now includes Vilma Banky, leading woman, loaned for the occasion by Samuel Goldwyn; Louise Dresser, James Marcus, George Nichols, Albert Conti, Carrie Clark Ward, Spottiswoods Aitken, Mario Carillo, Otto Hoffman, and Jean de Briac.

GROUP OF PLAYERS SUPPORTING "BILL" HART IN "TUMBLEWEEDS"

Fox Far Ahead of Production Schedule In Ambitious Short Subjects Program

CONVINCING proof of the complete success of the present arrangement of having all the comedy units at the William Fox West Coast studios under the direct supervision of George E. Marshall is attested in the number of these two reelers already finished or now in the course of production.

In commenting upon the recent changes made in the producing plans for these comedies, an official of Fox Film Corporation said that every one is highly pleased with the way the system is working. Mr. Marshall is devoting all of his time to the supervision of Van Bibber, O. Henry, Helen and Warren and Imperial Comedies.

An expert staff of directors, scenarists and gag men has been signed up for the production of the new two reelers. While Fox Film Corporation has always been strong in its comedy department, greater attention has been paid to every detail of the production of these mirth-reels this season. Two million dollars has been appropriated by the Fox company to turn out the most laughable stories ever seen on the screen.

In keeping with this ambitious program, the writings of Richard Harding Davis, O. Henry and Mabel Herbert Urner have been secured as the basis for three series of two reel comedy dramas. Imperial Comedies, continuing up to the usual high standard, will round out the program.

At the present time five Imperial Comedies are finished and are being rushed through the laboratories, and four new mirth-reels are nearing completion at the West Coast Studios. Two of the first three of the series of O. Henry comedies have been completed and the third comedy has just been started. The first three of the domestic comedies adapted from "The Married Life of Helen and Warren" have been finished and are scheduled for early release. Five of the Van Bibber series have been finished and work on the remainder of this series, which is far ahead of schedule, has been held up because Earle Foxe is playing an important role in "Wages For Wives," one of the John Golden plays.

Mr. Marshall was chosen to supervise the short subjects because of his success last season directing Earle Foxe in the Van Bibber comedies, based on Richard Harding Davis' stories. This season he personally produced two of the hilarious Van Bibbers, "The Sky Jumper" and "A Parisian Knight." Robert P. Kerr directed the other three that have already been completed. There will be eight in the series.

ZASU PITTS

This great actress appears in two Fox productions of American rural life, "Lazybones" and "Thunder Mountain."

Earle Foxe is starring in the series again this season, with Florence Gilbert, Frank Beal and Lynn Cowan continuing in support.

"The Big Game Hunter," directed by Mr. Kerr, will be released August 16; "The Sky Jumper," September 20; "The Wrestler," November 1; "A Parisian Knight," December 13. "The Feud," directed by Mr. Kerr, has just been finished but no release date has been set for this production.

Two of the series of eight pictures to be made from the O. Henry short stories have been finished and the third "Failure," has just been put into production at the Fox West Coast Studios. All three have been made under the direction of Daniel Keefe, Kathryn McGuire and Harvey Clark have the leading roles. "Shoes," which is the first of the O. Henry stories, is scheduled for release September 6. The principal players are Marion Harlan and Harold Goodwin. The chief players in "Transients in Arcadia" are Mary Akin and Hugh Allan. This subject is now in the laboratories and will be released October 18.

The first three of the eight two-reel comedies to be made from the celebrated short stories, "The Married Life of Helen and Warren" by Mabel Herbert Urner, have been completed and have their release dates set. Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley have the leading roles in all of these domestic comedies, which are being directed by Albert Ray.

The first of this series to be released was "A Business Engagement," scheduled for August 30. Then will follow "All Abroad" on October 11 and "The Peacemakers," which was finished this week at the Coast and which will be presented November 22.

Bryan Foy, son of the one and only Eddie Foy, has returned to the comedy division and has taken his place with the Imperial Comedy companies turning out these fun-films with Benny Stoloff and Lew Seiler. Mr. Foy was loaned to the "Thunder Mountain" company and is responsible for the introduction of many original bits of business and new gags into this Fox attraction.

"All At Sea" is the latest Imperial Comedy to be put into production under the direction of Lew Seiler. Three other comedies as yet untitled are now being rushed to completion by Benny Stoloff, Bryan Foy and Lew Seiler The first release is "On The Go," directed by Lew Seiler, and scheduled for release August 23. This comedy will be followed by "Sweet Marie," directed by Ben Stoloff and to be released September 6; "Love and Lions," directed by Ben Stoloff and to be released September 20; "A Cloudy Romance," produced by Lew Seiler and Bryan Foy and scheduled for release October 4. There are twenty Imperials in the series.

Scenes in the William Fox screen production of the stage success, "Havoc," with George O'Brien, Margaret Livingston, Walter McGrail, Leslie Fenton and Wade Boteler.

Los Angeles Critics Praise "Drusilla With a Million"

"DRUSILLA With A Million," the Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond production, which commenced its record breaking career at the Capitol Theatre, New York, continues to shatter all box office records in the first run houses in which it plays.

The production, which is based on the famous novel by Elizabeth Cooper and which was transferred to the screen by John Brownell, east coast scenario editor of F. B. O., and B. P. Fineman, production manager, and directed by F. Harmon Weight, had its coast premiere recently at the Forum Theatre in Los Angeles.

Hard boiled Los Angeles had this to say of the picture: Edwin Schallert commented in the Los Angeles Times:

"Heart interest has at last been rediscovered for the screen, and as a consequence, audiences may as well be forewarned to be sure and take extra pocket handkerchiefs with them when they go to see "Drusilla With A Million." It is the best feature of the tearful type, destined to make everybody happy that has been shown on the screen, seemingly in ages, and I imagine that owing to this fact alone there will be an unusual pilgrimage to the Forum Theatre where it is on view this week.

"Somehow the type of films of which 'Drusilla With A Million' is representative have been all too scarce during the past several seasons. They have been supplanted by a jazzier and more artificial entertainment and it is a satisfaction once again to come back to home base and really be able to watch something that is human."

The Los Angeles Record waxes equally enthusiastic: "The question 'Does a million dollars mean anything to you?' brings forth some of the most wholesome comedy and greatest heart-throbs of the season. . . . Priscilla Bonner gives a supreme performance. This little lady is destined to travel far along the road of perfect screen portrayals. Her abundant ability shows in her every appearance on the screen. Mary Carr repeats her triumph in "Over the Hill." Personally, I believe that she surpasses her efforts in the latter film. She has an appealing manner that touches your heart strings."

The Los Angeles Express expresses itself as follows:

"When a picture takes such hold of the emotions of an audience that it bursts into applause at the turn of affairs which confound the forces arrayed against the distressed heroine, the critics may as well sheathe their arrows. Mary Carr is 'Drusilla' and so delightful is her portrayal, so tender, so humorous, so pathetic by turn that it is one of the histrionic gems of the year."

The reviewer on the Los Angeles News, who signs himself K. E. A., echoes his colleagues when he comments:

"One of the most dramatic situations that has ever been filmed is incorporated into the story of 'Drusilla With A Million,' this week's Forum offering. Scenes are so intensely dramatic, in which the suspense is prolonged so effectively that one suspects the director of a flash of real genius."

Alabama Theatre Opens

The Central Park Theatre, a big new house in Pratt City, Ala., was opened recently with great success, playing to capacity despite a heavy down-pour of rain. The opening picture was "The Family Secret," a Universal Jewel, featuring Baby Peggy. Everett S. Haynes is the manager of the new house.

Florence Vidor and Ford Sterling in a scene in "The Trouble With Wives," a Paramount picture directed by Mal St. Clair.

Before very long picture lovers will see John Barrymore in a new role. Here he is as a harpooner on a whaler, as he will appear in the big Warner Brothers special, "The Sea Beast." Barrymore and his cast are about to leave for the coast of Java in search of thrills.

F. B. O. Film Booked Heavily

"Drusilla With A Million" Plays Many First Runs Week of August 22

Breaking all records of performance, "Drusilla With A Million," the Associated Arts Corporation F. B. O. Gold Bond production which is causing such a furore among critics and motion picture goers, continues to shatter box office receipts in the many first run houses in which it is now playing.

Recent reports from the sales department of F. B. O. indicate that this Gold Bond picture played twelve first runs the week of August 22, including the Gem at Jaelsson, Tenn.; Regent, Eureka, Kansas; Star, Hudson, N. Y.; Strand, Sunbury, Pa.; Victoria, Tamaqua, Pa.; State, Trenton, N. J.; Hamilton, Lancaster, Pa.; Rialto, Washington, D. C.; Liberty, Kansas City, Mo.; Broadway Strand, Detroit, Mich.; Climmer, Spokane, Wash., and the Columbia at Seattle, Washington.

Use Color in Menjou Picture

Color photography will be used for the opening and closing scenes of "The King on Main Street," which Monta Bell will direct for Paramount with Adolphe Menjou as king, and Greta Nissen and Bessie Love in the chief supporting roles.

The story begins with the King of Moldavia reviewing his cavalry troops on the military parade grounds. The vivid colors of the uniforms, the gowns of the court ladies, and the lavish decorations of the monarch's reviewing stand will be brought to the screen by the use of the most advanced methods of color photography.

"Let's Go Gallagher" Completed

Work has been completed at the F. B. O. Studios on "Let's Go Gallagher," the first of the new series of Westerns with Tom Tyler, the "surprise star," featured. The story by Percy Heath and James Gruen was directed by Robert De Lacey and Gruen.

Scenes in "The Coming of Amos," the Cecil B. De Mille personally supervised production, starring Rod La Rocque, for release by Producers Distributing Corporation. The cast includes Noah Beery, Trixie Friganza, Jetta Goudal and Arthur Hoyt. This production had its New York premiere at the Colony, beginning September 6.

Hunt Stromberg Joins Executive Staff Of the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studios

HUNT STROMBERG, one of the industry's foremost producers, has entered into an agreement with Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer whereby he will act in a supervisory capacity and will augment the work of Irving G. Thalberg and Harry Rapf, associate executives at the Culver City studios, according to an announcement just made by Louis B. Mayer, production executive-in-chief.

An enlarged production schedule is soon to be put into effect at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios, and Stromberg will participate actively in its execution. In addition to acting in a supervisory capacity he will assume the direction of several pictures.

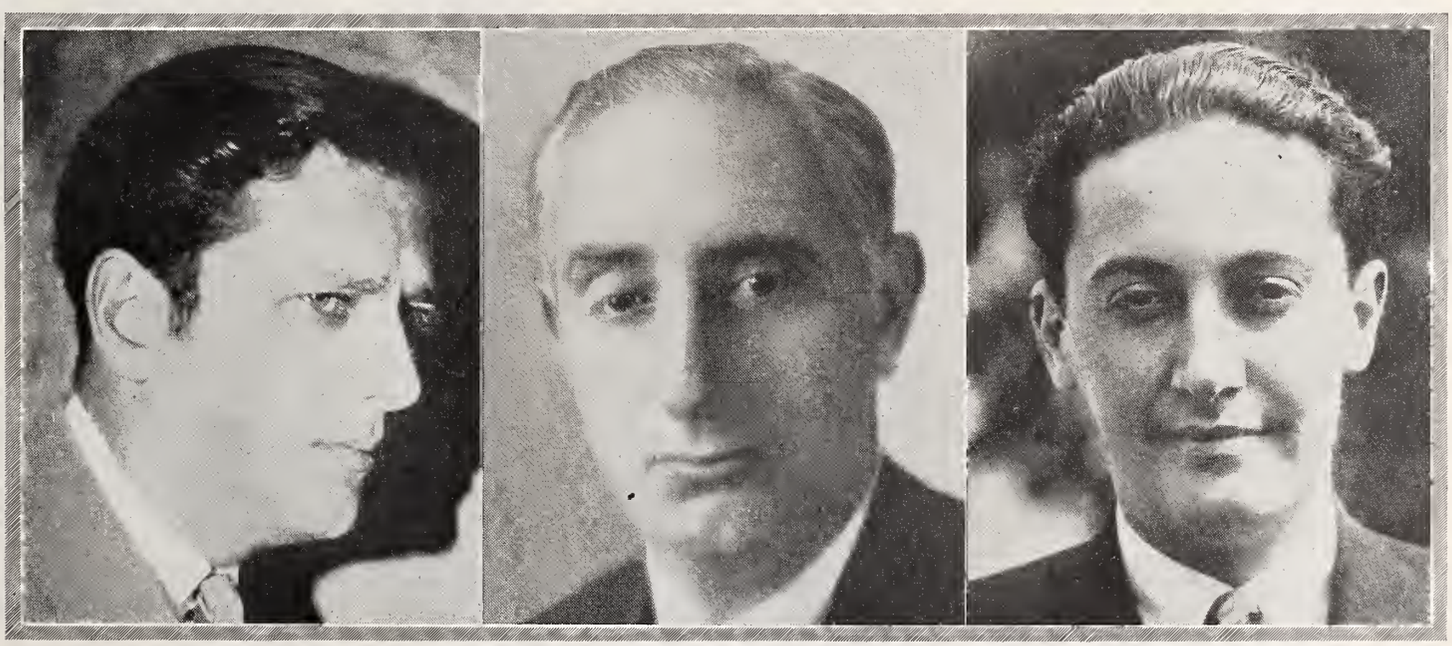
In making the announcement Louis B. Mayer said:

"Under the enlarged producing program about to be launched we will need the additional services of a producer who can achieve M-G-M quality in pictures. In Stromberg Messrs. Thalberg, Rapf and myself feel we have acquired such a man. He enjoys an enviable record and under his arrangement with us he will, I feel sure, achieve the greatest work of his career."

LOUIS B. MAYER
Vice-president of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer in charge of production at the Culver City studios.

Stromberg was recently producing for the Producers Distributing Corporation and made several successes for them. A short time ago he disposed of all of his interests in such pictures and turned over four or more stories to them. Considerable speculation as to just why he had sold out his interests has been going the rounds, but the true cause, namely, the offer made to him by Louis B. Mayer on behalf of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, has just come to light with Mr. Mayer's announcement. Stromberg felt that the opportunity to work with M-G-M was one not to be lost; one that would provide him with the finest of facilities for the production of pictures along the lines that have brought him into the limelight.

Stromberg has produced many successful productions, among them "The Siren of Seville," "The Fire Patrol," "A Cafe in Cairo," "Tiger Thompson" and several Harry Carey pictures in addition to those he made for Producers Distributors.



LOUIS B. MAYER'S ASSOCIATE EXECUTIVES AT THE METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER STUDIOS

Hunt Stromberg (left) joins M.-G.-M., it is officially announced. He will work under Mr. Mayer, co-operating with Harry Rapf (center) and Irving G. Thalberg, mapping out productions and building feature programs. Stromberg also will direct occasionally.

Lilyan Tashman, now playing a featured role in support of Pauline Starke and Charles Ray in Robert Z. Leonard's "A Little Bit of Broadway," who recently announced on the set that she is to marry Edmund Lowe within a few days, or at least as soon as she finished her present role. "A Little Bit of Broadway" is a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production written by Richard Connell and adapted by Jessie Burns.

Grainger, Back from Trip, Finds Big Business in All Territories

JAMES R. GRAINGER returned on Tuesday, September 8, to New York after an extended trip to the West Coast—the second he has made within a few months—and other territory. The general sales manager for Fox Film Corporation reported business as most satisfactory in every territory which he had visited.

The trip which has just ended carried Mr. Grainger as far south as El Paso, as far west as Los Angeles and San Francisco and as far as Montreal in the northeast. In the twenty-four weeks since Grainger joined Fox Film Corporation he has now spent eighteen weeks on the road, and the result of this activity at the head of a revitalized sales organization working under him is seen in the fact that Fox is practically set, not only in every key city of importance throughout the United States, but solidly throughout the entire districts in almost every sales territory in the country. As to the few high spots which remain to be "cleaned up," Mr. Grainger says: "I am not worrying. Everything is simply great. The sales organization, to a man, is working at high pressure and the vary satisfactory status of 'accepted business' on our books shows the grand result that has been achieved."

During Mr. Grainger's latest trip, contracts were executed which brought Fox product into many prominent houses in the west and northwest. The Criterion Theatre in Los Angeles, St. Francis, California and Granada Theatres in San Francisco, Jensen & Von Herberg's Liberty Theatre in Seattle and Majestic Theatre in Portland—these are some of the prominent theatres which have been signed up for the Fox product. A contract executed with Ackerman & Harris puts Fox in a commanding position in Oakland, California, while the T. & D. Jr. Circuit has been booked for the product in Sacramento and other Northern California towns.

While in Chicago final details were worked out which will give Fox ample outlet for his product both on the North and South Sides of that City, where his pictures have been contracted for by Ascher Brothers, Cooney Brothers and Andrew Karzas.

As indicating the strength of the Fox position through the country, Mr. Grainger points to the following list of prominent circuits and outstanding exhibitors with whom contracts have been executed for Fox productions for the new season. These include Finkelstein & Ruben in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth; I. Libson in Cincinnati, Dayton and Louisville; Rowland & Clark in Pittsburgh and East Liberty, Mike Comerford throughout Pennsylvania, Butterfield Circuit in Michigan, Hoblitzelle Circuit throughout the Southwest, Ascher Brothers and others in Chicago, Jensen & Von Herberg in the Northwest, John Hamrick and Charles McKee in Seattle and Tacoma, Skouras Brothers and William Goldman in Missouri, Albee & Murdock in Providence.

Pathe Gets Series of Twenty Subjects on the Holy Land

PATHE announces the acquisition of a series of Holy Land films which will afford exhibitors ideal subjects for forthcoming Christmas season programs, as the first six subjects depict scenes of Christ's activity upon earth from the time of His birth to the Resurrection.

"A Pilgrimage to Palestine" is the title of the series of twenty subjects of one reel each, which were produced by the Holy Land Film Company of Cincinnati. The first six subjects treat the scenes of Christ's activity, as stated above, and the other fourteen subjects present scenes of the most interesting and dramatic stories of both the Old and New Testaments.

The first six subjects, which are particularly suitable for Christmas showings, are as follows: Bethlehem; Nazareth; Scenes of Christ's Early Ministry; showing the Sea of Galilee, Capernaum and adjacent territory; scenes of Christ's Later ministry, showing scenes around Jerusalem and Bethany; Gethsemane, showing the scenes of His Trial, the home of Caiphas, the high priest, etc.; Via Dolorosa (The Sad Way), showing the road to the Cross; the Church of the Holy Sepulchre, Christ's Tomb and scenes of Jerusalem.

The first six subjects will be available for showings on October 4 when all Pathe exchanges will have prints ready for screening. Exhibitors will be able to book the subjects separately or as a group, according to their requirements.

To Show Century Comedies

H. M. Herbel, sales manager of the Century Film Corporation, reports that a contract has been signed by Leroy Alexander, Universal's Chicago manager, and the Lubliner & Trintz circuit, for the entire 1925-1926 output of Century Comedies for the thirty-five or more houses of the Chicago chain.

Christie's Feature, "Seven Days," Makes Hit in Los Angeles and New York City

AL. CHRISTIE'S newest feature, "Seven Days" adapted from the stage farce of the same title by Mary Roberts Rinehart and Avery Hopwood passed the crucial test of public approval with flying colors, on both the east and west coasts last week when presented at The Forum in Los Angeles, and The Colony in New York City.

The honors for the success of the production are, according to a summary of the newspaper opinions, equally divided between the players, the director, the scenarists and the co-authors of the farce. While Al. Christie's judgment in the selection of farce material comes in for no small amount of commendation at the hands of the critics.

Following are excerpts from the New York City and Los Angels newspapers:

"It is a raftling good comedy. The titles are almost as full of laughs as the action. Some one with a fine sense of comedy wrote them."—New York American.

"Liberally sprinkled with the good old Al Christie gags, provides a lot of laughs. Eddie Gribbon, as the burglar, takes first honors for fun making with Tom Wilson as the cop, a close second."—New York Morning Telegraph.

"You'll enjoy 'Seven Days' at the Colony Theatre. It's packed with every conceivable comedy gag. The fun is fast and furious." —New York Evening Journal.

"At the Colony there is much to laugh at, as the picture stands, and Mr. Hale, always a free and easy light comedian, is worth anybody's trip there to see him no matter how far in the suburbs you may live. He and the person who thought up snappy sayings with which to hang together the episodes have made the film worthy of Broadway showing."—New York Morning World.

"Seven Days" is the feature at the Colony this week and, having been the rounds, it looks to us like the most amazing picture on Broadway. Al Christie has gathered together a most effective cast for this comedy. Lillian Rich is one of the handsomest and most subtly amusing young stars on the screen." —New York Herald-Tribune.

"This is an uproariously funny farce. Director Scott Sidney has packed the picture with hilarious situations, comically interpreted by the players who seem to have entered into the spirit of the yarn with infectious vengeance. Lillian Rich does surprisingly good work as the heroine. Eddie Gribbon is a yell as the burglar while Mabel Julienne Scott, as the spiritualistic novice, is simply corking. Even the sub-titles, of which there are comparatively few, contribute to the fun."—New York Daily Mirror.

"'Seven Days' is the happiest choice for the movie-going on Broadway this week. The audience laughed and chuckled and chuckled and laughed. * * * Spanking good entertainment. If you don't laugh you're just pretending."—New York Daily News.

"Laughing incessantly until their sides ached, the first night audiences accorded a riotous welcome to 'Seven Days' at the Forum. Lillian Rich takes full advantage of opportunity displaying her skill as comedienne and laugh follows laugh every moment from the time she is first flashed on the screen until the end of the picture. Recent comedies have been notoriously lacking in plot, but here is a picture which not only has a main plot that is bound to be humorous, but also subplots galore."—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

"'Seven Days' at the Forum keeps audiences shrieking with laughter. Laughs? Thousands of them! 'Seven Days' is the last word in merriment. The audiences roared, chuckled and shrieked all day yesterday at the Forum." —Los Angeles Examiner.

"'Seven Days' proves a hilarious joy fest." —Los Angeles Times.

Two Big Pictures to Start Next Week on Schulberg Lot

"LEW TYLER'S WIVES" and "Eden's Fruit" will constitute the next Preferred Pictures to be put into production by B. P. Schulberg. Cameras will be focused on these two stories next week, Marcel De Sano handling the direction of "Lew Tyler's Wives" and Gasnier making "Eden's Fruit."

"Lew Tyler's Wives" is an adaptation of Wallace Irwin's novel, which, it may be conservatively stated, is one of the most successful novels in modern American fiction. First published serially in Pictorial Review, it later found an even greater response from the reading public when issued in book form by Putnam. Lois Hutchinson, who adapted De Sano's first production, "The Girl Who Wouldn't Work," is preparing the script for the Irwin novel. The available acting talent is now being surveyed by Mr. Schulberg to find an appropriate player for the role of Lew Tyler, which demands the qualities of hero and villain blended into a single characterization.

"Eden's Fruit," by John Goodrich, is now ready for Mr. Gasnier, the script having been completed by the author some weeks ago. The cast will soon be announced.

Hunter Unit Completes Work on 'The Clodhopper' for Associated

FINAL scenes of "The Clodhopper," the Associated Exhibitors' Oscar Price production, starring Glenn Hunter, were filmed last week at the Universal Studios, Fort Lee, N. J., under the direction of Joseph Henaberry. The picture is now in the hands of the film editors and cutters, and will be ready for release in the near future.

JOSEPH SCHILDKRAUT

The celebrated stage star, has signed a long-term contract to appear in Cecil B. De Mille productions for release by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Glenn Hunter appears in the title role of the production with Mildred Ryan playing opposite as the pretty small-town girl who loves the "Clodhopper."

The cast of "The Clodhopper" is an excellent one, and includes, in addition to Glenn Hunter and Mildred Ryan, the following well-known screen players: Antrim Short, Margaret Irving, Citana Kamp, Beryl Halley, W. T. Hays, William Black, Marion Stephenson, Edward Poland, Isobel Vernon, George Graham and the dancing team, Bishop and Lynn.

MacLean Signs Betty Francisco

Douglas MacLean has added Betty Francisco to the cast of "Seven Keys to Baldpate," the famous George M. Cohan success which will be his first release for Paramount.

The feminine leading role is played by Edith Roberts. In the supporting cast are Wade Boteler, William Orlamonde, Maym Kelso, Edwin Sturgis and Ned Sparks. Anders Randolf and Craufurd Kent are the previously selected players in the large cast which Fred Newmeyer is directing.

Eleanor Boardman as she appears in a bridal scene from Hobart Henley's "Exchange of Wives." Lew Cody, Renee Adoree and Creighton Hale are featured with Miss Boardman in this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production.

Last Chapter of "Play Ball" Listed by Pathe for Sept. 20

HIGHLIGHTS of the Pathe short-subject program for the week of September 20 are "A Home Plate Wedding," the final chapter of the Patheserial "Play Ball"; two Mack Sennett comedies, "Hurry Doctor" and "A Rainy Knight"; and a Hal Roach two-reeler, "Somewhere in Somewhere." Other short-subject releases of the week include a Grantland Rice "Sportlight," "Starting an Argument," "Nuts and Squirrels," one of the "Aesops's Film Fables"; "Topics of the Day"; Pathe Review and two issues of Pathe News.

"Hurry Doctor" is a lively two-reeler produced by Mack Sennett with Ralph Graves featured as an ambitious paper-hanger. While he and his assistant are preparing a doctor's office, the physician is away on business. When a beautiful girl patient arrives, Graves substitutes for the M. D. It is a case of love at first sight and from then on the fun is rapid-fire. Thelma Parr is the girl, Frank Whitson is Dr. Welland Strong and Vernon Dent is a traffic cop of heroic proportions.

"Somewhere in Somewhere" is a Hal Roach two-reel comedy, featuring Charlie Murray and Lucien Littlefield as two buddies in an advanced zone of the recent war. Littlefield is Livingston Toots, of Boston, in his first war, and Murray is Patrick Henry Terrance O'Brien, veteran of three conflicts. Neither is as heroic as he imagines and consequently both indulge in antics that provide genuine fun.

"A Home Plate Wedding," the tenth and final chapter of "Play Ball," brings this exciting Patheserial, written by Manager McGraw of the Giants, to a happy ending.

"Starting an Argument," a Grantland Rice "Sportlight," pictures various phases of the ever-present arguments wherever sportsmen meet. Every "fan" or "bug" has a headful of pet theories and H. L. Hawkinson has filmed many of the most discussed ones.

Pathe Review No. 138 presents an interesting diversity of subjects: "The Hand-Made Jungle," papier-mache animals and what makes them go; "The Canyon of Champagnole," a village in the Franco-Swiss Mountains in Pathecolor scenes, and "Brides of the Orient," one of the "Here Comes the Bride" series.

"Nuts and Squirrels" is the title of the Paul Terry cartoon of the "Aesop's Film Fables" series. The release schedule for September 20th is completed by "Topics of the Day" and two issues of Pathe News.

"Nostromo" Cast Will Embark for Catalina

ROWLAND V. LEE is heading a company of more than one hundred people on a silver treasure-hunting expedition in the deep seas. Translated into motion-picture parlance, this means that the director is sailing on the good ship Fox to the Isthmus at Catalina Island to film scenes for his production, "The Silver Treasure."

A Peruvian technical expert with the Lee company has selected the locations as identical with those of the Joseph Conrad story, "Nostromo," from which the picture is adapted. The good ship Fox in is in reality a three-masted schooner, a well-preserved relic of the days of which Conrad wrote, and while it will serve as transport for the Lee company, towed across the channel by tug-boat, it will also serve as the real thing in the picture.

Perhaps the oddest feature of this location trip is that not one woman will appear in any of the scenes filmed. This sequence of "The Silver Treasure" is strictly confined to the activities of the hero in salvaging and hiding the treasure, and to the many spectacular fights waged by George O'Brien as Nostromo, in defending the treasure from the depredations of Lou Tellegen and his bandit crew.

Besides Director Lee, George O'Brien and Lou Tellegen, the personnel of the cast in these scenes includes Otto Matiesen, Harvey Clark, Stewart Rome, Hugh Crumplin, Fred Becker and Gilbert Clayton.

Ray to Return to Chadwick

On completing his production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Charles Ray will return to the Chadwick Pictures Corporation to continue his series scheduled on the coming years' program of this organization. "Some Pun'kins," and "Sweet Adeline" the first two of the Charles Ray series are already completed.

This series comes as the result of popular public demand for the return of this young star to the lovable country boy character in the rural setting, a type of entertainment which Ray created and made popular on the screen.

Rin-Tin-Tin, Warner Brothers' great dog star, and his family, with his owner, Lieut. Lee Duncan.

"Phantom of the Opera" Has Brilliant Metropolitan Premiere at the Astor

"THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA," Universal's latest super-production, a colorful, fantastic and dramatic mystery story made by Rupert Julian with Lon Chaney in the starring role, had its Broadway premiere last Sunday night in the Astor Theatre, Forty-fifth street and Broadway, with the most elaborate opening ever accorded a Universal picture.

Despite a continuous rain, traffic was halted in Times Square by the thousands who crowded around the front of the Astor. Police reserves called from the West 47th street police station had little effect in clearing the situation. The quota of seats allotted to the public for the opening performance soon was used up, but still hundreds pushed their way to the theatre front seeking admittance. They remained to crowd the lobby and the pavement in front of the theatre as the various screen and stage celebrities, prominent New Yorkers, diplomatic representatives and other well-known personages who made up the brilliant first night audience arrived and were conducted through the narrow lanes of densely packed humanity to the inner theatre doors.

Universal has had many successful openings on Broadway but "The Phantom of the Opera" premiere has set a new highwater mark for cinema first nights. The big mystery picture, adapted from Gaston Leroux's famous thriller, with all its thrills and a few added flourishes, long has been heralded as Carl Laemmle's greatest screen achievement. The dignitaries of the screen, stage and literary world crowded to the Astor to see Universal make good his boast. The applause which greeted the highlights of the picture and the comments heard in all parts of the house and after the showing bore eloquent testimony that Carl Laemmle has made another ten-strike.

Lon Chaney, the star, whose make-up and characterization of Erik, the Phantom, is the apex of his weird screen personalities, was accorded praise seldom received by a screen actor. Mary Philbin, the pretty heroine, and Norman Kerry, the hero, also shared in the general approbation. Of the others in the cast whose work was especially approved were Arthur Edmund Carewe, John Sainpolis, Snitz Edwards, Virginia Pearson and Gibson Gowland.

The screen world and the public stared in amazement when the gigantic sets of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" were first flashed on the screen, last year. The first showing of the gorgeous, natural color sets of the interior of the great Paris Opera House, the locale of "The Phantom," and the celebrated masked ball, a kaleidoscopic riot of color, drew gasps of astonishment and wonder, however, from those in the Astor audience last Sunday. That these seenes of splendor have never been equalled on the screen is the consensus of opinion.

Everything about the presentation of "The Phantom of the Opera" was in keeping with the "spirit." Entering the lobby, the guests were initiated into the weirdness and mystery, the dominating note of this production, by a dungeon-like interior designed by the Eastman Studios, New York. The walls were covered with plaster "stone" and from the low ceiling hung wrought iron lamps giving forth an eerie glow. Above the entrance, lying in a niche, was the full length figure of the "Phantom," robed in the red silk of the Bal Masque scene. His skeleton face grinning at the throng below sent cold shivers up and down the spines of those who caught sight of him for the first time. On the side wall was a hand decorated cut-out of the ballet girls on which a baby spot over the box office was trained.

The curtain rose upon a group of ballet dancers, trained by the internationally famous Albertina Rasch, dressed in the traditional white tulle costumes of the "Faust" ballet. Across the stage in front of the posed group whirled the solo dancers, each one reeeiving greater applause than her predecessor. The ballet proper opened with the dance from "Faust" and then merged into a novel series of steps originated by Mme. Rasch.

The set, designed and executed by the Robert Law Studios, New York, presented an impressionistic forest, with dark trees of velvet at the back which drew aside as the picture commenced. Massive pillars down front gave a feeling of bigness to the entire setting.

As the ballet came to an end the lights were slowly dimmed, and the girls suddenly started across the stage with a shriek of terror to huddle in a frightened group on the opposite side. In the darkness of the stage a pale light began to appear in the center stage back. As the audience sat tense, not knowing what to expect, a full-length figure in fluttering white robes emerged, seemingly poised in mid-air. It was the "phantom" produced by the great magician, Thurston, as his answer to Universal's $1,000 challenge for such an apparition.

The music score by Eugene Conte, orchestra leader and originator of many screen scores, was as unusual as the picture. Most of the music was comprised of French airs hitherto unheard in this country, but whenever a scene from "Faust" was flashed upon the screen the corresponding music from the opera accompanied it. There was the lovely "Faust" ballet music, the Jewel Song, the King of Thule and the final trio.

When the guests, which made up the most impressive audience ever attending a picture premiere, arrived at the theatre they found a throng of the curious so dense that a special detachment of police were necessary to make a path to the doors. In spite of the heavy downpour of rain, a large portion of New York was at the Astor to watch the arrival of those fortunate enough to possess tickets, and when the performanee was over this same crowd was there, augmented by the outpourings of other theatres along the street.

"The Iron Horse" Is Given High Praise by San Francisco Critics

AMONG the most successful pre-season engagements of the epic Fox Film Corporation photoplay, "The Iron Horse," was the first run in San Francisco, which opened August 23 at the beautiful St. Francis Theatre. The Fox historical romance was given a first-class presentation and played to eapacity business all week. The outstanding feature of this engagement was the avalanche of newspaper praise for this production, which has established new records everywhere it has played.

Chief among the favorable notices was the review in the San Francisco Call and Post, which advised its readers: "Whatever else you do, don't miss 'The Iron Horse.' We ask it for your own sakes." Continuing, this reviewer says: "A truly glorious motion picture dramatically, photographically, romantically, historically came to the St. Francis Theatre last Saturday, and if salvos of applause at its conclusion are any criterion it should still be here when the Christmas holidays roll around. 'The Iron Horse' it is called, and it marks one of the highest points of motion picture production so far reached."

The San Francisco Examiner said: "'The Iron Horse' is a salutary and highly educational picture. A schoolboy who witnesses it may be given a month's vacation, for he has acquired more history than he can usually cram into his head in two months of dull reading. Lest this frighten anybody who hankers for entertainment and hates to be beaned by a textbook in the process, let us qualify the verdict by saying it is as full of action and humor as 'The Covered Wagon.'"

From the San Francisco Bulletin eomes this praise: "History and fiction are eombined in 'The Iron Horse,' the truly remarkable picture this week at the St. Francis. When it is all said and done, however, it is the historical portion of the picture which furnishes the thrills and the fact that the director, John Ford, followed the true story of the great railroad building epoch of the West makes the film far more interesting than if the scenario had been purely fiction."

"John Ford has created something memorable in 'The Iron Horse,' which is being shown at the St. Francis Theatre; a great picture, one in which the glow of beauty and the glamor of romance cover a tale of vast labor with glory," said the San Francisco Chronicle.

Scenes in the William Fox production, "Gold and the Girl," starring Buck Jones, directed by Edmund Mortimer. Elinor Fair has the feminine lead.

Warner Theatre Records Broken With Big Exploitation Stunts on "Limited Mail"

WARNERS THEATRE, New York, formerly the Piccadilly, signalized last week, the first of its existence under the management of the new owners, by smashing to bits the best attendance record the house had ever known previously. Hundreds who sought admittance the opening Saturday night were turned away disappointed, the house was crowded at every showing on Sunday, and the attendance figures on each succeeding day of the week surpassed the average for every corresponding day in the past history of the house.

This splendid showing was accepted as a demonstration of the value of intelligent advertising and exploitation. For weeks preceding the opening a concerted publicity campaign had been carried on, the opening night was made the occasion for several extraordinary exploitation projects, and during the week that followed some of the biggest stunts Broadway had ever seen were put over.

Warners Theatre had its opening when the launching of Warner Bros.' national advertising campaign was still fresh in the minds of the public. The first gun fired locally in this campaign was a page advertisement in some of the New York newspapers. This did not call attention specifically to the particular photoplay chosen as the first attraction in the new house, but it did impress upon newspaper readers the extent and value of the Warner schedule and the ambitious plans which the Warners had mapped out for the coming year. This national advertising campaign was devised and is being conducted by Myer Lesser, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation.

In keeping with the picture selected as the opening week's feature, "The Limited Mail," a sensationally realistic story of the rails, the week was designated as "Railroad Men's Week," and a succession of novel and appropriate exploitation stunts was arranged. Outstanding was the borrowing from the New York Central of the old De Witt Clinton locomotive and train, operated first in 1831, and their daily procession through the streets.

In a visit to City Hall, where the train was inspected by Mayor Hylan, and stops in Times Square, in front of Warners Theatre, and at other conspicuous locations, the train attracted the attention of hundreds of thousands. Showmen and publicity men declared this one of the greatest exploitation stunts ever put over. It was arranged and carried out by Barran Lewis and J. Harrison Edwards of the Warner organization.

Effective, too, was a tie-up with the Daily Mirror, which, throughout the week, conducted a contest to determine the most popular railroad man's daughter. Voting was on coupons printed in the paper and obtainable also at the theatre and a prize of $500 was awarded to the winner. The presentation was made at Warners Theatre by Miss Dorothy Herzog, motion picture editor of the Mirror.

A street parade preceding the opening Saturday night helped draw Broadway throngs to the theatre. Automobiles equipped with radio sets and carrying a display of organs, these ranging from the most primitive hand-organ obtainable to the latest make of instrument which could be transported, paraded up and down Broadway between Warners Theatre and Times Square, causing such a congestion that police reserves had to be sent.

Before the formal opening "Les" Steven's orchestra played on the marquee of the theatre, and Herman Heller, Warner musical director, delighted the open-air audience by appearing before it and directing the musicians in one jazz number.

The radio rendered effective service, not only in broadcasting advance announcements of plans for the opening night, but in carrying far outside of New York City such of the attractions as were enjoyable to the ear. H. M. Warner made an address describing to hundreds of thousands of "fans" throughout the country the policies of the Warner Bros. organizatin. The radio concert had barely started before this telephone message came from South Dartmouth, Mass., the home of Coloned E. H. R. Green, railroad magnate and son of the late Mrs. Hettie Green: "Your orchestra is the finest we have ever heard."

First Buster Brown Comedy Listed for Release by Century

"EDUCATING BUSTER," the first of the Buster Brown-Century Comedies, starring little Arthur Trimble in a screen adaptation of R. F. Outcault's famous newspaper comics, is featured in the September release of the Century Film Corporation. This comedy is the beginning of the long heralded Buster Brown Comedies, twelve of which are to be released by Century through Universal exchanges during the coming year.

This comedy has had pre-release showings in many important first-run theatres throughout the country. It is hailed as one of the best two-reel offerings of the current season, and a very promising beginning for the Buster Brown series. Included in the big theatres where this comedy has been reported as very successful are the Granada Theatre, San Francisco; the Forum Theatre in Los Angeles, the Ohio Theatre in Indianapolis, the State Theatre in Minneapolis, the Piccadilly Theatre in Rochester and over the Loew's Circuit in New York City.

Among the other Century releases for the month are "Stranded," starring Edna Marian; "Officer 13," starring Eddie Gordon; "Too Much Mother-in-Law," starring Constance Darling, and "Cupid's Victory," starring Wanda Wiley.

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Pitcure World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

A Suggestion

From a West Coast city comes the following suggestion, which seems to me to have real value, always provided some plan could be evolved for keeping the record with the film. That apparently is the "bug" in that particular jug of cream. The good brother, who prefers to remain unknown, says:

Doubtless the following has been thought of, tried out and perhaps found to be wanting, but anyhow here is the idea: When a print is put into service, send with it a small book suitable for the proposed record, and substantially bound. On each page let this blank be printed:

Name of theatre.....
Number times print is projected.....
Condition of print.....
Faults, if any, in mechanical condition of film .....
.....
.....
Number of days used in theatre.....
Name of { Projectionist, if any.....
{ Machine Operator .....

Would Have Value

Such a record would have large value in several ways; also it would certainly tend to cause both projectionists and machine operators to be at least somewhat more careful about sending in pinned-together splices. The record might even go further and tell whether or not the production "went well" with audiences, though I guess exchanges would not stand for that, unless the reports be at least mostly good. The "Projectionist, if any—Machine Operator" is designed to permit the man in charge of projection to classify himself. If he really thinks he is merely the operator of a machine and no more, then it is well that he put that fact down. If he has pride in his work, and in the business in which he is engaged, then let him signify that fact by declaring himself as something more than a mere machine operator or attendant.

But whoa! wait a minute! I've grabbed the bit in my teeth and started to run off with the works. Our correspondent had not nearly finished. He continues as follows:

Better Projection Pays

$5 Penalty

The projectionist, or machine operator, as the case may be, shall be required to fill out the blank and return the record with the film, on penalty of a charge of five dollars against the theatre for failure so to do.

If this system were put into operation with every new print, from the time it is released or put into service until it finally is scrapped, the exchange would have a full, complete record and check on their films, and would be able to locate the theatres which persistently damage them, as well as having a record of the kinds of damage done to it in various theatres.

Too Much Buck-Passing

There is altogether too much of this "What-the-h——l-do-I-care" feeling among both projectionists and machine operators. This is in good measure due to the fact that they very well know that those who use the films after them don't know who was responsible for damage done to them. They don't even know who ran them before, hence they say: "What the (deleted by censor) do I care. I'm through with them, and no one but the exchange will ever even know I've used them. The gink before me razzed them all up, so why should I take care of them?"

Even now the exchanges cannot seem to find out who is responsible for the punching and scratching of the films. It is the most simple thing in the world to find out such a thing as that, but they, the exchanges, don't seem to give a (more deletion) about it either. With such a written report as I have suggested, kept from the time Mr. or Miss Film is born, until it finally goes to film heaven or—some place else, it would be very simple to locate the cause and rip (deleted again) out of 'em chaps.

Another Good One

Another thing—Do you think the time will ever come when there will be inserted in the exchange's contract with the exhibitor a clause to the effect that the exchange will have the right to refuse service to any theatre which does not keep its projection equipment in good repair? And when, oh, when, will some one come out with a governor which may be placed on any projector, under lock, key and seal, which will prevent using any sped of projection in excess of ninety (90) feet of film per minute? This business of jamming film through a couple of ancient vintage projectors at the rate of 115 feet per minute—which I have to do every now and again—is just plain CRAZY. I don't give one single tinker's damn about the projectors, because they are wrecks anyhow, and the sooner they go blooey altogether the quicker I'll get some new ones, but all the same it is darned tough on the nerves.

Real Ideas

It would be interesting to know just why this man desires to remain unknown. He is a man with real ideas. Not all of them are good—well, neither are all of yours or mine, either, my more or less gentle reader. If it is—oh, well, why speculate on why it is? It is a shame that any man should for any reason on earth feel obliged to exercise his right of free speech through fear of trouble from any source whatsoever, always provided he confines his talk to things which may be discussed with propriety, and that he argues for what he believes to be right.

I can well remember when the man who advocated union labor was immediately in hot water up to his neck. He was denounced, had a hard time getting any sort of a job at all, and often was obliged to go into new fields, where he was not known, in order to be able to earn a living for himself. Yes, that was well within my own time.

The suggestions proposed are, in my judgment, all excellent, BUT because of the indifference of exchanges they are mostly impracticable. If exchanges really put that book scheme into operation and MADE IT OPERATE, believe you me it would do more than any other one thing I know of to make men careful with film, or at least so I believe.

Too Much Speed

The governor idea is another most excellent, impractical thing, because exhibitors and machine operators, or many of them anyhow, WANT to jam 'em through.

Last week (July 28) I paid an admission

Dear Sir and Bro.:-

THIRD LARGEST PROJECTIONISTS LOCAL IN AMERICA

The above is a cut of the letterhead of the Los Angeles Local 150, I. A. T. S. E. and M. P. M. O. which was omitted from the story which appears on page 200 of Sept. issue.

to Poli's Theatre in New London, Connecticut. Being a paying patron of the theatre, I have the right to criticise the goods I bought. The vaudeville (it is a vaudeville-motion picture house) was fair to excellent. The production was good, or would have been BUT the musicians' stands set up glare spots which almost put one's eyes out, and there are other utterly useless heavy glare spots besides. This, bad as it was, might have been endured, BUT the production was "jammed through" at race-horse speed—at from, I would say, 110 to 120 feet per minute.

All this of course pretty nearly utterly ruined the entertainment value of the motion picture end of things.

From Texas

From Lufkin, Texas, Roy Saxon, who now is Chief Projectionist for the Lufkin Amusement Company, Lufkin, Texas, sends the following interesting letter:

Dear Brother Richardson: Guess you will be surprised to hear from me at this place. My wife and myself came here in 1920, worked eighteen months, went away, came back, went away again and now we are here once more and think we will stay.

This theatre (The Palace) and the Victory are owned and operated by the Lufkin Amusement Company, and they have given me charge of projection in both of them. We have no Sunday shows, as we did where I have been, and as I am much interested in the Bluebook School, as is also the projectionist at the Victory Theatre, we are going to get together Sundays, and you may look for two new "scholars" real soon. (Letter dated July 12 and I don't remember seeing anything from Lufkin, Lone Star State, yet —Ed.)

Butchered Films

I am attaching a few film samples to show you how some machine operators in this section of the country BUTCHER films. You will note that one piece was taken from the beginning of part five. Will you be good enough to tell me why in h——l even the boobiest boob machine operator of them all punched holes in the beginning of a reel of film??? (Probably was last end of party until transposed in reel doubling.—Ed.)

As to friend Ballou's letter, published recently, I agree with him that a small indentation at the frame line would be good. All Universal, F. B. O., Educational and one other we get from Dallas exchanges are made that way, but I got one from Pathe which had even that beat. The frame line extended out even with the outside of the sprocket holes. This makes splicing on fade-ins and fade-outs easy.

"Inspection Seal"

I attach a sticker called an "Inspection Seal." This I hold to be a good stunt, because with that seal attached, if there is any mechanical fault present in the film we know exactly who to blame for it. (It is a small sticker saying that the production was inspected by (signature of inspector) on (date).—Ed.)

Just recently we received a print from First National in pretty bad shape. It had one of the seals attached. Was obliged to make quite some repairs in it before projection, so I removed one of the "seals" and gave it to the manager, together with several samples of faults cut out of the print. Our manager sent the whole business to the exchange manager, and we got a very prompt reply assuring us that it would NOT happen again—and it has not, though we have had several productions from them since. They have all been in first class condition.

Oh yes, I nearly forgot to say that I sold my Bluebook before I left Benito, intending to order another when I arrived here. Upon arrival, however, THE MANAGER PRESENTED ME WITH ONE, SAYING: "THIS IS A PART OF THE REGULAR PROJECTION ROOM EQUIPMENT. SHOULD YOU LEAVE, RETURN IT TO MY OFFICE," which I call real progressiveness.

Union Progressive

Before closing let me say a few words about unions. There have been some things published which have not looked very good for the organization. I am a member of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., Local Union No. 604, Corpus Christi, Texas, and I will say that I have never met a more congenial, progressive bunch than the men in our local.

At the time I was initiated there was another projectionist with me, and from the day we joined we swore we would work harder constantly to better ourselves in the profession we love. I don't know quite what it was, Frank (Pardon the familiarity, but to me you are just an old friend), but something inside me just seemed to say: "You are a union man now, so it is up to you to be one hundred per cent perfect, and a credit to the organization. And I am striving to improve myself and to be just that. It is a fact that before joining the union I had no such feeling as that, and I say to any man, be he projectionist or operator, if you propose to follow this line of work, and make it your profession, get into the I. A., stick to it and follow its teachings.

Union O. K.

It is possibly natural that men think I sometimes pan the organization—the union. That is NOT true. The union is all right. I was a union man first in 1884, and was right smack in the middle of the fight in the days when it WAS a fight. I have carried a card ever since, and expect to until I die. Also I am honorary member of I don't know how many locals of the I. A., and also (unless "ornery memberships" expire—I don't know about that) of the United Mine Workers of America, the (Don't laugh) Cooks' and Waiters' International Alliance, the Western Federation of Miners and some others. So you see I am very much a union man, and always have been, BUT the "yes man" is not always your best friend, and when I see something that needs correction I grab it by the coat collar and drag it out into the light of day. Evil flourishes best when hidden, you know.

As a general proposition it is NOT the union I criticize, but the wrong things done by union men. I have felt compelled to criticize Chicago somewhat unmercifully in the past. UNDER THE SAME CONDITIONS I WOULD DO IT AGAIN, because what I saw was WRONG. It was not Local 110 that was wrong, but certain of its members who were in power. They well knew the things I criticized were, and that they themselves were wrong. They could have remedied them if they wanted to. My real criticism was of those men, NOT of the union itself, which contains many splendid men and high class projectionists and—some frightful dubs, just as is the case with every big union in a big city. True, I named the union, but it really was the responsible men in it.

If all union men felt as you do, there soon would be no criticism, because there would be no need for it. It is terribly unpleasant to criticize unions, in the forefront of whose battles I was for years—and that is no idle bunch of words either. It makes bitter enemies, and is in every way disagreeable, but am I to be a coward and fail in what I firmly believe to be my DUTY because it is unpleasant to be honest and DO MY PLAIN DUTY?

Like a Boost

I most sincerely hope the time will come when I can honestly praise the work of every union man—when every union man will feel it his duty to make his work a real credit to the organization.

As to the film matters, the samples are of the old punch or scratch mark outrage. They are very bad.

I might add that Saxon has the reputation of being a projectionist of enterprise and ability, while his wife is a pianist of marked accomplishment. She helps make music to accompany what her husband displays upon the screen, so that we might almost say they are joined by a band of light, though mean ones might say he throws houses and people and things at her and—always misses her.

Bluebook School

Question No. 368.—This is a question submitted by Messrs. Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, B. C. I hesitated before admitting it. At first it seemed perhaps not adapted to this series, but then, after all, is not any question which may cause the men to think on practical problems a proper one for this "school?" I think it is. The question submitted is: "The driving motor of a motion picture projector (they say "projection machine" which is improper—Ed.), is marked 1-8 horsepower. Three amperes. Working this out shows the motor to be only 28.4 per cent. efficient. Is not this an exceptionally low efficiency for a motor?

Question No. 369—In just what way do fuses prevent the operation of a faulty circuit?

Question No. 370—What various types of fuse is it permissible to use in theatres?

Question No. 371—What various markings should be stamped on fuses?

Question No. 372—Name all those various points at which fuses should be installed?

Action Approved

Several screen manufacturers have already signified their intention of supplying samples of their surfaces for test, as per our notice of recent date. The Raven Company, New York City; DeVry, of Chicago; C. H. Wertsner, Philadelphia, and The Minusa Cine Screen Company, St. Louis, are the ones we have heard from up to this time.

The Minusa Company expresses approval of the action taken by this department, in the following letter, which is just the position I would expect all screen makers who have real confidence in their goods to take. Minusa says:

Dear Mr. Richardson: We have read, with interest, of your plan for the unbiased comparative test of projection screen surfaces, and heartily endorse your efforts to bring about highest standards of reproduction.

To that end we have always lent ourselves, and it is gratifying to know Moving Picture World has given you its support in this movement.

Too many exhibitors are inclined to slight the screen, and yet they depend upon it, not only for clarity, depth and detail, but also for the final crystallization of pleasing presentation.

Projection has its laws like any other science, and the correct screen of today is specific in construction to fit and serve the needs of the various operating and architectural conditions.

Spots on Screen

From an Alabama city comes this inquiry:

Dear Mr. Richardson: During a heavy wind storm some fine plaster dust blew across our screen. After brushing it off I find there are three small black spots remaining. Will you advise as to how I can remove them? I know of one preparation, but would prefer your advice, and use one of your recommendations, so as to be sure not to ruin our screen.

This brother has not told me what kind of a surface the screen has, hence it is very difficult to advise him. If it is a painted screen (unlikely, I think) I would try rubbing the spots with ordinary chalk, such as is used in schools, mixing just a bit of blue or yellow in it if the paint is tinted. Proceed carefully and you can at least do no harm.

If it is a Kalsomine surface, then wash it off and resurface, unless surface is quite new, since you could hardly hope to match an old surface which is deadened by accumulations from the atmosphere. If it is new, then try chalk, tinted with colored chalks if necessary.

Presumably, however, it is some one of the aluminum surfaced screens, and if so there is nothing you can do except very carefully paint over the spots with aluminum. So much depends upon just what sort of a surface it is, and just what tint (if any) it has, that I can only give you the general outline of what I would try, with the caution that it probably would not work very well.

Aluminum Paint

I would get some ordinary aluminum paint and thin it down QUITE thin. I would try the smallest spot first, painting it lightly and permitting it to dry, observing the effect. If this hides the spot fairly well, but is too bright—as it almost certainly would be—I would rub the spot with my hand, lightly, to dull it, or perhaps I would first dust my palm lightly with something as nearly like the screen surface color as I could find.

Really, there is little I can tell you, except to just use horse sense and proceed very carefully. I don't think you can entirely hide the spots, nor do I believe any preparation will remove them, provided they have entered into the surface. If they are on the surface only (unlikely), you could probably remove them by lightly rubbing with high power gasoline—meaning by that, NOT the ordinary commercial gasoline, but a sort you can get at the drug store.

To sum this whole matter up, I don't believe you can entirely hide the spots, but I do believe you can materially reduce their prominence by proceeding carefully and using good sense. Before you start, if you do, show this to your manager and get his consent to experiment. Then try one spot—the smallest or least prominent—first. Next time you ask advice on such a matter give FULL particulars. I am probably fifteen hundred miles away, and cannot possibly know them unless you tell me.

Vacationing?

Frank K. Dehaney, who is a member of Frederick, Maryland, local union 533, gets busy with a typewriter (machine) as follows:

It is long since I have written to the department. I have been on the road with the "Music Box Revue," as assistant carpenter. Just now I am "vacationing" at home here in Birmingham, in the gr-r-r-rand old state of Alabama, as projectionist at the "Norwood Theatre," a suburban house, a description of the equipment of which was printed in a recent issue of the World.

My stay at home has been made most pleasant by the officers and members of local union 236, I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., of which I was a former member, as well as by the exhibitor-owner of the theatre where I am employed, Mr. Ben Jaffe.

And right here let me return the compliment by saying that Mr. Jaffe understands the importance of real projection, and anything the projectionist asks for is his for the asking, provided, of course, that unreasonable requests are avoided. It is a pleasure to work for such managers as Mr. Jaffe, because they give every co-operation toward better projection.

A Godsend

To you, Mr. Richardson, I want to say that Mr. Jaffe owns a copy of the Bluebook, and it has been a literal Godsend to me in my attempt to "come back" in projection. Without its help I would have been a failure. It has been five years since I have been in the "Operating Room," as we used to call it, and you may imagine the improvements and changes I found, and the position I was in, and how the Bluebook came to my aid.

Before leaving Birmingham I want to send you a story of the Loew "Temple Theatre" projection department. The Temple is the motion picture theatre de luxe here. I haven't collected all the data as yet, but if you wish it I will get busy, as the men in other cities might be interested.

The "Music Box" opens in Brooklyn September 28. If you can find time why not come over and visit me during our stay on the "Wrong Side of the Bridge?"

Let Me Know

If you will remind me at the time, I will try to do it, but I don't know, as I usually stay at the summer home up in Connecticut until November first, and only get down to the Big Town once in two weeks, and when I do come I've more business than five chipmunks. What time I have to spare I'm busy palling around with Friend Daughter.

Sure, I'll be glad to have the story of the Loew Temple Theatre projection department, together with photographs of the projectionists if possible. You are hereby instructed and fully deputized, authorized and empowered to get just as busy as you care to on that matter.

I addressed the Birmingham men once upon a time. Please give them my best regards. As to the Bluebook, well, you are not by any manner of means the first one it has helped, but I'm glad you received benefit.

My best respects to Manager Jaffe. It is refreshing to know of theatre managers who appreciate good work on the part of the projectionist, and who are willing to give practical co-operation to him in his work. They are men who really see and know that BETTER PROJECTION PAYS.

S. M. P. E. Fall Meeting

Well, gentlemen, I hope you are all getting ready to attend the fall meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, at Lakewood Farms Inn, Roscoe, New York, October 5-6-7 and 8. You'd better, for it's going to be a banner meeting, both in the matter of interesting business program and entertainment.

You who attended the 1924 meeting at Lakewood Farms Inn know what a humdinger of a time we all had, and what a splendid meeting it was from the engineering standpoint, so let your watchword be, "I'll meet you at Lakewood Farms Inn in October." Bring your ladies. There will be a good time for them while we hemales are attending to business, and other times, too.

Bluebook School Answers 339 to 343

Note: Brother Saxon, Lufkin, Texas, had correct replies here for the series but they were overlooked. Apologies.

Question No. 339—This question was badly balled up, either by Honorable Self or the printer. Probably myself. It should have read: "Do you consider it practicable to reduce and regulate the current of a series type motor generator used for motion picture projection so that slides may be projected, either when it is necessary or unnecessary to burn the arc of the other motion picture projector at the same time, by means of the field rheostat? In this we will assume that the necessary reduction is from 75 to 30 amperes, and that the machine is a 75-75 ampere capacity one.

A. L. Fell, Collingswood, New Jersey, Ray Guaezy, Paducah, Kentucky; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa, G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama, made fair to good answers to this one. They all seemed to understand what I really meant, and some credit is due them for that, the crazy way the question was worded.

Fell says:

My answer to this question is, no! Though a constant current generator is provided with a field rheostat which may be used to regulate the relative intensities of the armature and field, thus within certain limits varying the current output, its function is primarily to aid in maintaining a constant current strength by compensating for variations in the arc potentials. While this function may be extended to include the raising or lowering of the current considerably beyond the rated capacity of the machine, it cannot be expected to perform with any degree of satisfaction over so wide a range as the question suggests.

I had intended to submit this matter to the engineering department of the Hertner Electric Company, the General Electric or the Westinghouse for the absolutely correct dope, but was so very busy that I neglected it. However, I think Brother Fell has summed the matter up very well. My own opinion is that while it might be possible to effect so great a reduction with the field rheostat, it would be at the expense of a heavy electrical strain on the machine, which would operate at very low efficiency.

Saxon says he don't know, but don't think it would be practical. However, he says, the Bluebook says that is what a field rheostat is for—to regulate current flow, so???

Yes, brother, that is what it is for; also a locomotive is to pull cars, but you would hardly expect is to pull a thousand of them.

Doe says:

I am not certain that such a current reduction could be accomplished with the field rheostat on a constant current machine such as a series arc type generator. If it could, then certainly it would only be done with very low efficiency, and would, I think, be rather hard on the machine itself. Certainly it would not be possible to run one arc at 30 and the other at 75 amperes, when the two of them must operate in series. I think you tried to trip us there, Rich.

Guaezy says:

I do not consider it practical to regulate the current output of a series arc generator over such a wide range as that suggested by means of the field rheostat and get good results. It however is possible to reduce to fifty, or even to forty-five, with fair results on this type of generator, by using the field resistance.

Going a bit outside the actual question, the only really practical way to reduce from 75 to 30 would, it seems to me, be to connect a parallel or shunt resistance across the arc used for stero work. With such resistance it would be possible to get any desired or required reduction of amperage at the arc; also the other arc could be used, since the total amperage would be 75 just the same while if the field resistance be used, the amperage of both arcs is necessarially reduced in the same amount, since both take juice from the same generator and operate in series.

Which is an answer demonstrating that brother Gueazy has a very fair knowledge of the matter.

I think we will let it go at that. The question was not asked right in the first place; also I am not myself certain that the field rheostat of such a machine would function over such a wide range, and if it did the results certainly would not be good. Also an extended use would not be good for the machine itself as it certainly would induce heating.

Question No. 340—What is meant by a "field coil," and what does it do? What is the practical effect of increasing current flow through the field coil?

Gueazy, Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; Roy Saxon, Lufkin, Texas; Hanover, Fell, Guimond, C. O. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa, and W. C. Budge, Springfield Gardens, Long Island, all replied correctly.

Henning says:

A field coil is wire wound or coiled around the magnet, so that the iron of the magnet forms the core of the coil. Its function is to excite the magnet, which means to build up its magnetic strength. This, in turn, has the effect of strengthening the magnetic field in which the generator armature operates. The excitation may be carried to a point where the iron of the magnet is "saturated" with magnetic force, which is the maximum possible limit for that machine.

The practical effect of increasing the current flow through the field coils is to excite the magnet, increase the density of the magnetic field, thus causing the armature coils to cut a greater number of magnetic lines of force, and therefore be capable of producing a greater current flow.

Good answer, gentlemen. Henning knows what he is talking about. He understands the electro magnetic action involved, which is what every man who presumes to handle motors and generators should do.

Fell answers it thusly:

Field coils are the coils of insulated wire wound upon the field magnet, or magnets of a dynamo. They are the medium employed to excite the field magnet, or magnets, of a dynamo or motor. The object is to provide the number of ampere turns of excitation required to produce the magnetic flux through the armature to enable it to produce the desired E. M. F. under conditions of operation. The practical effect of increasing current flow through the field coils is to strengthen the magnetic field, thus causing the armature coils to cut through a more dense magnetic flux, and be able to generate or reproduce a greater amount of electric power.

The replies of all the others named were essentially the same as those quoted, except for the variation in wording, except Doe, who I think put the matter very well indeed. He said: "An integral part of the construction of every dynamo is one or more "field magnets," the purpose of which is to create and maintain the magnetic field necessary to E. M. F. and current production. Such magnets, even though 'permanent magnets,' would of themselves generate a field entirely too weak for the production of electric power on a commercial basis. If they be not permanent magnets, then they could produce no magnetic field at all through their operation in a natural state.

"However, it has been found that if wires be wound around a magnet, but insulated therefrom, and an electric current be passed through the winding, then the permanent magnet is 'excited,' and its magnetic action made stronger, while the iron having no magnetism is also 'excited' and charged with magnetism through the action of the current. It has also be found that up to the point where the magnet is thoroughly saturated with magnetism and will therefore receive no more, the greater the number of times the wire is wound around the magnet, up to certain limits, and the greater the number of amperes passed through the turns of wire, the more dense will the field set up by the magnet be. These coils of wire are termed the 'field coil' or 'field coils.'

"The iron of the magnet forms the core of the field coils, and the purpose of the field coils is to carry the current which will excite the magnet, and build up its magnetic strength.

"The practical effect of increasing current flow through the field coils, assuming that the magnet is not already built up to the point of saturation, in which case increased current flow would merely represent waste, is to increase the density of the magnet field, thus enabling the armature coils to cut a greater number of lines of magnetic force, which increases its capacity for electric power production."

Which same I call about as good and complete an answer as any one could wish for.

Question No. 341—May an electric generator have more than two poles, or more than one field winding?

Saxon says:

Yes. A generator may have as many poles as deemed necessary or desirable by its designer.

Thoreau and Clark say:

Yes, a generator may have more than two poles. It may be bi-polar or multi-polar. It can have but one field winding, which may be "series," "shunt" or "compound."

Guaezy says:

There may be two, four, six or more poles, arranged in alternate order around the armature of the generator. Yes, one class of generator may have two windings, viz.: the compound wound machine. The compound wound dynamo field magnet is wound with two distinct windings, or sets of coils, one set connected in series with the load and one in shunt or parallel with the armature and external circuit.

See, men, how easy it is to trip. Thoreau and Clark mentioned the compound winding, and I think knew very well that it was a distinct, separate winding. They just "didn't think," and that is one thing this school is for, viz.: to make men study and THINK. There, Vancouver, accept that slap on the wrist and—sin no more.

Henning gives a particularly excellent answer, as follows:

A generator may have as many sets of poles as its designer may deem necessary for the accomplishment of the purpose of its designer. When the number of poles is increased their size is decreased. Increase in the number of poles reduces the heating effect because of the fact that the unit amount of pole surface is increased. The types of machine that the projectionist has to do with can have but one field winding.

That last is a correct statement, and is therefore an addition to what brother Guaezy said.

Question No. 342—Suppose you have a motor generator set which is quite old. Its

One Thing More

In your modern motion picture house every detail of projection, decoration, ventilation, temperature, seating, has been carefully worked out to make the theatre attractive and comfortable.

But there's one thing more you can do—and it's a real factor from the box office point of view: make sure the picture is printed on Eastman Positive Film, the film that safeguards for the screen the quality of the negative so your public may enjoy it.

Eastman film is identified in the margin by the black-lettered words "Eastman" and "Kodak"

EASTMAN KODAK COMPANY

ROCHESTER, N. Y.

generator commutator has been turned up, and is apparently in excellent condition, yet the brushes spark excessively and continuously, and the whole commutator heats unduly. Where would you expect to find the trouble?

Gosh, this simple thing stumped every darned one of them except Guaezy and Budge. Brother Budge evidently appreciates the fact that this is essentially a Bluebook school, and got busy with the book. He says: "We turn to page 456, paragraph (e), of the Bluebook which tells us that the commutator segments are wedge-shape, so that as the commutator is turned down they become more narrow, whereupon the brushes, which are designed to fit the commutator bars when they have normal width, cover too much space with relation to the segment width, which sets up sparking."

Guaezy replies thus:

When a motor generator set is new, the generator commutator is in the condition which provides the current relation between brush thickness and commutator segment width. The brushes are made of a width which will just span a certain circumferential distance on the commutator, and thus cover whatever width of segment surface it is designed that they cover in that particular design of machine. The maintainance of this condition, approximately at least, is essential to non-sparking.

Of course, the segments being to a certain extent wedge-shape, as they are turned down their surface width is decreased whereupon the brushes cover too much segment.

There are, of course, many other causes for persistent sparking. An open circuit in the armature will cause it, as well as heating, but just the same under the conditions I would expect to find the trouble in decreased segment width.

No one even mentioned heating in connection with turning down, but it is a fact that commutator bars have been turned down so thin that when the machine was working at full capacity the bars got hot through combined brush friction and current overload.

Question No. 343—What is the practical effect of additional poles, over and above two, in a motor generator?

Guaezy says:

The practical effect of added poles over and above two is that the consequent subdivision of the magnetic flux makes less material necessary in both armature and magnets, and this permits of a more complete radiating of heat, with a consequentially cooler running machine. The increased area of surface per unit of volume in each magnet pole and winding provides more radiating surface; also the armature may have less coils and revolve more slowly for the same current output than is the case with the machine having the lesser number of poles.

Thoreau and Clark say:

(A) Constant brush position. (B) Constant speed with variable load. (C) Reversal without changing position of brushes. (D) Momentary overload without sparking. (E) Operation at variable speeds. The practical effect is that self induction in the coil actually in commutation, which hinders the reversal of the current, is corrected by the inner poles, as they set up a field in a direction which causes a reversal of the current while it is short circuited by the brushes, so that as it, the coil, leaves the brushes, it has a current flowing in the right direction.

Fell puts it briefly, though perhaps not quite completely as to detail. He says: "The practical effect of additional poles over and above two is to serve to secure a given E. M. F. with a lower armature speed and a less massive machine."

So that's that.

Which?

Eugene L. Sledgeman, Melbourne, Australia, writes from that far-off land, as follows:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Your "Bluebook" of projection certainly has helped out a lot in this country. It really is about all we have to depend upon, except the projection department, which we manage to get hold of more or less occasionally.

Things are moving along here about as of old, except that each year sees improvement—or at least I think so. The big pictures you have objected to still prevail. I believe you are correct in maintaining that the smaller picture is best, but once people get used to a thing they pretty much don't like to change. If all Australian theatres reduced the size of their pictures to say eighteen feet wide, there might be soom squawk for a bit, but soon the patrons would get used to it and like it better than the present rather absurd dimensions.

An Argument

But the real reason for this letter is: I have had an argument. I am sure I am right, but am appealing to you to settle the matter, even though it means a longish wait. The question is this:

Allowing that the rheostat (alternating current supply) is much more wasteful in its operation, is it not also the fact that the transformer current supplies a better screen illumination?

One party contends that there is no difference between rheostat and transformer, in the matter of screen illumination, provided the amperage in both cases be equal. The other claims the transformer not only is almost fifty percent less wasteful, but also it supplies current which gives a more satisfactory screen illumination. Which is right?"

I thoroughly agree that you have analyzed the big picture situation correctly. In my opinion, you have said about all that could possibly be said in that matter, and are 100 percent right.

This department once had quite a correspondence with Australian projectionists, but it finally dwindled and almost stopped, more because of the time required to receive replies to questions than anything else, I think. However, one of you Kangaroo chaps, and you New Zealanders, too, might drop a line once in a while, just to let us know you're alive and kicking.

As to the rheostat and transformer, while I could not even offer a decent guess as to why it is so, it nevertheless is so that an arc taking current taken through a transformer (Inductor, Economizer, etc.) gives distinctly better, more satisfactory screen illumination, than does one taking A. C. through a rheostat. It is also a fact that an arc taking current through a choke coil has an entirely unsatisfactory tone from an arc taking current through transformer or rheostat. It is of a blueish tint, and I think contains a tremendous percentage of ultra violet rays.

No, please DON'T ask me why. I don't know, and have never found anyone who does. I used them all in the old days, though, and I know it is so. Light from an arc taking alternating current through a rheostat has a distinctly harsher tone than light from an arc taking current through a transformer. If any one feels able to offer any lucid explanation of this peculiar thing, let him stand forth and be heard. I've asked that many times in the past, but up to now no one has had the termerity to offer an explanation.

Let me convey to the projectionists of Australia my continued regards and good wishes. I'd like to visit your country mighty well, but its too darned far away—altogether too far!

Neglect of Duty

I have repeatedly asked projectionists using reflector type lamps to advise me as to their experiences with them. I have had many letters complaining of weaknesses in these lamps, but in every case non-publication has been requested or stipulated.

Has it never occurred to you, my brother, that you owe it to the profession and to your brother projectionists, as well as to the exhibitor and the lamp maker himself, to set forth, FOR PUBLICATION, such merits and faults as you find in new equipment—your exact experience with it?

Of course the manufacturer might not relish the publication of weak spots or other faults you may find, or trouble you may have with his apparatus, BUT you have never found him objecting to publication of the good points—of praise of his apparatus, have you? I'll say you have—NOT! Well, it is an old "saw" that it is a darned punk rule which won't work BOTH ways, and believe you me the one best way to cause weakness to be overcome is to grab them by the scruff of the neck and drag them right smack out into the light o' day.

This department and its editor may be depended upon to treat the manufacturer fairly, and not to publish a single uncorroborated statement of fault.

YOU Owe It

YOU owe it to the profession from which your bread and butter, hot cakes, honey, excursions, milk for the baby and shoes for the wife comes to help in matters of this sort. YOU and YOUR boss may be prevented from being stung with faulty equipment by what some other fellow has to say who has used that equipment. That would be just fine, wouldn't it? Well, how about YOU doing YOUR duty, and helping the other feller a bit? We don't want just praise or roasts, but a statement of exactly what your experience has been with the reflector type lamp—the reflector type lamp because it still is too new to be thoroughly known or understood.

Box office value of premiere showings of

A 100% Showmanship Program!

That's the promise made exhibitors in the announcement of our great product from the Cecil B. De Mille, Al Christie, Metropolitan, Marshall Neilan, Frances Marion, George Melford, and other units which are contributing to the greatest program of independent productions ever released under one banner.

The premiere showings of the first three releases on this super-showmanship program justify all advance claims. "They will coin the good old shekels," is the keynote of the reviews of these productions.

"HELL'S HIGHROAD," starring Leatrice Joy, had its West Coast premiere at the Forum Theatre, Los Angeles, August 22. The New York premiere took place at B. S. Moss's Colony Theatre, August 23rd.

"SEVEN DAYS" had its New York premiere Sunday, August 30, at the Colony.

"THE COMING OF AMOS" had its first showing at the Colony, September 6.

The unanimous verdict of New York and Los Angeles reviewers was, that each and every one of these pictures combined extraordinary entertainment value with box office appeal of assured showmanship value.

IT WILL TAKE YOU FOUR MINUTES TO READ THIS

BEGIN HERE

The majority of our first run accounts are sold.

We are "set" in practically every important spot in the United States.

And we haven't played second fiddle to anybody.

Our representation, so far, is as good as the best.

Before long it will be the best.

You know the reason.

It's because, we're not only big, but because we're constantly growing bigger.

Is this exaggeration?

You know it isn't.

We're delivering.

And why are we delivering?

The answer is this:

We know what it's all about.

We're showmen.

We know that an exhibitor has to make money on the attraction he plays—

That in order to do so, he has to show something in his ads., in his electric lights, and on the screen, that draws.

There's such a thing as the public.

We're out to boost ourselves, to increase the stock of our name, and all that, but—

We know that in last analysis, trademark or no trademark, good salesmanship or not, that the thing that a theatre needs is a good show.

We're aggressive, progressive, and we're overlooking no bets.

We cash in on angles.

And our biggest angle is to make you cash in.

That's that.

But to explain.

The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Studio in Culver City, California, is no place to have an afternoon tea.

It's a beehive of industry.

They're scheming things out all day long in that place. And our distributing organization is relaying the results, and adding a finishing touch of service.

For instance, we know the public likes stars.

We went and got 'em.

So that—

There isn't a week that you can't flash a big name in the lights.

Our first pictures of the season have Lon Chaney, Norma Shearer, Lillian Gish, Ramon Novarro, Marion Davies.

"The Unholy Three," (a bigger "Miracle Man").

"A Slave of Fashion" (Clothes).

"Romola" (The Gish Sisters).

"The Midshipman" (You read the front pages).

"Lights of Old Broadway" (Remember "Little Old New York").

"Pretty Ladies" (A Revue in Pictures).

"Never the Twain Shall Meet" (Breaking Records).

Look these over.

Each has a star, each is a good picture, each has an exploitation angle.

And that's our policy.

It's showmanship that brings over Erte, the great fashion creator, and gives his production the title "Paris."

It's a sense of the public that makes us do a picture called "The Mystic" which exposes fake spiritualists with their table-tapping.

It's a knowledge of what pleases the eye that makes us put technicolor sequences in our productions, and do the Sabatini story "Bardelys The Magnificent" entirely in color with John Gilbert as the star.

It's showmanship that inspires such stunts as America's first transcontinental trackless train.

And the opening of "The Merry Widow" on Broadway as a two dollar attraction with the society celebrity Gloria Gould as the managing directress of the theatre.

We have tricks up our sleeve constantly.

As the days wear on we're unfolding them one by one.

For you to cash in on.

So

It's good showmanship for you too, isn't it to hitch your wagon to

More stars than there are in Heaven—

The talk of the industry.

The
WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

TWO pictures presented recently on Broadway offer an unusual instance of widely varying production problems. In "The Pony Express" and "The Phantom of the Opera" we have meat for intensely interesting study by any close follower of screen entertainment.

Both pictures are undoubtedly set for wide popular success. Both, measured by the dollar-and-cents yardstick, will undoubtedly roll up rental grosses and box office figures placing them in line with the biggest of the past.

But it is on the purely technical side of picture making that they offer their most interesting phases.

"THE PONY EXPRESS," in a sentence, presents the supreme test of "business," incident, human touches, character portrayals, and an underlying patriotic theme, being called upon to put over a picture that strangely never seems to get down to the business of telling a story.

The audience reaction at Broadway's Rialto and Rivoli bears witness to the fact that the human interest angle touches DO put it over. And once more reiterate a fact that picture critics are prone to forget, that on the screen it is not so much the story you present as it is the basic IDEA and the manner of its presentation.

Try as you will you will find it difficult to find a story in "The Pony Express" that measures up to your notion of what dramatic plot should be. As you try, you are probably going through the same process that James Cruze followed in preparing his story.

The shrewd director met his problem and conquered it with a Wallace Beery, an Ernest Torrence, and a heavy emphasis on the facts of history that disarms any puerile critic seeking a story.

The critic may continue his sniffing, but audiences will continue their chuckling at Beery and Torrence, the while they feel a virtuous patriotic glow over their excursion into history.

AT the other extreme: "Phantom of the Opera." An example of a picture that is going over big because it is STORY, chock full of story, aiming as a story should at a SINGLE EFFECT—and achieving it.

Direction that is rough hewn, characters painted with broad, hasty strokes, little time for the intimate touches because there is the pell mell urge of a STORY. No time for faint, delicate strokes, because there are punches to be given room, and all leading up to a slam bang PUNCH.

Audience meat here, too.

Two extremes in method here, "The Pony Express" and "Phantom of the Opera." Two extremely interesting studies in picture making. Study them—and study the audiences that will flock to enjoy them.

A FURTHER thought on the method of "The Pony Express." We encountered Arvid Gillstrom, young veteran of comedy production, in the Astor lobby. And learned that he is associated with the Gloria Swanson unit now making what the sharps are forecasting as the biggest picture of her career.

It seemed hard to understand until we thought over the lesson of "The Pony Express." Gloria Swanson and Allan Dwan, directing her picture, are not going to forget the intimate, the bit of "business," the "gag" if we must label it plainly.

So they call in a man who knows his business and also "business." And we are here to wager that the results will be seen on the screen.

To the all-around credit of Allan Dwan, Gloria Swanson, and the Sennett alumnus—Arvid Gillstrom.

Famous Players-Balaban and Katz Theatre Merger Biggest in World

Walker Wins

Filmdom in Greater New York is rejoicing over the success at the primaries and consequent nomination of Senator James J. Walker on the regular Democratic ticket for the post of Manhattan's mayor. Early returns showed that Walker, the friend and active co-worker of the industry had won over John F. Hylan, the present incumbent and aspirant, by an overwhelmingly majority. The Motion Picture Division of the James J. Walker Mayoralty Campaign Committee last week tendered Walker a monster demonstration of its support.

Lieber and Rowland Start Five-Week Tour Abroad

Robert Lieber, president of First National Pictures, and Mrs. Lieber, General Manager Richard A. Rowland and Mrs. Rowland, Miss Gladys McCracken, a niece of the Rowlands, and M. L. Finkelstein of Minneapolis sailed on September 17 on the Deutschland for Europe.

According to present plans, the party will be gone about five weeks during which Mr. Rowland will visit England, France, Austria, Germany and Italy. It is probable that Mr. Lieber will accompany him on part of the tour of the continent, although his principal object in going abroad is to get a needed rest. While in Europe, Mr. Rowland will have an opportunity to visit First National's foreign branches, under the direction of Bruce Johnson, who is carrying out extensive plans for the enlargement of First National activities on the Continent.

With the increasing importance of the foreign market, Mr. Rowland is anxious to make a personal survey of conditions in Europe with a view to securing the best possible distributing channels. During the past year the scope of the foreign department has been greatly increased and the sales both in Europe and the Orient have been far in excess of any previous period.

ALBANY FILM ROW OUTING

About 118 men and women connected with the Film Row of Albany, with a scattering of exhibitors from this section of the state, participated in the annual outing of the Albany Film Board of Trade, on Monday, September 14, at Luther's Hotel on Saratoga Lake. Herman Stern, local manager for F. B. O.; J. H. MacIntyre, who handles the Famous Players exchange here, and Jack Krause, manager for Bond, took charge.

Arthur S. Kane has resigned as "contract" executive for Universal, it was announced this week by that organization. It was learned in this respect that Kane will make his own productions and will release them through Universal.

Franklin Authenticates Reports of Huge Combine Negotiations; Closeted with Sam Katz on Wednesday in Manhattan; Promises Details in Few Days—Say All Theatres Will Be Under Single Unit

By Tom Waller

THE biggest merging of theatre interests in the history of the world is culminating this week from the series of conferences being held at 485 Fifth avenue. Following one of the most important of this series on Wednesday, September 16, Harold B. Franklin, general director of the Famous Players theatre department, made the first official announcement to Moving Picture World on the status of Famous theatres and the tremendous holdings of Balaban and Katz, mid-western circuit kings, under one banner.

Franklin's statement was obtained by the World after he and Sam Katz, Chicago theatre magnate, had been locked in a conference in the Famous headquarters for several hours in the forenoon of September 16. From the statement of Famous' theatre director it is gleaned that the negotiations have been successful and only await the adjusting of a few of the myriad of details before general announcement will be made of the consummation of the entire transaction.

The merger represents millions of dollars in brick and mortar and the most gigantic amalgamation of theatre powers that may ever be recorded.

When asked for details concerning the merger Franklin stated they would be forthcoming within the next few days.

"We do not care to make any statement now," he told the World. "Negotiations are now under way and until things are settled we cannot issue a statement until the proper time."

Asked when the "proper time" would be, Franklin stated possibly late this week but more probably next week.

"As far as things now look there is a good possibility of a merger between Famous Players theatres and the Balaban & Katz houses, isn't there?" the Famous theatre head was interrogated.

"I imagine so. Yes," he replied.

At one of the recent conferences of the Hays organization with the trade press the question of theatre owners and their holdings came up. Then it was stated by C. C. Pettijohn that he believed Famous owned between 1,500 and 1,600 theatres in America.

Franklin, when asked if Famous' holdings as represented in the merger were not between 1,500 and 1,600, replied:

"Oh, no. I would say not over 300 theatres."

"What is the cash investment in these theatres?" Franklin was asked.

"I cannot give any of these details at this time. They will all be covered in the general statement."

Repeated efforts, both over the telephone and by personal visits, to reach Sam Katz at the Hotel Ambassador, where he is staying, proved unavailing.

Moving Picture World was privately advised by its Chicago correspondent that Katz had left for Manhattan last week and that there were repeated reports that in the near future he might make his headquarters in this city.

It has been common knowledge in the trade, both in New York and Chicago circles, that a merging of the Balaban & Katz theatre interests with the houses of Famous Players has been close at hand. Not until this week, and especially Wednesday, with the first official word, did these reports ripen into something material.

after the announcement by Franklin, it is indicated that the Chicago and New York magnates will pool their theatres into one corporation with Sam Katz and Harold B. Franklin as its guardian.

Coming and Going

J. G. Bachmann has returned to New York from the Coast.

E. H. Goldstein of Universal is now on the Coast.

Carl Laemmle is scheduled to sail for Europe late this month.

Gloria Swanson plans to leave next week on a brief vacation in Europe.

Charles H. Christie arrived this week in France.

Frank Ormston, for several years an F. B. O. art director has returned from an extended visit in Europe.

W. J. Morgan sales manager of Producers Distributing Corporation started an extensive sales tour this week, with an itinerary that embraces a visit to all of the company's branches except those in the far west.

United Joins All Film Trade Boards

The Home Office of United Artists Corporation announces that all branch managers of that company have been instructed to apply immediately for membership in all Film Boards of Trade where the corporation has branch offices and where they are not members.

The affiliation of United Artists Corporation managers with Film Boards of Trade at Atlanta, Buffalo, Chicago, Los Angeles, New York, Philadelphia, Pittsburgh and San Francisco, where they are not now members, will make a 100 per cent representation of this organization's managers in every film board of trade where a branch of that corporation is located.

Moberly Loses Fight

Moberly, Mo., is still without Sunday shows. The city council September 10 lacked one vote of the needed six to override the veto of Mayor J. M. Jeffreys of the bill repealing the Sunday closing ordinance.

J. W. Cotter, owner of the Fourth Street Theatre, plans to carry the fight into the courts. He announced he would open for business Sunday, September 13, so that Chief of Police Fleming could arrest him for violating the closing ordinance.

BOSTON HONORS GORDON ON EVE OF OVERSEAS TRIP

A farewell luncheon in honor of Nathan H. Gordon, former head of the Gordon circuit of theatres in New England, was given by more than 100 friends at the Copley-Plaza Hotel in Boston on Friday afternoon, September 11. Mr. Gordon and his family are to leave soon for Europe for a year's sojourn. Nearly all Boston theatre managers and film exchange executives were present.

Some time ago Gordon disposed of his nearly two score theatres to Famous Players after undergoing a major operation, Mr. Gordon's health was impaired considerably and he decided a long tour to Europe might prove beneficial.

SKOURAS PAID $12,810 TAX

Income tax figures released the past week by Internal Revenue Collector Hellmich showed theatres in which Skouras Brothers are interested as big taxpayers. The list showed: Skouras Brothers Enterprises, $12,-810.03; St. Louis Amusement Company, $11,-131.23; The Greater Amusement Company, $2,877.52; Shaw Theatre Company, $1,376.24, and Burland Amusement Company, $2,670.77. During the week Skouras Brothers Enterprises Class A stock reached a new high record on the local exchange, touching 58 points.

Fitzpatrick-McElroy Now Operate 45 Big Theatres

Following close on the recent announcement that Fitzpatrick-McElroy had widened their territory by going outside of Michigan, Illinois and Wisconsin and starting a chain of theatres in Indiana by purchasing four theatres in Michigan City comes a further announcement of the activities of this company in Indiana.

The latest investment, which undoubtedly points to still further announcements in the near future, is at Richmond, Indiana. The new enterprise embraces a long time lease on a theatre to be built by the Quaker City Realty Company. Like the Michigan City deal, Harry Katz, brother of Sam Katz of the Balaban & Katz interests, is associated with Fitzpatrick-McElroy in the Richmond lease.

The new theatre will be a modern fireproof theatre with 1,500 seating capacity and a business block which will far surpass anything of its kind in the State of Indiana. The building will be rushed to completion and it is planned to have it opened by May, 1926.

During the past year Fitzpatrick-McElroy have been rapidly expanding and are now operating about forty-five theatres in the State of Michigan, Illinois, Wisconsin and Indiana.

Nothing to Say Yet

Blair McElroy of the Fitzpatrick-McElroy Circuit says they have no statement to make at the present time regarding the rumored amalgamation of their circuit with others in the Chicago territory. According to reports in the trade, tenders have been made for the circuit by a couple of the large companies.

FRANK ZAMBRENO, PRESIDENT OF THE PROGRESS

Frank Zambreno, President of the Progress Pictures Corporation, who, it has been said numbers more friends among exhibitors than probably any other exchange manager in the United States, has decided to enlarge the scope of his activities by purchasing an interest in two exchanges owned by J. S. Jossey of Cleveland and Cincinnati, which exchanges are also called Progress Pictures Corporation. This now gives Mr. Zambreno a substantial interest in five exchanges, and probably makes him the largest exchange owner in the United States.

ELECTED SECRETARY OF ARROW

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Arrow Pictures Corporation, W. E. Shallenberger, president, held on Wednesday, September 9, Louis L. Beaudry was elected secretary of the company.

OPENS EXCHANGE AT ROSARIO

Cables have been received by E. E. Shauer, director of the Foreign Department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, announcing the successful opening of a new Paramount exchange at Rosario, Argentina. This new exchange will be operated under the direction of Frederick Lange, manager of the company's Argentine organization, with headquarters at Buenos Aires.

HEADS RED SEAL ON COAST

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of Red Seal Pictures Corporation, announced this week the appointment of Thomas O'Brien, formerly special representative, to the position of resident manager of the Red Seal West Coast exchanges, with headquarters at the San Francisco exchange, 209 Golden Gate avenue. C. P. Thostenson, it was further announced, has been added to the selling force at Los Angeles.

Iowan Expanding

C. L. Niles of Anamosa, Ia., is rapidly becoming a chain operator of theatres. He has been buying theatres in various parts of the state and taking options on many more. Among the theatres he recently bought outright are the Cascade, at Cascade, Ia.; the Princess at Monticello, Ia.; the Opera House at Wyoming, Ia., and the Grand at Anamosa. He plans to operate at least a dozen or more theatres in the chain.

Warner Bros. Open Circle Theatre in Cleveland

Warner Bros. opened the Circle Theatre at 102nd Street and Euclid Avenue, Cleveland, Saturday evening, September 5. The Circle is one of the best known houses in the Ohio metropolis. For two or three years it has been successfully operated under the management of Martin Printz. Some months ago, after a deal with Warner Brothers, the theatre was closed for extensive alterations prior to its being reopened as the Cleveland first-run house for Warner Brothers product. The alterations included the installation of a new balcony which raised the seating capacity to approximately 2,000 and the complete redecorating and refurnishing of the theatre from the back wall to the front.

The opening was personally supervised by George H. Dumond, head of the newly established theatre division of Warner Brothers. While Mr. Printz continues as executive manager of the house, the general policy will be dictated by Warner Brothers through Mr. Dumond, who will visit Cleveland frequently.

LUNCHEON FOR EVELYN BRENT

After three years of strenuous motion picture work on the West Coast with nary a vacation, Evelyn Brent arrived in New York the other day to enjoy a well-earned rest. She was promptly taken in tow by her company, Film Booking Offices, Inc. A luncheon was arranged by Nat Rothstein, director of publicity and advertising, at the Biltmore on September 10.

KANSAS CITY RUINS YIELD FIFTH CORPSE

The Gillis Theatre of Kansas City, destroyed by an explosion June 25, yielded another body this week, which makes the fifth. It was found at the side of the balcony railing at the bottom of the debris. It was that of a youth about 20 years old.

Profits Good in Mass.

A perusal of the list of Massachusetts corporation taxpayers shows that profits of the average picture theatre often reach $20,000 yearly. A number of the film theatres in small cities and towns paid taxes of $1,000 and more. B. F. Keith Enterprises of Boston paid a federal tax for 1925 of $150,014.80; Olympia Theatres, Inc., paid $75,606.40.

Stole Projector!

A startling incident occurred at Chambly, Quebec, a few nights ago in Columbus Hall when the discovery was made that the moving picture projection machine had been stolen from the booth. The theatre was well filled with patrons and the show was about to get under way when it was found that the machine was not in its place. No trace of it has been found either. It was valued at $1,250.

Allvine Is Elected President of the A. M. P. A.

Glendon Allvine was elected president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., at the annual election of officers of the organization, held Thursday, September 10, at the Hofbrau Haus on Broadway.

Walter F. Eberhardt was elected vice-president, S. Charles Einfeld treasurer and A. S. Rittenberg, secretary. The following were elected to serve on the board of directors with the officers: Charles Barrell, E. O. Brooks, Gordon White, Charles P. Cohen and A. L. Selig.

For the auditing committee: Sam Palmer, Chairman, H. C. Bate and Hal Howe.

For Managing Editor the Bulletin: W. E. Mulligan.

For Business Manager the Bulletin: Ed. McNamee.

For Trustees of Treasurer's Fund: Paul Gulick, three years; Victor Shapiro, two years; P. A. Parsons, one year.

For Councillor of the Chamber of Commerce: John C. Flinn.

E. O. Brooks was elected to serve on the finance committee with the president, secretary and Charles Barrell, the senior member of the Board of Directors.

A. M. Botsford, the retiring president, made a very snappy report of "fifty-two weeks of progress." He read a communication from his successor, Mr. Allvine, who during the past year served in the capacity of treasurer.

The treasurer's report covering a year's custody of the funds of the A. M. P. A. showed the resources on hand to be the greatest in the history of the organization.

Another important bit of business transacted was the passing of a motion which calls for a future A. M. P. A. affair along the lines of functions given in the past by the W. A. M. P. A. with a view to raising funds to establish a permanent home for the A. M. P. A. This motion, introduced by Mr. Kopstein, carried unanimously.

Mr. Barrell, retiring vice president, made a brief presentation speech which carried with it the gift of a handsome cowbell which he insisted on calling a bull bell to be delivered to the incoming president, who in turn must hand it down to his successor and so on ad infinitum. On motion of P. A. Parsons the outgoing president was tendered a vote of thanks for his efficient administration and "for the best speech of the year."

ABBETT APPOINTED MANAGER

Ralph W. Abbett has been appointed manager of the Renown Pictures, Inc., at Indianapolis.

Exhibitors Everywhere Effecting Adjustments with Union Employes

THE officers of the Chicago Exhibitors Association signed the new scale with the musicians' union giving them a 10 per cent increase in wages, making the minimum wage $60 a week for 32 hours, work. More than a thousand musicians are affected by the new agreement, which is made retroactive from Monday, September 7, when the old agreement expired.

Several days ago the matter was supposed to have been adjusted between the union and the exhibitors but a number of the exhibitors got together and refused to go ahead with the 10 per cent increase, offering half of that amount instead. After several meetings the exhibitors, lead by Jack Miller, business manager of the Chicago organization, and J. Petrillo, head of the union, got together and the threatened strike of the musicians was staved off and the new scale signed for the coming year.

An amicable settlement of the differences between the organized musicians of San Francisco and the Allied Amusement Industries of Northern California is not far distant. Acting upon a petition signed by more than three hundred and fifty members, a general meeting of the union was held recently and the six months' contract clause adopted three weeks ago, and to which theatre owners objected strenuously, was repealed by practically a unanimous vote. With this clause abrogated it is believed that theatre interests will restore their orchestras to former strength. Upon receipt of the demands for six months' contracts for all musicians, theatre owners reduced their orchestras to the minimum union requirements, some being cut more than half.

Announcement has been made by Harlan Holmden, business representative of the local picture operators' union at Cleveland, Ohio, that operators in that city have been granted a wage increase of 12 per cent by the exhibitors.

A two-year contract with 10 per cent increase for two classifications of operators and a 15 per cent increase for a third class was signed, Holmden said. Negotiations between film exhibitors and theatre musicians, who are also seeking a wage increase, still are under way, the advices state.

The strike of musicians, stagehands and operators is still in force in Niagara Falls, N. Y., with indications pointing to a long, drawn out affair and eventual open shop conditions. Down in Syracuse the motion picture operators have asked for a wage boost, but it is reported that exhibitors are prepared to "grind their own" if necessary rather than grant the requests.

Kane Hears from Yale

Yale University at New Haven, Conn., may accept the offer of Robert T. Kane, motion picture producer, to found and endow a chair in motion picture learning.

George Parmly Day, treasurer of the Yale Corporation, has written to Mr. Kane, asking for detailed information relative to the offer of $5,000 a year, which he made recently to several eastern colleges. In his letter Mr. Day said he desired to submit the matter to the Yale Corporation's committee on educational policy and subsequently to the members of the corporation that they might consider it.

Each Zone Liable

Directors of the Albany and Buffalo zones held a meeting at the Hotel Onondaga in Syracuse last week, for the purpose of adopting by-laws that will now govern the functioning of these zones. The meeting was presided over by William Dillon, of Ithaca, president of the New York state M. P. T. O.

The by-laws were adopted after a short discussion and a few changes. Among other things, the by-laws provide that each zone shall be held responsible for its expenses and that zone directors shall meet at least quarterly.

Chicago Circuit Union Plans $2,000,000 Theatre Building

The corporation recently formed by the union of Balaban & Katz and Lubliner & Trinz has plans drawn for a $2,000,000 moving picture playhouse, store and apartment building, to be erected in the Jefferson Park district at the northeast corner of Lawrence and Tripp avenues. In addition to the theatre which will seat 3,000 and have a full size stage, the building will contain 12 stores and 75 apartments. The exterior of the entire building and the interior of the theatre will be in the Moorish type of architecture. Fridstein & Company are the architects.

Balaban and Katz have started an innovation in the Chicago movie circles by routing the orchestra directors and solo organists from theatre to theatre of the circuit. For the start Nathaniel Finston, musical director of the Chicago Theatre, and Jesse Crawford, star organist, opened the Uptown Theatre last week, H. Leopold Spitalny of the Tivoli theatre, and Milton Charles, organist, came to the Chicago, and Adolph Dumont, director with Albert Hay Malotte, formerly organist at the McVickers Theatre, going to the Tivoli Theatre for the week. Mrs. Jesse Crawford formerly playing the twin organ at the Chicago Theatre, has been sent to the McVickers Theatre, as solo organist under Paul Ash and his musical jazz orchestra. For the start the directors and organists will rotate from the Chicago to the Uptown Theatre and then the Tivoli and back again.

TWO HOUSES FOR NEW BRITAIN

Bernard E. Hoffman of New Haven and Israel J. Hoffman of Ansonia have bought property on Main street in New Britain for $209,000 and will erect a theatre, stores and office building at a cost of more than $500,000. The theatre will seat 2,500.

Another theatre project for New Britain is that undertaken by Abraham Molstein and Morris H. Bailey of New Haven. The price of the property is set at $175,000 cash and $185,000 if a mortgage is involved in the sale.

Oscar Price New Head of Associated Exhibitors

According to an announcement just issued today, Oscar Price assumes the office of president of the Associated Exhibitors, and the control of this organization passes from the hands of the Pathe Exchanges.

The announcement is made with little surprise to the industry as it has been rumored for some time that such a deal was in the making. According to Mr. Price there will be no change in the personnel of the organization other than that of John S. Woody's relinquishing the post of president for that of general manager.

In his new capacity Woody will have complete charge of the selling organization while Price will lend his efforts to the production of pictures. The program for production arranged by the Associated Exhibitors for the coming season is an elaborate one.

Price stated that the new board of directors for the organization which will be announced next week composes some very prominent people.

LON RAMSDELL JOINS "U"

Lon B. Ramsdell, veteran publicity and exploitation man, has been engaged by Universal to handle exploitation and publicity for Universal pictures in the Pittsburgh territory. He will succeed Jack Hays, who has resigned. Ramsdell has had a wide experience in the exploitation field, as well as considerable experience as a theatre manager. He managed Loew's Victoria Theatre, New York, for a year, B. F. Keith's Hippodrome Theatre in Baltimore for two years, and the Ramsdell Opera House in Frederick, Md., for eight months, until it was burned. He served as press agent yith the D. W. Griffith Attractions for three years, and more recently with First National and Warner Brothers. Prior to entering the moving picture business he was press representative for various theatrical producers, including Wagenhals & Kempner, George Tyler, Cohan & Harris, the Coburns, Ringling Brothers and Barnum & Bailey.

MICHIGAN CONVENTION SOON

Plans are already under way for the annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, which this year will be held in Grand Rapids on Oct. 7 and 8. H. M. Richey, manager of the association has issued bulletins to the membership urging their attendance to debate on "several important matters." One of these is believed to be the arbitration matter, which, it is said, will be thoroughly aired on the convention floor.

FRANK OPENS WATERLOO THEATRE

Alexander Frank, enterprising manager of the new Plaza Theatre in Waterloo, Ia., has celebrated the opening of this beautiful playhouse with Norma Shearer's new starring vehicle, "A Slave of Fashion," directed for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer by Hobart Henley. The new Plaza, which has been completely remodelled, is one of the finest houses in the state, and began its career auspiciously by attracting crowded houses throughout its initial week.

HEADS WARNERS IN KANSAS CITY

Samuel E. Morris, general manager of distribution, announced this week the appointment of Louis Reichert as manager of the Warner Bros. branch exchange in Kansas City. Reichert is a veteran salesman and executive. He was at one time assistant general manager of General Films, and later served as special Pacific coast representative of several companies and as branch manager of Select in Washington.

Harry Langdon, Comedian, Signs with First National

HARRY LANGDON, screen comedian, for whose services many companies in the film world have been bidding for months, this week affixed his signature to a contract with First National Pictures, Inc.

While definite figures are not mentioned, it is understood to be one of the biggest individual contracts of the year, insuring a remarkable income for the star. First National, which launched Charlie Chaplin on his first feature screen successes a number of years ago, plans, according to Richard A. Rowland, general manager, to give Langdon every opportunity to develop as the new comedy king.

John E. McCormick, general manager of production for First National on the West Coast, represented his organization in the transaction in Hollywood after a series of conferences between William H. Jenner, general business manager, and Jerry Geisler, attorney, representing Harry Langdon, covering many months. Sol Lesser, vice-president of First National, signed on behalf of that organization.

The contract, covering a period of years, provides for full feature-length comedies which will be made under the personal supervision of Langdon. The first series consists of four pictures and it is estimated they will consume sixteen months in the making.

According to Jenner, Langdon expects to start on his first production for First National about November 15, his contract with Mack Sennett expiring early in November. His first pictures will be ready for release by the First National organization on or about April 15, 1926.

New Contract Adopted by Joint Bodies With Few Changes

The final meeting of the Joint Contract and Arbitration Committee of the Motion Picture Theatre Owner's of America and the independent Motion Picture Association was held at the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owner's of America at 1 P. M. on Wednesday, September 16.

The work of the committee was completed and a contract form was agreed upon. The final form is virtually the same as recently promulgated with the addition of a provision limiting the time, after the rendering of the award of the local Arbitration Board, in which the award can be reviewed by the National Arbitration Commission, and a provision for the right to both the Distributor and the exhibitor to challenge the arbitrators appointed or selected by the other side. Each side is limited to three challenges.

The Committees will submit the contract to their respective organizations with the recommendation for its acceptance. The Independent Motion Picture Association of America will hold a convention in the very near future, at which time its contract Committee will render its report and recommendation.

Copies of the proposed contract have been sent to all of the members of the Independent Motion Picture Association of America, the officers of the Motion Picture Theatre Owner's of America, the Presidents of the various theatre owner state organizations, to Will Hays, President of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors of America and Mr. Nathan Durkan.

MANNING TO SUCCEED WHITE

Announcement is made by B. P. Fineman, general manager of the F. B. O. Studios of the appointment of Roger Manning to succeed Clarence White as production manager of F. B. O.

Mr. Manning, who has been affiliated with several of the foremost motion picture companies both in New York and Hollywood during the last several years, joined the F. B. O. staff under Mr. Fineman about two years ago. He has been in charge of locations for all F. B. O. units.

Mr. White, whom Mr. Manning has succeeded, has joined S. S. Hutchinson, pioneer motion picture producer, who has returned to activity on a large scale. White will serve as production manager for all of the Hutchinson units which will operate at the F. B. O. Studios.

ALBANY CONSIDERING $5 FEE

There will be a joint meeting in Buffalo early in September of the by-laws committees from the Albany and the Buffalo zones for the purpose of adopting by-laws and considering various suggested amendments. Among these will be one which would require the payment of not less than five dollars by an exchange or an exhibitor in connection with the filing of a complaint with the arbitration board. This amendment, if adopted, would do away with the bringing of many trivial claims, and at the same time the money received would go toward meeting the running expenses of the zones as well as the arbitration board.

HOLD-UP IN PITTSBURGH

Two masked bandits, heavily armed, held up the Cameo Theatre, downtown Pittsburgh, on Labor Day, and escaped in an automobile with $1,619, Saturday's and Monday's receipts, after compelling the assistant manager, Harold J. Turner, to open the safe in the manager's office in the basement. A blow with a blackjack wielded by one of the bandits dazed Turner and prevented him from following them in their escape flight. No trace of the bandits has been found. The hold-up occurred at 10:15 o'clock while hundreds of persons on the floor above were enjoying the last performance of the evening.

KANSAN FACES ASSAULT CHARGE

A charge of assault with intent to kill was filed in Kansas City this week against James Bradley, motion picture operator at the Pantages Theatre, by E. J. Lime, proprietor of a non-union school for operators, operated in conjunction with the M. P. T. O. Kansas-Missouri. About twenty union men entered the school August 31 and threatened Lime, he said. Later Lime was assaulted.

JERSEY ENLISTS WOMEN

New Jersey theatre owners are enlisting the women of their state in the fight against blue laws. According to a statement from that organization its president, Joseph M. Seider, recently escorted a delegation of school teachers through First National studios in order that they might familiarize themselves with present production methods.

FINEMAN'S FATHER DIES

Bernie Fineman, studio manager for F. B. O. in Hollywood received this week a long distance call from his wife, Evelyn Brent, announcing the sudden death of his father Dennis Fineman at his residence 73 West 116th Street, New York City, on Tuesday morning September 8. Apparently the elder Fineman was in the best of health and his unexpected and sudden death was a shock to all.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Albany Showman Seeking Happiness, Not Millions

When Harry Hellman, owner of the Royal in Albany, stood in the summer house of his camp on Crooked Lake last week his mind reverted to six years ago when on September 15 the Royal opened to the public. Those were the days when more than one exhibitor predicted that he would "lose his shirt" in the venture. Today the Royal is one of the best paying theatres in the Capital City. It is one of the best ventilated theatres in all New York State. The music is furnished by the latest Steinway Duo-Art reproducing piano. Mr. Hellman remarked the other day that it was a pleasure to hear the piano and that he had never invested money in a better cause. And speaking of money, Mr. Hellman is one exhibitor who is not seeking to make a million. First of all, he looks after his house, which explains one reason why he has one of the finest camps on Crooked Lake, a camp named after his boy and one that offers solid comfort.

For the present the Regent in Albany is closed while it is being redecorated throughout and receiving a general overhauling. It will open as soon as the work has been completed and the fact that it will be handled by Herman Vineberg practically assures its success.

Joe Saperstein, manager of Harmanus-Bleecker Hall, is employing scouts these days in looking up talent for his amateur night each week.

Three brothers who gathered one day last week in Canton are the real veterans in motion pieture circles in Northern New York, men who started with the nickelodeon and have seen the shooting gallery of the past grow into the million dollar palace of the present. The three were James Papayanakos, running a theatre in Gouverneur; Harry, who is doing the same thing in Potsdam, and Alex, who has a house in Canton. The brothers got their start in Watertown years ago.

If there had been any more in the Central Theatre, run by Joe and Charles Weidman of Albany, on Labor Day, those in the rear would have needed stilts to see the picture. Both Weidman boys were right on hand looking after the crowd, which was one of the most enthusiastic imaginable.

There is a new manager at the Hudson Theatre in Albany, Richard Bloomingdale, who has been with the Palace in Troy. Both the Hudson and Palace have just inaugurated a new policy of double features each Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday.

Here's one reason why the Colonial in Albany was packed even to its gallery on Labor Day. The house is run by Julius Berinstein, who has the policy of not boosting prices on a holiday. He played "Declasse" for 10 cents, and by 2 o'clock there was a long line in front of the theatre. Nine out of every ten, thinking that holiday prices would probably prevail, put down just double what they should, and were tickled pink when they were told that 10 cents would admit them, even though it was a holiday.

Louis Buettner of Cohoes tumbled out of bed pretty early the other morning in order to get the 6 o'clock train out of Albany for Syracuse. But Louis wasn't the only one, for Mrs. Buettner brought him to Albany in their car.

There is a change in Windsor, Charles L. Reed notifying Film Row the past week that he has taken over the theatre there.

Journeyings during the past week included Louis Schine, of Gloversville, to New York City, while Vic Warren of Massena, who is as busy in superintending the erection of a new office building as he is with his theatre, also journeyed to the metropolis; Bob Yates, Lake George went to New York on Tuesday, while the week also brought to town for the first time in several months G. H. Garvey, with theatres in Clinton and Oriskany Falls; Julius Byck was in from Tannersville, while Joe Miller was down from Central New York.

Two more exhibitors have been bitten by the Florida bug. F. N. Herbs, who runs the Strand in Philmont, left this week for a three weeks' trip to Miami and vicinity. Later on Mrs. W. C. Carpenter of Lake George will proceed southward. Mr. Herbs plans to bring legal action against the Schine Brothers, whom he alleges were to have taken his house on July 1 but failed to do so. Attorney James J. Brennan, whom Mr. Herbs had employed as a lawyer in the case, died last week.

A year ago last Labor Day Claude Fredericks, running the Capitol in Pittsfield, Mass., established a new house record with "The Covered Wagon." This Labor Day he hung up a new house record with "The Coast of Folly."

Sol Manheimer, who used to be a film salesman but who is now successfully handling the Robbins houses at Watertown, used fourteen models this week in connection with the showing of "The Dressmaker from Paris" at the Olympic, and with no advance in prices at that. Beginning this week, the Avon in Watertown is running under a changed policy which calls for vaudeville and pictures.

If you happen to be in North Creek, which incidentally is in the lower Adirondack region, drop in and see Claude H. Wade, who runs the picture theatre there, and who will also be very glad to keep you over night at so much per, for he runs the hotel as well. Mr. Wade has installed a bookkeeping system at a cost of $1,200 and he knows just what his pictures are doing every minute of the day or night.

Thomas Norris has been named manager of the Palace in Troy. Mr. Norris is a protege of Julius Berinstein, enemy of dust and dirt, which means that the Palace will continue to be as spick and span as ever.

There is a rumor along Film Row to the effect that Famous Players is dickering for George Cohen's theatres in Poughkeepsie and Newburgh. It is also said that the option on the Farley houses in Schenectady will expire the end of this week, and that something will shortly be known one way or the other.

William Dillon, veteran theatre owner of Ithaca and president of the New York State M. P. T. O., has returned from a trip to Florida and can now be heard talking Florida real estate from morning till night.

Meyer Schine is back in Gloversville from his honeymoon. Mr. and Mrs. Schine swung through New York State, dropping in on friends at Lake Placid, Richfield Springs, New York City and coast resorts.

Fred Mausert's new theatre in Glens Falls opened on Saturday. The house is most attractive. Taking an old church, Mr. Mausert converted it into the theatre, seating about 1,200. The Rialto, also in Glens Falls and operated by the Peerless Booking agency under a lease from Mr. Colburn, which was badly damaged by fire some months ago, is scheduled to reopen on November 1.

Otto Eigen of Sharon Springs, whose house was taken over by William Smalley some time ago, is running a novelty shop in the well known summer resort and hasn't been worrying a bit about the price of film. There is some question as to whether Mr. Smalley will continue the house through the winter in Sharon Springs.

Connecticut

Colonial Theatres, Inc., which is operating a chain of picture theatres in Connecticut, has acquired and reopened the Rialto Theatre in Torrington. The Alhambra in the same city, which was closed for two weeks for renovation, was reopened September 5.

Sylvester Z. Poli, head of the theatrical circuit that bears his name, and Mrs. Poli recently celebrated the fourtieth anniversary of their marriage at their summer home near Milford, Conn.

The Sigfried Amusement Company proposes to build a theatre and business block in Derby.

Richard S. Burnap has resigned as chairman of the community motion picture committee in Woodbury. He has been succeeded by Kenworth Kimball. So successful was the business of presenting film shows during this summer that two professional models of projector have been purchased.

The Forest Motion Picture Company of Waterbury paid a federal tax of $93.20 for 1924-25.

Rhode Island

Ed Lenihan, former assistant manager of the Hippodrome, New York, is the new manager of the Keith-Albee Bijou Theatre in Woonsocket.

Famous Players has acquired the Strand Theatre in Newport. The Strand presents a double feature bill, while its competitor, the Opera House, has a single feature policy.

Rhode Island exhibitors have been staging benefit shows as a result of the steamer Mackinac disaster, in which two score persons were killed. With the aid of the theatre men it is expected the fund will total more than $100,000.

New Hampshire

The Maine and New Hampshire Theatres Company, of which William P. Gray is the head, has purchased real estate in Concord near the State House. A garage and house now on the site will be torn down and a large theatre for vaudeville and pictures erected. It will cost approximately $250,000. The playhouse is to have 1,600 seats and will be one of the largest in New Hampshire. Mr. Gray's company, which is the New England theatre operating enterprise of Famous Players, now has two theatres in Concord.

Massachusetts

Fred O. Dean, for many years manager of the Goldstein Brothers' Broadway Theatre in Springfield, was found dead in the men's retiring room in the Union Station on August 31. In addition to his duties as manager of the Broadway, Mr. Dean also was supervisor of advertising for the Goldstein Brothers' circuit.

Terrell's Finest Theatre was opened at Terrell, Texas, September 1.

Buffalo, N. Y.

A pitiful condition arose the other day when the champion pinochle shark of New York State was taken into camp by an amateur. The champion, one Walter Hays of Buffalo, vice-president of the Mark-Strand interests, has been having things his own way on the trains between New York and Buffalo for, lo, these twenty years, until he met up with Charley Hayman of Niagara Falls, who, it seems, also plays a wicked game when he gets warmed up. But the worst part of this contest was that the champeen advised his best friend, Eugene Falk, secretary-treasurer of the Mark-Strand organization, to lay his wad on the well known Hays pinochle ability, with the result that the Falk bank roll faded away. J. H. Michael, sparring partner for Charley, bet on the Cataract City kid's tricks to win and as a result made enough to pay his expenses at the Syracuse meeting of the board of directors of the Buffalo and Albany zones. Moral: Every champeen gets a knockout some day.

Joe Schuchert, Sr., has been bitten by the Florida real estate boom bug and has gone to that state to take a wallop at some land deals. Joe owns the Colonial and Columbia Theatres in Buffalo. Henry Lally, Dunkirk fillum magnate, also has "cleaned up" a barrel of coin in Florida lots.

Ben Wallerstein, manager of the Broadway Theatre, Buffalo, was host at a party given in honor of Harry T. Dixon, F. B. O. manager, in the Hotel Statler, Saturday evening, September 12. It was a surprise party for Harry, who was marched right into the banquet room by Basil Brady, Pathe branch manager. There was a goodly representation of exchange men and exhibitors.

Fay's Theatre in Rochester has tied up with the Rochester Herald in a Local Lafs Contest. Each week the offerings of the ten best are filmed on the Fay screen. The Herald is paying $5, $2 and $1 for the best jokes. These are illustrated and made into a film which appears with the names of the prize winners attached to each contribution.

Obeying a court order, the Buffalo city council has granted a permit to build a picture theatre at 822 Tonawanda street. It is reported that this house will be leased by the Shea Amusement Company.

Nothing like being an all-around theatre man. The other night when the projectionist fainted in the booth at the Cataract Theatre, Niagara Falls, Manager Eddie Weinberg ran the projection machine until the end of the show.

Denver

Joseph Roth, manager of Fox theatres in Denver, is using a novel stunt in connection with the first showing of "The Iron Horse" at the Broadway Theatre this week. He has built an old-fashioned locomotive over an automobile. Smoke pours from the chimney, the bell rings and an engineer and fireman dressed in full regalia drive the engine from their proper places inside.

S. H. Horner, owner and manager of the Emblem Theatre, Denver, has been appointed by the M. P. T. O. of Colorado as exhibitor member of the Board of Arbitration to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Jacob Eppler, who recently severed his connections with the Ogden Theatre of Denver.

Harry Nolan is visiting Salt Lake City.

The Rialto Theatre, Delta, Col., was destroyed by fire on September 6 shortly after the closing of the last show. The theatre was one of a chain of theatres owned by the Western Enterprises, Inc. Rick Ricketson, one of the general managers, says that complete plans had been made for a new theatre to replace the Rialto at Delta, the new theatre to have a capacity of 1,000.

St. Louis

Contracts have been let for Springfield, Mo.'s, new Gillioz Theatre, 325 St. Louis avenue. The house will cost $150,000 and seat 1,700 persons in parquet and balcony. It will contain a full sized stage. Reports from Springfield are that the United Studios, Inc., Chicago, have leased the house.

Steve Kaiman, owner of the O'Fallon and Baden Theatres in North St. Louis, plans to build a new theatre at 8200 North Broadway, a block from the Baden. The new house will cost about $75,000 and seat 800. The plans call for a two-story building, 60 by 130 feet. Contractors will be asked to submit bids on the construction work this week.

The Irma Theatre, Bartmer avenue, St. Louis, has been taken over by Mr. and Mrs. C. W. Lilly, formerly of Hannibal, Mo.

Kansas

Three youthful bandits held up the Miller Theatre, one of the largest downtown houses in Wichita, Kas., Saturday night and escaped with $2,800. The robbery was the most daring one attempted in Wichita in several years.

The honor in Kansas City of being first to the newspapers with the news that the destruction of the Shenandoah would be in a Pathe reel "now on the road" was won by Lawrence Lehman of the Orpheum Theatre, or, rather, Fred Spear, his publicity man.

"Yep, my show's 'blown up'," said the voice of H. E. Schildhter, Madison, Kas., exhibitor, to C. W. Allen, assistant branch manager of Warner-Vitagraph branch at Kansas City, "unless an airplane can be obtained." There was no airplane, no fast train—merely a "used" model of Ford touring car belonging to Allen, who made the trip of 162 miles over bumpy roads in a little more than four hours.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors in the Kansas City market last week were: F. G. Weary, Farris Theatre, Richmond, Mo.; Roy Burford, Arkansas City, Kas.; C. M. Pattee, Pattee Theatre, Lawrence, Kas.; Ben Levy, Hippodrome, Joplin, Mo.; S. E. Wilhoit, Jefferson, Springfield, Mo.

Last week marked much projection room improvement in theatres in the Kansas City territory. Peerless reflector arc equipment was installed in the Newman Theatre, Kansas City, while G. E. High Intensity lamps were installed at the Orphem, Kansas City. A new Simplex projector and Raven Halftone screen equipment was installed at the Grand Theatre, Winfield, Kas. Two Simplex projectors were installed in the Plaza Theatre, Leoti, Kansas, while two Simplex projectors also were installed in the Pantages Theatre, Kansas City.

Chicago

The big new theatre circuit that has been formed by Balaban & Katz and Rubens interests, known as the Great States Theatres, Inc., with offices in the Butler Building at 162 North State street, have made several changes in managers and the following men are in charge of the various houses under the new management:

E. B. Lewis, manager of the Rialto at Aurora, Ill., becomes general manager of the houses in that city, with Ruby Berman as manager of the Fox Theatre and Mortimer Berman manager of the Strand Theatre, both under the direction of Mr. Lewis, who also continues in charge of the Rialto.

At Galesburg, Ill., William Olson, for many years in charge of the Orpheum there, has sold his interest in the house, retiring from the business, and is succeeded by Edward Toerpe.

At Bloomington, Ill., J. R. Spicer is in charge of the Majestic at Joliet. M. M. Rubens is general manager of the Crystal, Princess and Orpheum, with Roy Rogan assistant manager.

At Rockford Charles Lamb is in active charge of the Midway, the largest house in that city. At Elgin Will Newman has been made general manager of the Rialto, the Crocker with Frank Omick as house manager and the Grove with M. Leo as house manager.

Another big movie house is projected for Cicero, the home of the live wires on the West Side. A new theatre to cost over $500,000 is projected for the northeast corner of 25th and 53rd avenue. The house will be three stories in height, with a brick and terra cotta exterior. S. J. Geogory of the Geogory circuit will build the house and R. Levine and E. P. Rupert are the architects. Samuel Klein is the structural engineer. With nearby suburbs voting against Sunday movies the new house at Cicero should be a big boom for that city.

Louis Laemmle, well known exhibitor and brother of Carl Laemmle of Universal, has returned from an extended European trip and is very enthusiastic over the showing of American films abroad.

The Monroe Theatre Building at 55-59 West Monroe street, in which Fox's New Monroe Theatre is located, has been sold by the Adslt Estate for $1,000,000 to a client of the Chicago Title and Trust Company. It is expected that when the leases on the property run out a huge office building will be erected on the site.

Morris G. Leonard, E. Shapiro and L. P. Gevirtz have organized the Rubens Enterprises with offices at 111 West Washington street, to build, operate and maintain theatres in this territory.

The new Riveria Theatre of the Orpheum Circuit, featuring pictures and vaudeville at popular prices, opened last Sunday to capacity business that overflowed and jammed the sidewalks. Marcus Heiman, president; Mort Singer, vice-president, and other officials were on hand for the opening.

The Central Theatre of Balaban & Katz has put on a Charleston contest each Thursday that is bringing the young dancers in by the houseful. On Tuesday night Manager Turner has a Frolic Night.

Alexander Frank has taken over the Majestic at Cedar Rapids, Iowa. The house will be remodeled and a fine new organ installed.

Fred Byers has been named manager of the Waterloo, Crystal and Palace Theatres at Waterloo, Iowa. More than $25,000 will be spent on improvements in these three houses of the Blank Circuit.

Pittsburgh

On Labor Day Charles Truran reopened his entirely remodeled, redecorated and rejuvenated Academy Theatre at Meadville after an expenditure of upwards of $35,000 in improvements during a closed season of thirteen weeks. Among the improvements were included concealed lights under the balconies, operated with the dimmer effect; over the door leading from the lobby of the house there has been painted a beautiful Dutch harbor scene; over the proscenium there is a mural painting; the floors have been fitted with Imperial flooring, which is waterproof and silent; the walls and ceiling are beautifully frescoed in a motif of brown and buff. Truran's opening attraction was "The Ten Commandments," and he played to turnaway business.

David Victor, for years manager of the Victor Theatre, McKeesport, will be married on October 18 to Miss Sarah Broder, an employe of the local First National exchange. Immediately after the ceremony the young couple will leave for a two months' vacation trip to California, and upon their return will make their home in McKeesport.

Among out-of-town exhibitor visitors the past few days were: Messrs. Simon and Salowich, Johnstown; David Greenblatt, Sharon; C. E. Gable, Sharpsville; Wm. Lamproplos, Latrobe; Wister M. Elliott, Vandergrift; William Anas, Weirton; James Velas, Wheeling; Mr. and Mrs. Tom Kinney, Franklin; Mike Rosenbloom, Charleroi; Mike Manos, Greensburg; Jack Maple, Point Marion; B. J. Ohio

The new Capitol Theatre, Stubenville, Ohio, erected by the Tri-State Amusement Company, of which J. K. Papulias is president and A. G. Constant vice-president and general manager, was formally dedicated Labor Day with five acts of Keith-Albee vaudeville and feature pictures. The new house, which has been completed at a cost of $700,000, is conceded to be among the finest in architectural design and beauty in the Ohio Valley. The building in which the theatre is located covers an area of 27,000 square feet. Forrest C. Templin, who was formerly connected with the Rembusch chain of houses in Indiana and the Gray interests in New England, is managing the house, having left the Smith Amusement Company at Warren Ohio, to accept his present position.

Morris Straus, representing a mortgage company of Cincinnati, purchased the Majestic Theatre, Sidney, Ohio, at receiver's sale a short time ago. Straus announced that the house would be thoroughly remodeled and would reopen at an early date.

After having been in active charge of the Orpheum Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, for eight years, Max Shagrin has left that house. The Orpheum is to be converted into a lobby of the new State Theatre, now under construction immediately adjoining the Orpheum. Shagrin will look after the Park Theatre, in which he is interested.

The Overlook Theatre, being erected in one of the Cincinnati suburbs, will be formally opened early in November, according to present indications.

As an added attraction at the Circle, Cleveland, Manager Printz is featuring Austin Wiley and his Golden Pheasant orchestra, who play but one number during the evening.

The Odessa Theatre, Malvern, Ohio, which has been operated by H. S. Vogt, has been purchased by Park C. Beatty, who also owns a house at Carrolton, Ohio.

Canada

While 2,500 people were enjoying the presentation at B. F. Keith's Theatre, Ottawa, Ontario, Friday evening, September 11, a chapter of sorrow was being unfolded within the theatre walls, Manager J. M. Franklin having received a telegram from Detroit, Mich., to the effect that his mother, 70 years of age, had just died. Mr. Franklin hastened to the railway station where he managed to catch the night train for Detroit. It was only two weeks before that Mr. Franklin had visited his mother. During his absence the Keith house was under the charge of Roy McDonald, assistant manager, formerly of Halifax.

John Hazza, manager of the big Capitol Theatre, Calgary, Alberta, has cancelled all bookings of Pantages vaudeville for his theatre, the house reverting to its original status of an exclusive picture hall on September 7.

The Carolinas

With augmented managerial forces, the Warner Brothers Carolina theatres entered their regular fall and winter season on September 14. Nat L. Royster, general manager in charge of Carolina theatres, following a ten-day visit in the home offices in New York, put in many changes upon his return to Charlotte, additions to the force having been made necessary by the augmented programs to be presented.

S. H. B. Stough, formerly manager of the Rialto, Birmingham, Ala., has been made assistant manager of the Broadway, Charlotte. The Broadway has installed a fourteen-piece orchestra and will feature the musical prologues with every program. In addition to the picture part of the programs, there will be several vaudeville acts included on each bill, as well as other stage attractions in the nature of prologues.

R. D. Craver, possibly the best known theatre man in the Carolinas, Southeastern Franchise owner of First National, is now commuting between Charlotte and his newly acquired home in the Southern part of Florida, but still retains his residence in Charlotte for sentimental reasons. "R. D." recently disposed of his valuable mineral water springs property and farm near Charlotte, but retains his interest in First National and the Warner Brothers Broadway Theatre in Charlotte.

Charlotte's film row was a bee hive of industry the past week, many Carolina exhibitors coming in to line up fall and winter product, and just a few to spend a brief session "on the mat" before the Charlotte Film Board of Arbitration, it is rumored. Among those who did not appear before the board, however, were the following: Miller Merriweather, of the Warner Brothers New Concord Theatre, Concord, N. C.; Mr. Maydanis, of the Liberty Theatre, Concord, N. C.; Arnold B. Huff, of the Broadway, American, Orpheum and Rose Theatres, High Point; W. S. Scales, of the Rex and LaFayette Theatres, Winston-Salem, N. C.

C. D. Turner, for several years city manager of theatres in Asheville, N. C., for Famous Players, has severed his connection with them and launched the Carolina Theatres, Inc., with home offices in Asheville. They announce as a beginning the acquisition of the Rivoli Theatre, Hickory, N. C., and the Rivoli, Lincolntown, formerly operated by Claude Lee, also the Grand Theatre, Newton, N. C., which is being extensively renovated. It is their intention to acquire a chain of a dozen or more theatres in the western part of the state. Claude Lee, after disposing of his interests in Hickory and Lincolnton, has gone to Florida to manage one of the Universal theatres in the state.

High Point's newest and most beautiful theatre, the Broadhurst, opened its doors on September 7. It is strictly modern in every respect, costing more than $100,000. It is owned by the Liberty Company and George W. Crater is resident manager.

The new Charlotte Theatre, projected as "Carolina's most distinctive theatre," opened for business on Labor Day under the managing directorship of Harry K. Lucas. Formerly the old Ideal, it was completely rebuilt with exception of side walls and beautifully decorated, and will be operated by Mr. Lucas and associates in the Sunset Amusement Company as a companion theatre to their new Egyptian, Greenville, S. C. The policy will be a complete and distinctive presentation of the greater second-run pictures at popular prices.

J. M. Davis, owner of the Capitol and Iris Theatres, Salisbury, N. C., is much improved in health after a prolonged illness.

N. Miras is building a large colored theatre in Greensboro to seat 800 or more.

Associated Exhibitors

GOING UP. (5,886 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Played this one "Laughter Week' and it lived up to its purpose. The audience certainly enjoyed this picture. Good tone. Appeal ninety-nine per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw family patronage, town 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

F. B. O.

BROKEN LAWS. (6,413 feet). Star, Mrs. Wallace Reid. Good box office bet and gives satisfaction. Tone, Sunday and as special, yes. Draw conservative class, city of 23,000. Admission twenty-five cents. D. J. Adams, Auditorium Theatre (1,000 seats), Concord, New Hampshire.

IF MARRIAGE FAILS—? (6,000 feet). Star cast. This may be a knockout, but if Mr. Exhibitor runs enough babies like this one, out here in the tall uncut, he will be the one that will take the count. The press book was a whiz, but that was all. Yes as to tone. Appeal fifty per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

TRIGGER FINGERS. Star, Bob Custer. A new star here but seemed to please most of my patrons. Is a good lively western and has plenty of action. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw general class, town 600. Admission 10-25 and 15-35. W. C. Snyder, Cozy Theatre (265 seats), Lamont, Oklahoma.

WHITE THUNDER. Star, Yakima Canutt. A fairly good western. The hero acts as an idiot (or something worse) till the last reel. Poor appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. Had a record Saturday crowd to see this and they were not disappointed. Thomson's westerns are about the best on the market today. About two of his pictures and he will be made in your house. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

WILD BULL'S LAIR. (6 reels). Star, Fred Thomson. And I should like to include under the heading of "Star" the wonderful white horse, Silver King. The two can never be beaten for entertainment. This picture has fine tone, good appeal. Suitable for Sunday but no as a special. Draw town and country type, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (440 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

First National

ABRAHAM LINCOLN. (9,759 feet). Star, George Billings. Very fine picture. Ran three nights to good business. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (460 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

BORN RICH. (7,511 feet). Star, Claire Windsor. Picture is a good one, only weak in drawing power in our locality. This picture might go over in some theatres; however, it is a dead one for us. Acting fine; photography good. Too long for this kind of a subject. Fair tone. Appeal sixty per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw neighborhood class, city 77,000. Admission 10-20. Wm. A. Leucht, Jr., Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

CHICKIE. (7,000 feet). All-star cast. Many favorable comments and pleased nearly all. Had good crowds two days. By all means play it on account of the publicity it has received everywhere. You should make money on it. R. L. Nowell, Idlehour Theatre, Monroe, Georgia.

CLASSMATES. (6,983 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Broke record with this one. Only thing bad about it was the abrupt ending. However, step on it and make some money as it will please almost everyone. Good tone. Appeal 99 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw family patronage, town 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

FLOWING GOLD. (8,005 feet). All-star cast. Played this one a little late but got the business. It's a real picture. Has the qualities that it takes to draw them in. Tone and appeal okeh. Yes as a special. Draw farming class and from town 600. Goodrich Brothers, Strand Theatre (225 seats), Callao, Missouri.

DAUGHTERS OF THE NIGHT. (5,470 feet). Star cast. Picture went over big. Everyone enjoyed it. A little different from the ordinary. Tone okeh. Appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farming class and from town 600. Goodrich Brothers, Strand Theatre (225 seats), Callao, Missouri.

GOLD HEELS. (6,000 feet). All-star cast. We did a fair business with this. It was not as good as "Checkers," on which it was based. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

RIDER OF THE PURPLE SAGE. (5,578 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This is a knockout. Played to extra good business for two days. One of Mix's best productions. This star has great drawing power in this type of picture. Picture and photography are excellent. Give us more like it. Fine tone. Appeal ninety per cent. Yes for Sunday but not exactly a special. Draw neighborhood class, city 77,000. Admission 10-20. W. A. Leucht, Jr., Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

ROUGHNECK. (7,187 feet). Star, George O'Brien. This is an excellent picture, well produced, and will please all who see it; but it did not seem to register at the box office. This O'Brien can be made a big box office asset if properly handled, as my patrons all seemed to like him. Tone O. K. Appeal 85 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw from industrial town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (600 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

TRAIL RIDERS. (4,752 feet). Star, Buck Jones. Played this one to capacity house on a Saturday night. Picture is not up to the standard of Jones; however, this star draws well in our locality. Good tone. Appeal eighty per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw neighborhood class, city 77,000. Admission 10-20. W. A. Leucht, Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

TWO MIX PICTURES. "Riders of the Purple Sage" and "Rainbow Trail." Have always heard of box office breakers but had never seen any of them till I ran these two babies; we advertised these to the limit—did they come?—I say they did! In fact, we smashed all house records. Yes as to tone, for Sunday and as specials. Appeal a hundred per cent. Draw small town class, town 300. Admission 10-25. Roy E. Cline, Osage Theatre (200 seats), Osage, Oklahoma.

Metro-Goldwyn

CHU-CHIN-CHOW. (6,408 feet). Star, Betty Blythe. An Arabian spectacular drama, based on the story of Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves. Showed this picture on the heels of "The Thief of Bagdad" and it did not go over. Fair tone. Appeal 65 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw general class, city 500,000. Admission 10-20. Wm. T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

EXCUSE ME. (5,084 feet). Stars, Conrad Nagel, Norma Shearer. Boy, I made some real jack on this picture and I bought it cheap (right) too. Will please where weak plots are liked. Step on it. Tone O. K. Appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw all classes, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. D. C. Smith, Lyric Theatre (300 seats), Fordyce, Arkansas.

EXCUSE ME. (5,084 feet). Stars, Conrad Nagel, Norma Shearer. Extra good program picture, with comedy and thrills galore. Pleased everyone. Good tone. Appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw family patronage, town 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

GREAT WHITE WAY. (10 reels). Star cast. Here is a picture of Broadway's bright lights that is a hundred per cent entertainment from every angle. A sparkling, strong plot that is exceptionally good and will hold your attention throughout. Action and incident follow swiftly, presenting an exciting steeplechase, a big prize fight, with a background of sporting and back stage life peopled with numerous celebrities, and the entire Ziegfeld Follies chorus. This is a keen picture, boys, of life on Broadway, and a money maker. Draw from tourist class, city of 3,000. Admission 10-30. George W. Walther, Dixie Theatre (500 seats), Kerrville, Texas.

GREED. (10,067 feet). Special cast. Acting and photography good. Story entirely too gruesome. The principal characters all die, so I call it a tragedy, with not a light spot in the entire picture. Tone bad. Appeal 50 per cent. No for Sunday. Yes as a special. Draw general class, city 500,000. Admission 10-20. Wm. T. Meeks, Silliman's Murray Theatre (740 seats), Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

MAN AND MAID. (8,307 feet). Star, Lew Cody. This is just another Elinor Glyn story that has been chopped by the Pennsylvania Censors so much that it is no good here. Draw general class, city 35,000. Admission 25-35. C. D. Buss, Strand Theatre (700 seats), Easton, Pennsylvania.

MARRIED FLIRTS. (6,705 feet). Star cast. Good picture; a little above program schedule. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,645. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

ROMOLA. (12,974 feet). Stars, Gish Sisters. A good picture, as far as that goes; but my patrons refused to see it on account of costume. Can't cram the stuff down their throats any more. Draw general class, town 2,145. Admission 10-25. H. D. Wharton, Pastime Theatre (500 seats), Warren, Arkansas.

SCARAMOUCHE. (9,600 feet). Stars, Ramon Novarro, Alice Terry and feature cast. A splendid picture that will please the people —especially of smaller towns. My people enjoyed it hugely. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday but no as special. Draw town and country type, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. Herbert Tapp, Hippodrome Theatre (440 seats), Sheridan, Indiana.

UNINVITED GUEST. (6,145 feet). Star, Mary MacLaren. This is a wonderful picture with a poor drawing title. Photography is excellent. Picture and acting good. Technicolor wonderful. This was sold to me for an entire Colored Picture—at a big price. Don't be fooled on this one as there is only about half a reel of colored scenes in it. We were, I felt, stung for a big price for only a cheap program picture under above condition. Fair tone. Appeal seventy-five per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw neighborhood patronage, city 77,000. Admission 10-20. Wm. A. Leucht, Jr., Savoy Theatre (475 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

Paramount

BEGGAR ON HORSEBACK. All star cast. Not a very good picture for the average small town audience. Is a graphic portrayal of the fantastic vagaries of a mind, diseased by overwork and worry, while in a dream, the result of sleep produced by an opiate. This picture when approached from this angle, is a masterpiece. Photography and acting excellent, and the effects show real genius and fertility of imagination. The advertising that was sent us would indicate a picture that was light and foolish which is a mistake. It was so deep that some could not follow it. It was a money loser here. Good only for those who grasp the director's idea. My admission was 10 and 25 cents. W. C. Whiting, Whiting Opera House (260 seats), Whiting, Iowa.

CODE OF THE WEST. (6,777 feet). Star, Owen Moore. This picture went over big: my advice is—buy it and buy it quick. Forest fire very good. Good tone. Appeal a hundred per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmer and town class, town 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre 249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

EMPTY HANDS. (6,976 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A fine picture. Jack does some good stunts in this one. You can't go wrong on this one. Tone good. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmer class, town 730. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (300 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

HERITAGE OF THE WEST. (5,785 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Zane Grey stories are popular here. Not so good as "To the Last Man" but it pleased. Cast good, lighting and direction poor; but will get by. On six reels. Good tone. Appeal 95 per cent. No for Sunday and a semi-special. Draw farmers and small town of 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell. Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

HUMMING BIRD. (5,577 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Excellent underworld story with some dandy war scenes. Swanson is great and my audience likes her. Print out of St. Louis on eight reels. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmers and small town of 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City Missouri.

IN THE NAME OF LOVE. (5,904 feet). Star, Ricardo Cortez. This drew fairly well. Story very light. Good tone. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and small town of 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

PETER PAN. (9,593 feet). Star, Betty Bronson. From reports of exhibitors I received the impression that "Peter Pan" is a pretty tame show and so I had not much heart in pushing it. A good many of my regular crowd did not attend but the show drew many ladies and children who come only occasionally. A good many boys (brought, I should judge, by the serial "Riddle Rider") were all interested and eager while "Peter Pan" was shown. Although I did not clean up any money I am glad I ran it as such a show should give prestige to my house. L. E. Parsons, Parsons Hall, (325 seats), Marcellus, New York.

PIED PIPER MALONE. (7,264 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. One of Meighan's best: you cannot go wrong on this one. Very good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

RUGGED WATER. (6,015 feet). Star cast. Good picture; a little above program schedule. Good tone. Fair appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and merchants, widely scattered town 1,645, Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP. (7,500 feet). Special cast. I was afraid of this Cruze picture, but it was better than I thought. Be careful how you advertise this. Torrence and Horton are screams. Not a western. Good tone. Appeal 80 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw farmers and small town, 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

SALOMY JANE. (6,276 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Bret Harte's story made into a very exciting western, of a high class type. Lefty Flynn good. On seven reels. (Played this last winter in bad weather so did not draw well). Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw farmers and small town of 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

SHOCK PUNCH. (6,151 feet). Star, Richard Dix. Pretty good; but not near as good as "The Lucky Devil." Good tone. Appeal fair. Yes for Sunday, no as special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

SINNERS IN HEAVEN. (6,621 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. A good picture. A lot of fine shots in it. Good acting and good directing. All in all, a good show. Tone fair. Appeal 80 per cent. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmer class, town 730. Admission 10-25. Jack Schneider, Kalona Theatre (300 seats), Kalona, Iowa.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Feature cast. A great picture that should please in any house. A powerful production. Wonderful settings. Admission 25-50. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. R. A. Preuss, Arvada Theatre, Arvada, Colorado.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Featured cast includes Theodore Roberts. This is a wonderful picture. Pleased all classes in our town. Did good business three days. Admission 25-50 on this. This picture will help to give a theatre a good reputation. Should not be shown less than two days. Extra good tone. Good appeal. Yes for Sunday and as a special. Draw all classes, town of less than a thousand. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

TEN COMMANDMENTS. (11 reels). Star cast. This is a wonderful production. Buy it, but buy it right. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmers and small town, 1,200. Admission 10-25. C. R. Seff, New Radio Theatre (249 seats), Correctionville, Iowa.

TONGUES OF FLAME. (6,763 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Very good; rather improbable in parts but I would say book it as it is different from the general run and my audience seemed to like it. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farm and town class, town 600. Admission 10-20 and 10-30. H. W. Batchelder, Galt Theatre (175 seats), Galt, California.

TRIUMPH. (8,297 feet). Star, Rod LaRoque. One of those good, wholesome pictures that will please most anyone. Very good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw small town and country class, town 1,800. Admission 15-25. O. G. Odell, Odelphi Theatre (400 seats), Hughesville, Pennsylvania.

WAGES OF VIRTUE. (7,083 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. This one is not in the class with "The Humming Bird." They are going to kill Gloria here if they keep her in the kind of pictures they are now putting her in. Get behind this one if Gloria pulls. Good tone. Appeal 75 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw railroad and farm class, town 3,000. Admission 10-25. H. C. Porter, Dreamland Theatre (350 seats), New Albany, Mississippi.

WELCOME HOME. (5,909 feet). Cruze production. Fair, but slow. Excellent tone. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw average class, city 10,000. Admission 10-25. H. V. Smoots, Vine Theatre (600 seats), Mt. Vernon, Ohio.

WELCOME HOME. (5,909 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. This is an extra good comedy drama. Pleased all who saw it. Business was light. I believe the title is bad; it had no pulling power here. Tone and appeal O. K. No as special. Draw all classes in small town, 2,500. Admission 10-30. M. W. Larmour, National Theatre (430 seats), Graham, Texas.

WEST OF THE WATER TOWER. (7 reels). Star, Glenn Hunter. Excellent picture and cast. Pleased almost everyone and drew a little extra money. Print good out of St. Louis, on eight reels. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday and special. Draw farmers and small town of 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

WILD BILL HICKOK. (6,892 feet). Star, William S. Hart. Personally I thought this was Hart's best; but not much comment either way. Drew a little extra money on a one night run. Historical scenes good. Good tone. Fair appeal. No for Sunday or special. Draw farmers and small town, 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

WOMAN PROOF. (7,657 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Meighan always a good bet here. This is a good picture and the cast is excellent. A light comedy that you'll make no mistake on. On eight reels. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, a semi-special. Draw farmers and small town, 120. Admission 10-25. M. B. Russell, Benton Community Theatre (140 seats), Benton City, Missouri.

Producers' Dist. Corp.

GIRL ON THE STAIRS. (6,214 feet). Star, Patsy Ruth Miller. An extra good mystery play. Good tone. Appeal ninety-eight per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw city and farm class, city 25,000. Admission 10-30. Robert W. Hines, Boyd's Hall Theatre (500 seats), Bowdle, South Dakota.

WANDERING HUSBANDS. (6 reels). Special cast. Picture pleased the majority, including the children. There were more laughs in the last two or three reels than in most comedies. Margaret Livingston does fine acting in this one. Good tone. Appeal 90 per cent. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw family patronage, town 5,000. Admission 10-15-25. Nyman Kessler, Atlantic Theatre (300 seats), Atlantic, Massachusetts.

United Artists

WHITE ROSE. (11 reels). Star. Mae Marsh. Wonderful picture for adults, Nothing but good comment on this one. Draw all classes, town 2,800. Admission 10-30. A. C. Gordon, Star Theatre, Weiser, Idaho.

Universal

BROADWAY OR BUST. (5,272 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This is an extra good western: full of comedy. Pleased our audience immensely. Good tone and appeal. Yes for Sunday, no as special. Draw all classes, town less than a thousand. G. H. Perry, People's Theatre (250 seats), Cloverdale, California.

DARING CHANCES. Star, Jack Hoxie. Just an average western. Hoxie is capable of better work. Tone O. K. Appeal 75 per cent. No for Sunday or as special. Draw farmer and small town class, a circuit. Admission 10-25. Allen & Underhill, Pastime Circuit, Chelsea, Vermont.

Warner Brothers

BEAU BRUMMEL. (10 reels). Star, John Barrymore. A wonderful picture for highbrow but no good for small towns. Ten reels is too long. Good tone. Appeal 100 per cent. Yes for Sunday and yes for special with regard to above. David W. Strayer, Mt. Joy Theatre, Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

Straight From the Shoulder Index

Complete July to September

This Index contains, listed alphabetically under company headings, titles of pictures on which exhibitors have sent in reports which have been published in Moving Picture World's Straight From the Shoulder dependable tip department. The dates indicate which issues contained reports on the picture they follow—there may be more than one report on the same picture in the issues. Independent productions are so listed; but not by companies. This Index is cumulative for each six month period.

Tips Help

Avard J. Sloat, who, with Mitchell Conery operates the Conoat Projection service, says:

"Conery and I have been running a number of shows this summer in small towns in this section (New York State).

"I am sending tips on the pictures we have used; we have been drawing from small town class plus vacationists.

"I want to say, Van, that we do most of our booking with your report section as a guide."

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Universal Creates New Official Color To Advertise The Phantom of the Opera

THE outstanding stunt of the campaign on The Phantom of the Opera, the new big Universal was the "creation" of a new color, known as "Phantom Red" and so officially designated by the Textile Color Card Association of America.

It's one thing to say you have a new color that teams up with a production, but to get the Association to officially recognize this fact is something decidedly different, and this is the first time that a color connected with a photoplay has been so officially recognized.

This association was formed to standardize colors and to chart them for trade use. The membership includes the textile and dyeing industries, scores of manufacturing lines, woolen mills and in fact all who use color in their products.

It Means Something

In addition to the factor members, the interest of scientific societies has been engaged, and the Metropolitan Museum of Art, the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences and similar institution are represented on the Board of Advisors.

The association has sent all members a letter to which is affixed a sample of the new shade, the letter commencing: "This color has been created by us at the request of the Universal Pictures Corporation to symbolize its forthcoming production, The Phantom of the Opera."

All of this would be unimportant, were it not for the fact that the new shade has been accepted by the trade as one of the fall and winter shades.

Universal circularized the trades on its own account, offering to supply a window card. Several thousand cards were distributed. It cannot be reproduced because of a lack of color contrast between the red printing and the yellow card, but you'll see them in the windows.

Brings Results

As an example; one shop, Capezio's shoe store, put a few phantom red shoes into its window. The first day they sold thirty pairs, and as a result the window is now entirely red. Footwear will be offered in both leather and fabric, and some smart manufacturers are rushing production.

In addition to this there is a tie into Phantom Red lipstick, which is being advertised in hundreds of dry goods stores in the greater city. The shade lends itself well to lip tinting and the name is attractive. Many stores are making special window displays to tie in to the opening of the picture. There are two styles of window cards.

One thousand cards were put into stores handling the products of the Radiola Company, showing Mary Philbin at one of their instruments, with a red phantom in the lower corner. The cards are attractive, and are getting attention.

Book Jackets

Thousands of book jackets were distributed and the drug stores, chief sellers of seventy five cent books, and circulating libraries have used these in place of the regular jackets, with the result that they are seen on elevated and subway trains and elsewhere, giving the impression that everyone is reading the story.

In addition, some 200 copies of the actual book were placed in hotel lobbies and public rest rooms, where the patrons may get interested in the novel.

An oddity is a trick postcard showing only the phantom and carrying the copy "Hold this to the light" and "A great thrill is coming into your life." Held to the light, the card shows a scene in which the phantom appears, together with appropriate copy for the opening.

Rotos in Plenty

Rotogravure sections are distributed by boys at railroad stations and in the theatre district, and it is almost impossible to escape them, while the El Dorado restaurant, in the centre of the theatre district, made a huge pictorial cake with the phantom created out of grated vegetables. The restaurant specializes in window display, and the theatre crowds have a habit of looking to see what the display is for the day. Generally the subjects are non-theatrical, which gives the greater value to this stunt.

With all sorts of paper from snipes to 24 sheets running well out of town, it's impossible to be in New York and not learn of The Phantom of the Opera.

Intensive is a mild term to apply to this exploitation. It's both intensive and expansive. It's all over the town.

The Phantom offers an unusually practical line of neat trade hookups.

A VEGETABLE CAKE AND A NEW LIPSTICK HELPED TO TELL OF PHANTOM OF THE OPERA

These are a pair of the lesser lights on the New York campaign on the Universal super-super. The big accomplishment was creating a new red and having it officially adopted by The Textile Color Card Association of America. In between these stunts were a host of others which put the picture on the New York amusement map almost overnight.

Milt is Leaving

Milt D. Crandall, who has been press man for the Rowland & Clark theatres, Pittsburgh, the past two seasons, announces his retirement on October 1.

Milt, who was the originator of the famous Mickey campaign, and who has done national publicity for many attractions, has made a fine record in Pittsburgh, and winds up his connection with a space-grabbing stunt in the shape of the selection of a "Miss Pittsburgh" for the Atlantic City pageant. He also put the Film Forecast on a subscription basis, and worked a revolution in local theatrical advertising. He leaves a wonderful record, but he wants a change, and a man who can get over two thousand columns of type and picture publicity tied to his theatre on a beauty picking stunt can land in almost anywhere.

Discounts Pay

Nyman Kessler, of the Atlantic theatre, Atlantic, Mass., writes that he finds it profitable to offer a reduced admission now and then to some certain class.

For example, he offered a fifteen cent admission to each young man or woman who came to The Man Who Came Back, if accompanied by a parent—at full price. This not only drove home his argument that all young people should see the story, but it brought some in who would not have come at straight admissions. Also it brought them back on full pay nights.

Another program offers the same reduction to all wives accompanied by their husbands, or all maids who came with their escorts.

He is going up to three shows a week for the winter and is using an old Our Gang comedy to put over the first three features, finding that the short has a real pulling power.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

With Rex Beach's "Winds of Chance" it was decided not to use a prologue but to make up a show of diversified incidents, all of which would contrast with the feature itself. Consequently, there was an orchestral number with a solo incorporated, a big stage presentation and a soprano solo on the apron of the big stage. In addition there was the Topical Review and a short special film called "Thoughts for Labor Day," made up especially for this theatre by James A. Fitzpatrick. The whole show ran 2 hours and 17 minutes, of which time "Winds of Chance" took up 1 hour and 46 minutes. The musical numbers required 21 minutes and the Topical Review, incorporated with "Thoughts for Labor Day," 10 minutes.

Opening each of the deluxe performances of the day was selections from the Bizet opera "Carmen." After the best selections of "Carmen" had been played, Carlo Ferretti, baritone, came out on the apron of the large stage and sang the "Toreador" song as a finish to the presentation. As an encore the baritone sang an Italian folk song. Lights for this: one dark eryth Mestrum flood from the dome on the orchestra and apron of the big stage. Orange spotlight on the singer, also from the dome. Foots and borders of large stage in blue; purple-spangled draw curtains closed across the small production stage and lighted by 4 arch spots of steel blue; amber foot lights on the small stage. Five minutes for this number.

After the Topical Review and the "Thoughts for Labor Day" came Estelle Carey, lyric soprano, on the apron of the large stage. She sang the ballad, "Oh How I Miss You Tonight." Lights: purple-spangled draw curtains closed across small production stage lighted by steel blue spots from the sides; green borders on the large stage with light eryth and steel blue crossing on the ceiling from the dome; purple Mestrum flood on orchestra from the projection room and a straw spot on the singer, also from the projection room, 2 lemon spots on the vases in the windows at either side of the stage. Three minutes for this solo.

"Reminiscences of Franz Schubert," running 13 minutes, closed the stage presentations and immediately preceded the feature photoplay. The setting was a garden in full bloom with 4 blossom trees placed in front of a low wall. The back-drop used was of a French garden and there were also two arbors at either side of the stage. Rustic chairs and branches were used. Artists were costumed to conform with the Franz Schubert period. At the opening a basso representing Schubert was seen seated at a table composing music. The orchestra played measures of "March Militaire" for this. A soprano came on and greeted the composer with a courtesy and he arose from his seat for a duet with the soprano, "Song of Love." Then followed a toe dance by a member of the ballet, "Moment Musicale." A tenor then came on and sang "Who Is Sylvia," after which a contralto sang the well-known "Serenade." This number closed with "Song of Love."

A Stag Wedding

A wedding prologue in which the bride and bridesmaids were college boys batted out a high average on The Marriage Whirl for George Rea, of the Grand Theatre, Columbus, Ga.

The boys were members of the college dramatic club and were glad to give their services, the only cost for the prologue being hire of wigs for the "girls" and six tickets.

Most of the students helped to swell the audience

A FINE LOBBY ON THE WHITE DESERT ARRANGED BY W. F. BROCK, OF NASHVILLE

Most of the effect is carried by the banner across the top, but the impression is given of an entire snow lobby, though there was very little painting to supplement the cotton-draped frames. The banner dominated the space and gave a chill suggestion that was very inviting in the heated wind-up of the summer season. People came just because it looked cool.

Lost on a Picture to Gain Good Will

Losing money to make money is farsighted. Barry Burke, of the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth, Texas, had planned for a cleanup for North of 36. He had it all set to build an entire new set of house records, and it looked as though he would until he was asked to loan his theatre for two days for the convention of the American Petroleum Institute.

For the two days of the convention he moved the picture into the Chamber of Commerce Auditorium, with a limited capacity, but when he went back to his own house the town packed in, and he made some daily records though he could not get the distance hang-up.

It looks as though he had lost money on the picture, but as a matter of fact he stands to make a lot though this is coming in day by day instead of in a bunch.

Petroleum is close to the Texas heart. The Palace was the only place in which to house it suitably. The entire town appreciates the action in making the convention a success, and the goodwill will be worth more cash than that which was apparently lost.

Pointed Paths

Placards printed merely "Paradise," with a direction arrow were posted all over town by Charles R. Hammerslough. The arrows all guided to the Academy of Music, where the full advertising told of Paths to Paradise.

Mr. Hammerslough also send out a man and girl in a disguised Ford with a sign telling that they were following the Paths to Paradise. A fake arrest in the business district added to the effect of this stunt.

COLLABORATION WITH FOUR RAILROADS SOLD THE IRON HORSE AT ST. LOUIS

Someone worked a knockout stunt when the Fox star picture played the Grand Central. The top line shows the Missouri Pacific display. The left shows a panorama 300 feet long showing scenes along the route of the road. The middle line is the Missouri Central display flanked by the window details shown in the middle. Below is the M. P. exterior and the model of the first Frisco Line engine contrasted with a picture of its latest giant. This was the lobby display. This is one of the most comprehensive stunts ever worked.

Cleveland Campaign Heavy on The Fool

Keith's Palace Theatre, Cleveland, made an exceptionally heavy drive on The Fool when that production came into its program. Realizing the value of the picture in gaining clerical goodwill, a special showing was arranged for ministers of all denominations, for welfare workers, the Salvation Army officials, heads of labor organizations and the newspaper men.

This was announced by a tactfully worded letter, and that the stunt was worth the trouble of doing well was proven by the number of pulpit references made to the play.

An airplane was sent over the city and its suburbs to drop cards to which were attached pennies, the essential text being that the penny with five more would pay the recipients fare to the Palace. The reverse carried selling talk on the play. To avoid accident each card was attached to a parachute.

As one of the leading characters is supposed to be a Pole, the Polish newspapers were given special advertisements.

Oil paintings were used in store windows as well as in the theatre lobby and in the lobby of a dark burlesque house, while small cards were placed in windows beside heads or full figures of clowns. For a prologue a prize winning male choir was used in a setting patterned after the set for The Miracle. This body of fifty men not only sang a prologue but rendered selections at appropriate points in the play.

With extra newspaper work and a lavish poster campaign, the picture was sent over to exceptional business.

They Looked New

Byman Kessler, of the Atlantic Theatre, Atlantic, Mass., celebrated Greater Movie Season with a pair of old-timers, but they drew just as well as though they were pre-release. He offered The White Moth on Wednesday and Within the Law on Saturday.

Since the former is laid in Paris he advertised an "excursion" with the front page program copy written in that vein. It got more attention than a straight appeal with the play.

As a special concession wives were admitted for fifteen cents if accompanied by a full-price husband.

The receipts were as large as the newer product would have brought, but the real reason for using older pictures was inability to get the new titles, since Quincy has them tied up. Since he could not get a new one, he took the pick of the old.

An Action Scene Sold Tom Mix Well

C. F. Creslein, of the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., made a very effective lobby attractor for The Last of the Duanes. He painted a cone shaped sand dune, with cacti at the base and lettered at the top: "Tom Mix and Tony make this leap in Zane Grey's The Last of the Duanes."

The front was broken away to show a house background with a pool of real water in front into which Tom and Tony were doing their dive, which is one of the scenes from the play.

The cutout of horse and rider was taken from a poster and suspended in front of the backing with fine wires, so that they appeared to be in midair.

Brightly lighted by concealed lights, this stood out in strong display, and it was so cleverly painted that it attracted unusually favorable comment. It was all he needed to back up his usual campaign for extra business.

Pat McGee persuaded a local firm that a fur fashion show would fit right in with A Slave of Fashion, so he pulled a good one at the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, on the Shearer play. It's good for any season.

Below are two of the clown busts used in connection with Fool cards. These were picked up wherever they could be found and used to point up the cards.

A Split Cut Tells Essence of Story

Here is a useful plan book cut on The Unholy Three as used by Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo. Taken in conjunction with the text, it leaves nothing to the imagination and yet tells nothing of the actual story. It gives the plot factors, telling them in such a manner that you can imagine the possibilities, and then leaves it to the reader to decide whether or not the result should be interesting. It sets down the fullest possible appeal, and should sell to the fullest possible extent. And the best part is that the picture will make good the anticipation it creates. It will possibly get a smile from showmen, who know that giants are notoriously weak; but this really is a Strong Man Act and not a giant. But the public does not know that and the idea of a giant and a dwarf serving the evil aims of a scheming ventriloquist should be sufficient to draw the money from all ages. The puppet idea splits the space so that three distinct approaches can be made. It is an unusually good example of strong selling.

Icicle Signature; Smouldering Fires

Probably there is no danger that Smouldering Fires will melt the icicles in the signature of the Century Theatre, Baltimore, but the combination is suggestive. The Universal Jewel was brought forward for the house's Greater Movie Season week. The display is a little stilted, chiefly because the reverse strip coasts across the entire space from rule to rule, but it is not ineffective and offers a number of good selling contracts; two in the notch of the cut and one above it. The best point of the layout it that most of the lines have been held down to give the best play-up to the star and title, though there is a little too much type around Miss Frederick's name to let it come through properly. However, we do not believe that anyone will overlook the name, though it does not command the instant attention it would receive were it rid of those lines above and below. It might have been better to have dropped the lines below the cut to get the star display there. Those lines have some selling value, but the selling should have been done with the questions just above and the "sister against sister" at the top. This is 145x3, which gives ample room. Baltimore spaces are large, but the Sun gives so much space to the pictures that the houses can afford the encouragement of larger ads than are strictly necessary. The public interest gained and sustained is of real value.

More Orphans

It was orphans are trumps when Barry Burke played Sally at the Palace Theatre, Fort Worth. Barry Burke gave a party to an entire asylum, with ice cream and cake afterward, and the Kiwanis Club supplied the automobile transportation. All of the papers ran pictures and the youngsters themselves were a real ballyhoo.

A drive was made on the phonograph stores and much made of the fact that two local girls were in the picture.

The net result was Winter business in mid-Summer.

Good Display on The Neutral Cut

This stock cut on The Street of Forgotten Men is a good title display, but the picture is just that — a picture. It was used by Loew's Aldine Theatre, Pittsburgh, in a three tens and probably was selected because the circle gave a good display to the title. For the rest it merely is a picture of a man and a woman and some house tops. There had to be something to surround the reverse circle, and as well this as anything, perhaps, but it is not representative of the best of the Paramount work; nor even of the average. As a matter of fact we think it might have been more effective had the portraits been omitted; just the street, with a suggestion of clouds where Marmont is shown. The cut comes up very well for Pittsburgh printing, and it makes a good display, though one with comparatively little selling appeal on a story with more than usual to tell about.

The Single Cut is Enough for Ladies

Loew's Valentine Theatre, Toledo, comes through nicely in a three eights for Pretty Ladies, using only a single cut. The dancer is enough to get attention and to make a hook-up with the title. The rest is a matter of telling about the many features that will interest the average playgoer. The all cap lines have been transposed and do not make exact sense. They should read: "Try to take your eyes off those gorgeous, gay girlies in —" running into the title, just below, but "Try to take your eyes off pretty ladies" made sense to the proof reader, and he let it go through. Probably the house agent did not get a chance at the proof. The Valentine used to turn out some particularly atrocious examples of hand lettering. Turning to type it goes to the other extreme and gets some very good effects. There is good copy here, yet we think that the best touch is not so much the copy as the economy of cut which permits the excellent selling talk to be put over properly. Pretty Ladies needs to be talked about. It has much to offer, and the offering should be spread before the reader. This space has been framed to accomplish just that purpose with isolated two and three line appeals.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

ONE CUT SUFFICES

Two Tone Cut is Rather Obscure

This two sixes on The White Desert from Loew's Theatre, Newark, N. J., loses much of its value from the use of a cut that does not bring up the title. With a good black it is possible that the reproduction will bring back the values that showed in the original drawing, but in the newspaper the text is almost wholly lost. The artist's idea seems to have been to give emphasis to the "white" though showing in white against a benday background. Probably in the original drawing this design was several times its present two column width. Reducing it to a scant four inches brought the benday down so fine that it looks much darker than was intended and not only is a portion of the title lost, but the selling line above also disappears. It runs "If you think you're snow proof, see this mighty snow film." That's a good line for hot days and it is a shame to waste it. The snow scene is effective and this seems to have blinded the layout man to the more important faults in the cut. At that, it probably looked better in the plan book than it did in the newspaper. The thing to remember is that you are using newsprint and not a calendared surface. The ink sinks in, instead of drying on the surface, and takes the lines in with it.

A Metro-Goldwyn Release

TOO OBSCURE

Type and Cut Are Properly Placed

This two fives on The Saddle Hawk from the Palace Theatre, Des Moines, Ia., gives a nice result with a very simple arrangement of cut and type. The type is all at the top, where it gets first chance, but the use of a twelve point rule on two sides holds the two into one compact display, while keeping the illustration out of the way of the selling talk. The cut seems to have been cropped at the sides to get it in, but this is not noticeable, and is better than running across another column just to get the horse's tail all in. This differs from the usual display, and the layer style of layout is not always as good as this. It all depends upon the cut. Here the two sections are so nicely joined that you do not realize that it is not all one piece. The sketch is spirited. It illustrates the chief dramatic moment mentioned in the selling talk, and it belongs right where it is.

A Romola Display Looks Convincing

This four tens from M. A. Malaney for Romola at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, fits the attraction. Malaney seeks to convey the impression that this is something better than ordinary, and his layout matches his type phrases. It does not suggest a wild melodrama or farce comedy. It looks the part. It suggests class and dignity and gives a nice display to some lines written with the same idea in mind. The half tones do not come up very well, though as a rule Cleveland does well by a fairly close screen, but the portraits are recognizable in the original size, and they are to be preferred to a scene cut, no matter how good the latter may be, where the main effort is to sell the stars above the play. About the only point wherein this display might materially be improved comes at the bottom where there are three banks in the same full face. Setting the centre bank in an italic might have given a nicer display. That's a very small point where there is so much to approve. The chief value of this space is that it does not

WHO'S WHO IN PRESENTATIONS
No. 1

MAJOR EDWARD BOWES, managing director and director of production, Capitol Theatre, New York City. Born in San Francisco, Cal. Lived there until 1907, operating in real estate. His fortune and business obliterated by great fire of 1906, but during two years following he successfully re-established himself and after clearing all mortgage obligations started on road to another fortune. In 1908 he married Margaret Illington, well known American star, after which Major and Mrs. Bowes came East to live.

Brought up in an artistic environment, being interested in dramatic and musical matters, he turned his energies to the theatre. In association with John Cort and Peter McCourt he was one of the original owners of the Cort Theatre, New York; the Park Square Theatre, Boston, besides a producer of plays. In 1918, in association with Messmore Kendall and others, he built the Capitol Theatre, which was the crystallization of a dream of this group of men to erect the finest expression of a temple for the presentation of motion pictures. He gave his supervision to every detail of the designing, construction and decoration of the theatre.

He has been managing director of the Capitol since its opening, and now has assumed the active direction of stage production, personally supervising all the details in connection with the presentation of the music, ballet and general divertissements. He also serves as laiason between the Capitol Theatre Family and the radio public. Major Bowes is vice-president and member of the executive committee of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. With this unusual background of experience, Major Bowes becomes one of the important factors in the production of motion pictures and in their artistic presentation to the public.

NEWMAN SIGNS FORBSTEIN

IT has been reported that Frank L. Newman, manager of Famous Players-Lasky's Metropolitan Theatre in Los Angeles has signed his favorite musical director, Leo Forbstein, to head up his present orchestra and musical department. Mr. Forbstein has resigned as director of the Newman Theatre orchestra in Kansas City. His appointment followed a brief engagement as guest conductor at the Metropolitan during the summer, and upon the termination of the engagement the musicians signed a petition requesting his permanent affiliation. Mr. Forbstein has been engaged with various Newman Theatre organizations during his entire period of his motion picture theatre affiliation in Kansas City, St. Louis and St. Joseph, Mo.

MANGAN'S PRODUCTIONS

EXCELLENT reports are being received from Chicago relative to the surrounding programs devised and presented by Francis A. Mangan at the Capitol and Stratford Theatres. One of the features of the program at Stratford Theatre this week is a pretentious presentation programmed "The Diamond Horseshoe." It is very spectacular and can readily be classed as one of the most sensational and daring presentations ever attempted in a motion picture theatre.

SOME ATTRACTIVE FABRICS

ABALONE cloth is a new fabric offered on the market. It derives its name from its resemblance to the line of abalone shells, suggesting a smoked mother-of-pearl effect of a grayish tinge. It is similar in its appearance to patent leather, being of sufficient texture to be used in making hats, grotesque costumes and even shoes. It also has scenic values. It averages forty inches in width and retails about $2.50 per yard. Some attractive velvets in a variety of colors and studded with rhinestones are being offered for five dollars per yard. The stones of small cuts are worked into large designs, which do not hinder the pliability of the material.

ZURO OPENS OFFICES

JOSIAH ZURO, formerly associated with Hugo Riesenfeld as his director of presentation in the F-P theatres, New York, has opened offices in new Steinway Hall. Mr. Zuro's first venture as an independent producer will be the organization of a permanent open-air opera company. The success accorded Mr. Zuro during this season as director and conductor of the New York City Municipal Opera assures organization and programs of the highest quality. Mr. Zuro plans to teach and coach a number of artists in standard operatic roles, besides devoting a large part of his time towards the development of opera in English.

PERSONALITIES

THROUGH accredited sources we learn that BETTY GOULD, organist at the Broadway-Strand, Detroit, has resigned and starts on an extensive vacation. Miss Gould is one of the most popular theatre organists in Detroit. That VAN and SCHENCK, contrary to recent orders of the Keith-Albee Circuit, are "standing 'em up" in leading picture theatres with programs that are sure-fire and "pennant winners." That DR. EDWARD KILENYI, musical director of the Colony Theatre, New York City, is putting the finishing touches to an excellent score for the big Lloyd feature, "The Freshman," opening soon at that theatre. Dr. Kilenyi is recognized as one of the best arrangers in the country, besides being a composer of fifty popular film themes.

ATLANTIC CITY BEAUTIES AT RIALTO

SIX of the bathing beauties of the recent Beauty Tournament at Atlantic City will appear in person at the Rialto Theatre, New York City. The girls include Miss Birmingham, Miss San Francisco, Miss Bay Ridge, Miss Boston, Miss Detroit and Miss St. Louis. They will be introduced at every performance by Miss Olive Ann Alcorn, noted as the most beautifully formed girl in America.

A Moving Picture World Presentation

Detailed information relative to the production of the presentation suggested are printed herewith. Permission is given to any producer or exhibitor to use the Colby Harriman suggestions appearing in this section. Any other information desired to stage the presentation may be secured upon request.

"AN OLD FASHIONED FASHION SHOW"
Introducing an Old Fashioned Gown Contest
A Moving Picture World Presentation
Devised by Colby Harriman

FASHION SHOWS, as a general rule, prove profitable features for a motion picture theatre. The present-day fashion show, which runs the gamut at this season from autumn sports wear to furs, can be preceded or followed by an "old fashioned fashion show" introducing the gowns of earlier American periods. Linking this fashion show to a local "old fashioned gown contest" it would seem that such a feature should prove an excellent box office attraction. The basis of the contest may be generally stated. Offer a certain number of prizes to the parties who (1) enter the most attractive costumes of the various American periods; (2) to the person who enters an authentic costume belonging to the oldest period; (3) a prize for the most popular old fashioned costume of any of the periods displayed. There are innumerable exploitation angles to this contest and tie-ups could probably be effected between the theatre and various stores for the display of some of these costumes.

The presentation surrounding the contest has been devised to create the proper atmosphere for the introduction of the various period dresses and gowns of the past American periods.

ROUTINE

The set has been designed to form a background marked for its simplicity, but affording a proper tonal effect as a background for the display of the various gowns. It is suggested that a song and dance routine precede the display of the various entries and this may be routined in a manner similar to the following: Open with an ensemble dance and song number, with the characters doing a Gavotte or Polka. The Minuet is not recommended for this particular presentation as it is suggested that the Colonial atmosphere be kept in the background as much as possible, emphasizing the period between 1825 and the present. A Ballet number can follow this selection, with the characters in an 1850 period costume. A soft-shoe dance of the late '80s can be introduced, and for a special number the "Floradora Sextette" can be used to advantage. After a promenade of the various characters and for a finale it is suggested that the ensemble, clad in "1860" costumes, enter for a number which will introduce a group of dancers in the billowy dresses, gradually increasing the spirit of the dance by rendering a succession of bits of various dances until it reaches the present, when immediately after a low curtsy the dancers emerge from their billowy dresses, displaying the very abbreviated dancing costumes of today. Much comedy can be injected into this presentation, especially if bathing suits of various periods are shown in contrast to the present one-piece type, and it is also suggested that some of the antiquated suits worn by men of that period be introduced during the action.

GROUND PLAN

The Ground Plan which accompanies a sketch of the set is detailed as follows: Two French windows are placed right and left of the stage. The windows are practical and the frames are mounted in a flat which would run parallel with the curtain line. The two flats are connected with an arched border which can also be a constructed arch attached to the two masking flats extending from the flats containing the window frames with the balance of the set up stage. A sky backing with flippers should be placed back of the French windows right and left. The backing should be high enough to mask and an entrance should be left at extreme off stage sides. Up center a unit of steps leads to a platform. A drop or constructed frame bearing the arched framework which contains the two windows and practical doors up center is on the upstage side of the platform. On the upstage side of the window and door frame a platform should be placed with steps or runway leading to it off stage. A sky drop used to back. The box window seats can be placed inside the window frame right and left of the door up center. Various bits of furniture can be distributed, such as benches, stools, carved chairs with tapestry upholstery. These will dress the set effectively.

SCENIC TREATMENT

It is suggested that the body of the set

Big First Run Presentations

CAPITOL THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Graustark" (First National) (Second Week) (Week of September 13th)

Music:

The overture, played by the Capitol Grand Orchestra, with David Mendoza conducting, is the Finale "Fifth Symphony" by Tschaikovsky. The balance of the musical program is the same as of previous week.

Divertissements

Two changes were made in the surrounding program for this week, eliminating "Lil' Black Rose" number and the Trotere Duet. The following numbers were presented in the open spots:

Gladys Rice

Miss Rice sings "Eili Eili!" the traditional Hebrew melody after the notation of Shalitt by Kurt Schindler. The singer, dressed in the garb of a Jewish woman, stands on a platform left of center which is masked with a rock row about three feet high. A lower row adjoins the platform and extends off to right, and a profiled wing adjoins the platform at extreme left. The effect is very good, giving the appearance of the singer standing on a rocky prominence. A foliage border attached to a tree trunk cut leg at right extends about two-thirds of the way across the top of the opening. Some barren bush clusters are attached to the platform and row at center. A sky drop is used to back, this being toned a blue gray, blue strips at the base of the drop, gradually blended with a lighter tone towards the top of the drop. A yellow star is hung on the upper part of the sky drop at right center. The singer is silhouetted against the sky, the green-blue foreground barely making her face visible. For the conclusion of her song, a light blue border spot placed at right is brought on, flooding her head and shoulders in a contrasting light that is most effective.

William Robyn

This Capitol favorite renders "Love Me and I'll Live Forever," by Ted Snyder. The setting is effective. Two blue fabric curtains hung in two at right and left center, leaving about a twelve opening at center. A two step platform extends across the opening, with a cut-out balustrade attached on the top level. Sky drop to back. A marble garden bench is placed down left center. Two large stone vases are placed right and left on the top step of the unit up center. The edge of a green foliage set tree is seen protruding at the left of the opening. The curtains are toned blue from the sides, with green highlighting the leaves on the tree, and light blue tinting the left side of the vases. The backing is flooded a rich purple. A woman dressed in a light colored Colonial costume is seated on the bench during the song, the singer also dressed in a costume of this period. A light amber spot is worked from front on the artist.

MARK STRAND THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Shore Leave" (First National) (Week of September 13th)

Music:

The overture is "Capriccio Italien," by Tschaikovsky, and played by the Mark Strand Symphony Orchestra, with Carl Eduoarde conducting. Kitty McLaughlin, in characteristic costume, sings the "Bird Song" from "Pagliacci," by Leoncavallo.

M. DePace, Mandolinist

This well known mandolin virtuoso, dressed in a Harlequin suit of black and white, renders three numbers. He is presented in an effective fabric combination set. The black drapes are hung on the batten in two, leaving about a two-foot opening at the top. The bottoms of the drapes are brought together at center, forming a V-shaped opening. A six-foot boxed pedestal is placed center of the opening, the artist being seated on the top of the pedestal. A fabric hung in folds is used as a backing for the opening. The foreground is dark. A white spot from front and one from right off stage highlights the musician during the program. The fabric backing is tinted with a combination of colors from the sides back of the black curtains, the combination consisting of green at the base, blending with a magenta center and a blue top. The tone at the center changes to deep red and finally canary for the finale.

The Prologue

Joseph Plunkett has devised an excellent background for the prologue to the feature picture. The scene suggests a portion of the forward section of a battleship. Two forward turrets, one surmounted on the other, with three giant guns protruding from the sides of each turret, are silhouetted against a well treated sky drop. The gun and turret motif is placed at right and practically fills half of the opening. A rail is attached to the turret base and extends across to left and off. A scrim is hung directly in front of the silhouette treatment. A moving cloud effect is operated on the deep blue sky drop, and water wave effect is worked at the base of the drop. Edward Albano, baritone, dressed in a white sailor's costume stands left center and sings "Bombay," by Reddick. Seven men dressed in the white sailor's uniform are seated in alignment along the rail of the ship during the song. They finally go into a "Sailor's Hornpipe," the male dancing ensemble featuring Anatole Bourman. Canary and amber from the sides in one highlight the singer and the men seated on the deck. White is added for the dance. The lights of the set dim as the first titles of the picture are projected on the scrim.

COLONY THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "Souls for Sables" (Tiffany) (Week of September 13th)

Music

The Colony Melody Masters, with E. Charles Eggett conducting, give an effective overture selection with a special arrangement entitled "The Land of Jazz." A vocal novelty is introduced in the form of an illustrated motion picture, the words of a song superimposed on some attractive scenes. There was a perfect synchronization with the words, song and picture, which is unusual in such subjects. Theo Alvin, tenor, seated in the audience, sang the song, with John Priest at the console. Dr. Edward Kilenyi must be complimented for his excellent interpretative score for the picture and especially the "news reel." The picture score is developed around the "love theme," using "Dreamer of Dreams" for this particular motif.

Setting for Joseph Plunkett's prologue to "The Gold Rush" during its run at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York City, exterior was night scene lights brought up within house revealed characters garbed in costumes of play in a typical Alaskan dance hall program.

The Presentation

With Howard W. McCoy, the managing director, to routine a presentation and Jerry DeRosa, technical director, to give it the proper scenic and lighting treatment, there is a combination which gets results. The divertissement introduces Olga and Mishka, dancers; a harp orchestra of six ladies, and Olga Kazanskaya, soprano. The set is simple but extremely effective and colorful. A curtain of gold ribbons is hung at the curtain line across the entire opening. Through the ribbons can be seen the six harpists seated on tiers with a black plush cyclorama as a background. The harpists are dressed in light colored gowns with a yellowish tone. They are seated in wedge formation, a musician right and left, with chair and instrument on stage floor, the next on a foot dias, and the third on a two-foot platform. The boxed platforms are covered with black material, and the two upper and highest ones being draped with batik scarfs. There is about a four-foot opening up center between the platforms, through which the singer enters from the back between the split opening of the cyc. At the rise the gilt ribbons are flooded with a well blended combination of purple, green and light blue. Orange, amber and canary from the sides highlight the musicians, the reflection on the gold toned harps making a glistening appearance. Towards the conclusion of the opening number the ribboned curtain is slowly taken away to a point about two-thirds up on the opening, forming a border for the set. The two dancers are very good, the lady first appearing in an attractive dancing costume of white silk and silver, the man in gray form-fitting trousers, white blouse and gilt girdle. They appear in evening clothes for second number. The dancers worked in a light blue and canary spot from front. The following program is presented:

(a) "Rustle of Spring".....Sinding
(b) "Music Box".....Poenitz
Arrangements by Tamara Utgoff
The Harp Orchestra
"Adagio" .....Goddard
Olga-Mishka
"Irish Songs".....Arranged

CAPITOL THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "Sally of the Sawdust" (United Artists) (Week of September 14th)

The stage show was comprised of two numbers that seemed to please equally well, both receiving quite a bit of applause.

Foremost on the program was the number entitled "Excerpts from Faust." This scene opened upon the prison cell of Marguerite. Miss Hazel Eden, as "Marguerite"; William Mitchell, as "Doctor Faust," and Herbert Gould, as "Mephisto," rendered a good account of themselves as the principals in this number. The Angels were Melba Cordes, Jean Moebius and Margaret Ball. The number ended with the ascension of "Marguerite" and the damnation of "Faust."

The other stage number on the program was a prologue to the feature picture, "Sally of the Sawdust." This number opened upon an exterior field scene in which two circus men meet two workers of the field. The four characters in this scene are the International Quartette. This scene fades into the interior of a circus arena with the trapeze performer, bareback rider and circus clowns, back again to the farmer's field and finally fades into the feature picture.

The Capitol Grand Orchestra, with Albert E. Short conducting, rendered a prelude, "Circus Days." Leo Terry rendered a selection at the organ.

STRATFORD THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "As No Man Has Loved" (Fox) (Week of September 13th)

The stage show at the Stratford Theatre the week commencing Sunday, September 13, was one of the best ever shown at this theatre.

Of the two Mangan Presentations on the bill this week, "Milady's Fan" was the most sensational and beautiful. The scene opened with Miss Marjorie Pringle singing "Beware of the Girl With a Fan," in one. Following this, Dorothy Jane Hughes gave a very cleverly executed and graceful fan dance. The curtain then opened, revealing fifteen young misses in fan costumes. Both Miss Pringle, Miss Hughes and the tableaus itself received a good round of applause. For its extreme beauty and grandeur this number has only one rival, that being Mangan's Presentation, "The Diamond Horseshoe of Girls," done the previous week.

The other number, "Syncopation in Hades," opened with Miss Helen Savage singing "Pack Up Your Sins and Go to the Devil" in front of a red and yellow striped curtain, which opened on a ballet of nine girls in a setting all done in red and yellow stripes, with six revolving columns. Each girl carried a suitcase with a letter on same. These suitcases illuminated and spelt out the word "Happiness" at the finish of the number.

RIVOLI THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Pony Express" (Paramount) (Week of September 13th)

Music features in connection with this picture is a Riesenfeld arrangement of "Tunes of 1860," being one of the most interesting assortments of old-time musical numbers. This composition is played by the orchestra, with Willy Stahl conducting. August Werner is introduced towards the end of the overture selection, singing "John Bowers." He works from the orchestra pit. No prologue or presentation.

RIALTO THEATRE
New York City

Featured Picture: "The Pony Express" (Paramount) (Week of September 13th)

Music features Ben Bernie and his Rialto Gang in a brief introductory program to the feature picture.

EASTMAN THEATRE
Rochester, N. Y.

Featured Picture: "The Beggar on Horseback" (Paramount) (Week of September 13th)

Music features the overture selection, "The Sorcerer's Apprentice," by Paul Dukas, played by the Eastman Theatre Orchestra, with Guy Fraser Harrison and Victor Wagner conducting. Robert Berenstein, at the organ, renders a selection from "Tell Me More," by Gershwin.

Divertissements feature Nee Wong, the Chinese Minstrel, who is preceded with a scenic subject depicting "Glimpses of the Orient."

UPTOWN THEATRE
Chicago

Featured Picture: "The Unholy Three" (Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer) (Week of September 14th)

Music features the overture, "Orpheus," by Offenbach, played by the Uptown Theatre Orchestra, with H. Leopold Spitalny conducting. Milton Charles at the organ plays "Meditation" from "Thais," by Massenet.

Divertissements include (1) Zez Confrey and his Ampico Artists, (2) The B. and K. production entitled "The Midnight Waltz," with the following characters: Walter J. Preston as the boy, Mirian Rothschild as the girl, Grace Blair and Marie Petersen as the Old Waltz Dancers, Virginia Scott and Art Mahon as the New Waltz Dancers, and Dorothy Scott as Cupid.

A World Presentation

be painted an old ivory to permit an effective lighting treatment. The woodwork in mahogany and white, this being the treatment for the window casings, the platforms, window-seats up center. On the flats directly over the French windows two large medallions can be attached or painted bearing in silhouette two motifs of the feminine fashions of past periods. These can be done in brown and whites or in metallics if desired.

LIGHTING TREATMENT

Orange amber and canaries should dominate in the lighting scheme. The backings outside of the French windows may be toned a rose and blue and on the sky drop backing the windows and doors up center to change from a green blue to rose and green-canary. The foreground may be subdued with orange amber and red and blue foots and first borders in at the introduction. Spots with canary and light amber should be hung on the border in front of the arched frame or drop up center. Spots placed right and left of the platform may be green and orange amber. This will afford a colorful lighting for the characters who appear through the center doorway and pause on the platform before proceeding down the stairway to the stage and off. Several bay trees may be placed outside of the windows up center, and may be highlighted with amber. The characters in the various costumes may be covered with a flood from front, cut down to include only the characters. Canary and light amber spots used on the soloist during the action.

"The Pony Express"

James Cruze Produces Another Epic of the West for Paramount That Should Please the Majority

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

James Cruze, who made the great epic picture of the early days of the West, "The Covered Wagon," has now produced for Paramount another story of the same locale at a little later period in "The Pony Express."

The inspiration for this picture is found in this unique service instituted to cut several days' time in the carrying of mails to the Pacific Coast by employing fearless men on relays of fleet ponies to make the run from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento. The dramatic angle of the story is found in the fact that a secessionist senator sought to use the Pony Express to further his scheme to establish a separate republic when Lincoln was elected. This was frustrated by a patriotic Californian, who was the relay man at a crucial political point.

This theme is one that will quicken the interest and play on the patriotism of the American citizenry as did "The Covered Wagon." Its bare outline does not furnish anything like sufficient material for a picture of this length, practically 10,000 feet. To heighten the dramatic interest there has been woven into the picture a romance between the daughter of a blacksmith-evangelist and a young gambler who becomes an express rider and thwarts the schemes of the senator's henchmen. To provide a punch, there is an attack by Indians on the settlement when the garrison was away.

The greatest part of the footage has been devoted to picturing in detail incidents that build up the various characters and establish the atmosphere, but many of them do little to advance the story. In fact, practically until the climax The Pony Express itself is kept in view only by occasional subtitles and a few short shots showing the establishment of the relay stations, etc.

These situations picturing the activities of the various characters are each interesting and supply moments of drama, melodrama, heart interest and quite a lot of excellent comedy and character portrayal. The spectator is apt to feel acutely conscious, however, that they are halting the story proper and depriving it of a needed snap. This makes the interest lag and creates the impression that the story would be materially strengthened by generous cutting.

The cast is excellent. As the hero, Ricardo Cortez will win many new admirers. Betty Compson has little to do as the heroine except look cute and attractive. From an audience standpoint Wallace Beery has the "fat" role in a comedy characterization which gets the laughs and by his championing of a little girl also builds up fine heart interest. His performance is a delight and could not be improved upon. Next comes the extremely effective portrayal of George Bancroft as a cold-blooded villain and schemer. In fact, this is the most striking portrayal in the picture. Ernest Torrence, as always, gives an excellent performance but he is handicapped by a role that limits his opportunities and shows him in situations that while amusing will be considered by a lot of people as bordering on the sacrilegious. Mark Twain and Buffalo Bill also figure slightly in the story, but as they are not identified under these names, the effect of their presence is practically lost.

In a word, it would seem that Mr. Cruze has not entirely succeeded in putting over the importance of the Pony Express and its effect on history at a crucial time. In striving to do this so much pains have been used in building up the correct atmosphere that the story is slowed down. He has succeeded in making it an epic of the period, with excellent characterizations and interesting incidents and good comedy. While not another "Covered Wagon," it does get into the big picture class, ranking well above even the better class of westerns, and especially if generously cut, should please the great majority.

Just prior to the outbreak of the Civil War when the Southern states were talking secession Senator Glen of California planned to form a separate republic by combining California with Sonora, Mexico. To further his scheme he persuaded the head of the Overland Mail to establish a pony express from St. Joseph, Mo., to Sacramento, and planned by getting secret news first to carry out his treasonable designs. Jack Weston a gambler, learning of this scheme succeeded in being appointed express rider at Julesburg, Colo., a crucial point dominated by the unscrupulous Jack Slade. With the news of Lincoln's election Glen passed along the code work to his followers, but Weston outwitted Slade and sent along the truth, turning the tide and saving California to the Union. Molly, who doubted Weston's patriotism, on learning the truth consented to become his bride.

"His Majesty Bunker Bean"

Warner Brothers Present Popular Novel as Farce Comedy Starring Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Both as a novel and a stage play "His Majesty Bunker Bean," by Harry Leon Wilson, scored a success, and Warner Brothers are now offering a screen version directed by Harry Beaumont and starring Matt Moore and Dorothy Devore, which is thoroughly amusing and should please the majority of picture fans.

While most of the situations in the original have been retained, the story has been handled in a different vein. Those familiar with Mr. Wilson's novel will find that the angles he particularly stresses, especially the underlying idea of the deft characterization of the highly imaginative youth who lacked self-confidence until he was made by a fortune-telling faker to believe he was the reincarnation of Napoleon and an Egyptian King, have not been as strongly or as logically brought out. Also that the selection of Matt Moore for the role reveals the hero as a character considerably older than the original, and makes his actions less plausible.

The result of these changes and the lack of stressing the underlying idea that really "as a man thinks, so he is" gives the picture the complexion of a farce comedy with a decidedly unusual type of hero. Some of the actions of Bunker, even when laboring under his hallucination, seem highly implausible, and the manner in which the girl goes after him and sweeps him off his feet seems considerably overdrawn. Considered as a farce comedy, such situations are not only thoroughly acceptable, but they provide opportunities for a number of amusing moments that are sure to get the laughs. And it is evident that Mr. Beaumont intended this as a farce, for it has a purely farcical ending which even introduces slapstick; the hero and his rival fight and roll all over the place and land in a pond when the hero is attacked by a turtle, and finally both hero and heroine fall in the same pond and raise their heads above water for the final close-up.

Making allowance for the fact that Matt Moore is a different type and plays the hero as a much older fellow than the original, he gives a good performance, putting over the comedy in an amusing manner and certainly suggests the worm that lets himself be trodden on. Dorothy Devore is a breezy flapper. George Nichols portrays the author's idea of the rough and carelessly dressed millionaire who clings to detachable cuffs. Lucille Ward is effective as the buxom nurse who chases the millionaire around to take his temperature or force him to take medicine.

As a farce comedy with touches of slapstick, "His Majesty Bunker Bean" should prove thoroughly amusing to the majority. Admirers of the novel may be disappointed by the absence of the convincing touches and fine and smooth development which made Bunker Bean such a delightful character study of youth.

Story

Bunker Bean, stenographer to a rough and ready millionaire Breede, is a highly imaginative chap and wishing to know about his past existence goes to Balthasar a claivoyant who finding he has some money, tells him he was an Egyptian King, and for $5,000 gets this king's money for him. Breede's daughter Marie, becomes fascinated with Bunker and taking matters in her own hand stampeded him into agreeing to marry her. Bunker's dog tears up the mummy proving it is a fake. Bunker is disheartened and calling himself a fake says he cannot marry Marie. His friend Bud, crack baseball pitcher, cheers him up but just before the preacher arrives, his rival Hollins starts a fight. Bunker and Hollins roll all over the lawn and finally land in a pond and keep fighting. Bunker wins and takes Marie in his arms, and they both fall into the water. Father has been won over as Bunker held some stock necessary to his control and made it cost the old man a big sum to get hold of it.

"Graustark"

McCutcheon's Well-Known Romantic Novel Proves Thoroughly Enjoyable Vehicle for Norma Talmadge

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

When George Barr McCutcheon wrote "Graustark" several years ago, so popular did it become that it established a vogue for stories of similar nature in which an adventurous American woos and wins the princess of a mythical kingdom. In fact so well known is this novel that stories of this kind are frequently referred to as being of the Graustark type.

Transferred to the stage, Graustark made a fortune for its producers and proved a big popular success on the road for a number of years. Now, in film form, as a First National production, it serves as a starring vehicle for Norma Talmadge, and there seems to be no reason why it should not bring enjoyment to many and, duplicating the success of the novel and play, prove a fine box-office attraction.

"Graustark" is out-and-out highly romantic melodrama, with a story which, while widely stretching probability, glorifies the spirit of romance, and playing upon the popular chord of the love between a commoner and a member of royalty, taking its characters through adventure and court intrigue, pitting romance against reasons "of state" certainly should provide enjoyment for lovers of romance.

While in no way ostentatious, this picture has been given a high class production from every standpoint, and there are quite a few big sets and scenes representing the court and palaces of Graustark, showing the pomp of royalty.

The direction by Dimitri Buchowetski is excellent. He has taken a straightforward story and produced it in a smooth, straightforward manner, without the subtlety and sophistication which usually marks the work of the continental director. In its stead he has injected a refreshing buoyancy that is particularly noticeable in the clever, amusing and thoroughly enjoyable opening scenes showing the meeting of the lovers on a pullman car while crossing Wyoming. He has also handled the conventional melodramatic intrigue well and made it seem more plausible than usual.

Norma Talmadge is ideal as the fascinating and wistful Princess Yetive and makes this character seem very real. She seems the embodiment of the author's idea of the character, and her performance should thoroughly please her legion of followers. Eugene O'Brien makes a handsome lover and the subordinate roles are all well handled.

All in all, "Graustark" is a distinctly pleasing production, one that you can just sit back and enjoy, and should prove thoroughly satisfactory for the great mass of motion picture patrons.

Story

Waiting in a dining car for the train to pull out. Lorry, a young American, travelling through the West, catches sight of an attractive girl in another train and immediately rushes to board it. A stop at a station and the escape of the girl's dogs gives him a chance to rescue them and make her acquaintance. By the time New York is reached they are very much in love. The girl, who unknown to Lorry is the Princess Yetive of Graustark is called home to marry Gabriel, a neighboring prince. Lorry follows her and is chagrined to discover she is the Princess. Gabriel has his henchman Dangloss attack Lorry who wounds him and spiriting Dangloss out of the country Lorry is convicted of murder and sentenced to death. Yetive rescues him and sends him to the border where he finds Dangloss and brings him back as the wedding ceremony is in progress. Dangloss implicates Gabriel who is driven out in disgrace. Yetive going out on a balcony tells of her love for the American and appeals to them not to make her marry anyone else and they shout their approval of her love for Lorry.

"Sporting Life"

Tourneur Directs Drury Lane Type of Melodrama for Universal—Lytell in Lead

Reviewed by Sumner Smith

"Sporting Life" is a Universal-Jewel melodrama of London sporting and society circles. The leads are played by Bert Lytell and Marian Nixon, with Paulette Duval and Cyril Chadwick in heavy roles. The story has to do with the efforts of a gambler and a scorned woman to prevent the entry of a horse in the English Derby and thus ruin the owner, a lord. The highlights are a prizefight in which the lord takes the place of his protege, who has been drugged, an escape from a roomful of thugs and the final scenes of the Derby. Maurice Tourneur directed.

Lytell nearly succeeds in dominating every scene in the picture, but he works so hard at playing the gallant that he usually seems unreal. Miss Nixon is her usual charming and capable self. Miss Duval and Chadwick perform indifferently. The best work is done by Charles Delaney as a pugilist. He is very human.

"Sporting Life" falls short of the Tourneur standard, which is a high one. The picture takes a long time to get under way and it does not develop real punch until the last three reels. These are very well done. Part of the early trouble, we think, may lie in the editing. In a couple of places the subtitles quote a serious conversation between characters and yet on the screen they are seen to be laughing heartily.

It is old-fashioned melodrama of the familiar Drury Lane mold. Audiences with a distinct leaning toward melodrama will excuse the shortcomings but we do not think that they will fail to spot them. The prizefight and the race—especially the former—are effective.

Story

Lord Woodstock loses money in a musical revue in London and plans to recoup by betting on Joe Lee, a pugilist and protege of his, and by winning the Derby with his horse, Lady Love. He incurs the enmity of Olive Carteret, actress, by falling in love with Norah Cavanaugh, daughter of his trainer. Phillips, a gambler, and Olive conspire against him. The pugilist is drugged on the night of the fight and Woodstock takes his place and wins the fight. Phillips kidnaps Norah and Woodstock and the pugilist are imprisoned when they go to her rescue. They escape an hour before the race and the pugilist is killed. Lady Love wins the race, Phillips is arrested for murder and Woodstock and Norah are free to marry.

"The Fighting Heart"

Fox Offers George O'Brien in Entertaining Prizefight Story Adapted from Novel by Larry Evans

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

As a John Ford Production, Fox is offering George O'Brien in "The Fighting Heart," an adaptation of Larry Evans' story of a boy who overcame the heritage of drink and won laurels in the prizefight arena.

It is the fighting atmosphere, as capitalized in the title, that will make the greatest appeal to the fans, and certainly any one who likes a good scrap should be amply satisfied, for there are no less than four here, two rough and tumble grudge fights and two "inside the ropes."

Director Ford has deftly handled the character of Denny Bolton and eliminated the drabness and isolation of the early life of this chap, the last of a family who for generations had succumbed to the effect of drink and whom the author pictured as shunned and looked down on by his neighbors. He also gets decidedly away from the familiar handling of a crucial fight by showing the hero as the loser, due to the fact that he has disregarded his trainer and followed the lures of Broadway. While this is not so heroic, it is certainly more true to life, and the atmosphere of failure is removed from his shoulders by having him thoroughly lick his opponent in a street scrap.

Aside from the numerous fights, Director Ford has concentrated on the development of character and atmosphere of the small village such as were much more common before the days of the automobile, which has done much to wipe them out. It is all well done and he establishes excellent types, but there is so much of it that it slows down the action materially, and the picture could stand considerable pruning.

George O'Brien is well cast as Denny and shows to advantage as a fighter both in and out of the ring. J. Farrell MacDonald is good but has little opportunities. Bert Woodruff comes in for a lot of sympathy as the old drunkard. Billie Dove is very pretty as the simple country heroine and Victor MacLaglen is all that could be desired as the town bully who becomes a champion prize-fighter.

"The Fighting Heart" will probably please the average patron, but it does not measure up to a number of Director Ford's other productions.

Based on novel "Once to Every Man," by Larry Evans.
Adapted by Lillia Hayward.
Directed by John Ford.
Length, 6,978 feet.

Story

The townspeople look down on the Boltons, the male members having all succumbed to drink except young Larry, who feels the situation keenly. Finally when even his sweetheart Doris believes he has been drinking, he decides to follow the advice of a reporter and go to the city and become a prize fighter, as he once licked Soapy Williams, the champion. In the big fight his dissipations told on him and he was defeated. Later when Soapy taunted him about Doris, he gave him a sound thrashing on the street and decided he would go back. He found Doris waiting for him with open arms.

Fast Action and Reed Howes' Athletic Stunts Make Rayart's Revolutionary Story Entertaining

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Cyclone Cavalier" Rayart Pictures Corporation has provided its good-looking athletic young star Reed Howes with a role that is fittingly described by the title, for he is certainly kept moving at a rapid pace and literally as well as figuratively "on the jump" much of the time.

It is the type of picture that depends on fast action and romance rather than on drama or consistency of story both of which have been sacrificed to give the star plentiful opportunities for the display of his remarkable agility and athletic prowess.

The story is of the conventional South American revolution type with the hero a dashing young American, falling in love with the president's daughter and aiding in saving her country from falling into the hands of the revolutionists.

Howes has a congenial role and in the scenes aboard ship and ashore, after he has mutilated the beard of the president and is seeking to escape arrest, he displays the agility of a cat in his climbing, jumping, diving, etc. Carmelita Geraghty is an excellent type and makes the girl an alluring creature. Johnny Sinclair, as the sailor pal of the hero is responsible for some good clowning comedy of a familiar type.

"The Cyclone Cavalier" should please fans who demand stunts and action and are willing to overlook the familiar pattern and lack of plausibility of the story.

Story and adaptation by Krag Johnson and Burke Jenkins.
Directed by Albert Rogell.
Length, 4,928 feet.

Ted Clayton, a live wire, thirsts for excitement and continually gets in trouble. His father, a banker, decided to send him to the republic of Costa Blanca. En route Ted is attracted to Rita Gonzales but gets in dutch with her father the president who is traveling incognito and barely eludes arrest. In Costa Blanca he finally learns of the revolutionists' plans and the perfidy of the president's secretary. Through a ruse he obtains an audience with the president, presents his credentials, and with the aid of his pal Mickey, brings the soldiers back in time to save the government. As military dictator he orders Rita to come to his arms, which she very willingly does.

"Lands End"

(Red Seal—Scenic—One Reel)

A very picturesque shot of the narrow streets and ancient stone houses in a Cornish village open this Red Seal "Gem of the Green" which deals with the extreme Southwestern points of England. Other striking shots shows the rugged rocky coast and giant rocks out in the water that have destroyed many a ship. There are also views of native types, quaint villages and the industries of the people, consisting mainly of fishing for mackerel and shipping China clay to all parts of the world. An interesting and instructive scenic, well photographed.—C. S. S.

"One Wild Night"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

This is an amusing number of the new series of Universal single reel Bluebird Comedies starring Neely Edwards. The fun results from the fact that the girl who spurned Neely's love changes her mind, comes to Neely in her bridal robes and he has to hide her when the disappointed "groom-to-be" follows. The girl eludes them by masquerading in one of Neely's dress suits and mixing with the crowd that is hunting her. The action moves fast but there is little originality and practically no new gags. It should however prove fairly amusing.—C. S. S.

"Through Three Reigns"

(Red Seal—Special—Two Reels)

This is an interesting collection of scenes of important events in the reigns of three British sovereigns, Queen Victoria, King Edward and King George. It brings out strikingly the pageantry and pomp of royalty, and the views of Queen Victoria's time forcefully demonstrate the value of the motion picture in making a pictorial record for posterity. The Queen is shown on a visit to Ireland and there are scenes of her imposing funeral. Then follows views of the reign of King Edward from his coronation to his funeral. A novel effect has been achieved here by using stop motion and pointing out the Kings of Spain, Portugal and Bulgaria, and the Kaiser of Germany. There are also scenes of the coronation of King George. Among the most popular and interesting shots are those of the present Prince of Wales as a small boy in the funeral procession, then at his father's coronation in royal robes and as he looks today.—C. S. S.

"Cuba Steps Out"

(Fox—Variety—One Reel)

Cuba holds forth in this Fox Variety of "The World We Live In" series. There are views of Morro Castle, Havana, and other places of interest but the reel is devoted mainly to the two great industries of the island, tobacco and sugar. The former is grown in great fields which are covered to cut off the intense rays of the sun. The entire process of the plant from the leaf to the finished cigar is pictured. Sugar cane is similarly treated, starting with the cutting of the stalks, shipping, grinding, cooking and finally transportation of the bags of sugar. This film shows that Cuba is using exceedingly up-to-date mechanical methods, including a device that dumps an entire railroad car of cane into a hopper at one time, by means of a giant device that tilts the car at a steep angle. A very entertaining subject that should please.—C. S. S.

"The Big Kick"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Burlesquing a boxer, his manager and a "set-up," who wins through his "dumbness," keeps Billy Engle and Earl Mohan busy flaying the air in "The Big Kick." This one-reel offering of Hal Roach's comedians includes fights in the gym and the ring. The "set-up" winning the title through the medium of a putty blower will get the most laughs from audiences liking rough and tumble comedies.—T. W.

"Fish For Two"

(Bronte—Scenic—One Reel)

This is one of the most appealing boy and nature scenics ever made. Emery Bronte produced it and uses a small boy, a fish pole and an attractive dog named Lassie. The boy eventually falls in the brook and is rescued by the dog. It is beautiful nature stuff done in a truly sympathetic fashion.—S. S.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

"Your Own Back Yard"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Little brown and fuzzy Farina at last has reached his goal in filmdom. In "Your Own Back Yard" Hal Roach lets him get before the camera eye more than any of the rest of "Our Gang." So, this two-reeler may properly be termed "Farina's first starring vehicle." Farina is certainly some "star." The tears roll down his chubby dark cheeks at one time and at another his white teeth gleam and his big round eyes reflect themselves in the luscious dome of a five-cent ice cream cone. He is a little actor from tip to toe and could be called the best of the "gang" if the rest of the bunch were not so good. "Stay in your own back yard" is the advice Mammy gives her Farina when naughty boys in the neighborhood beat him up because his goat cannot control its appetite. But Farina goes out and conquers the world while asleep in a blind man's chair. When he wakes up a cupful of coins and bills reposes in his lap. Farina bedecks himself in the finest the town has to offer and then "high hats" the crowd. One very novel and screamingly funny scene is when the gang flecks the mouths of its favorite dogs with sample tubes of toothpaste. A hysterical woman tells the police the dogs are "mad," resulting in much shooting and scampering. Farina's first is a wow.—T. W.

"Love and Lions"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

As is obvious from the title of this Fox comedy, lions plays an important part in the fun making. Harold Goodwin appears as a simple college youth who is taken to a hunting lodge for initiation into a college fraternity headed by Bud Jamieson. The other members to scare him dress as various birds and animals. Earl Mohan as a negro sent out after chicken stumbles on a lion farm and accidentally frees one of the animals. Then follows a general mix-up with the lion, hero, heroine, negro and the various masquerading characters chasing or seeking to avoid each other, ending in the place being set on fire and the girl, Judy King, rescuing the hero when he is overcome seeking to find her after she has already gotten out. There is plenty of action of the slapstick sort and it is a thoroughly amusing picture of its type. —C. S. S.

"Hungry Hounds"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

As the title implies, "Hungry Hounds" shows all of Cartoonist Terry's hounds in a very voracious state. One of their members distracts a traveling butcher and the rest of the gang walk off with the hams and hot dogs. As the result of the haul Terry's animal kingdom has a banquet likened only to a movie luncheon. It is an amusing number.—T. W.

"Ko-Ko on the Run"

(Red Seal—Cartoon—One Reel)

This Out-of-the-Inkwell cartoon by Max Fleischer shows a race between his famous clown and another—and heftier—clown. The prize is a toy dirigible. They race across country from different points of the compass until they collide. It is deemed a dead heat, so both clowns fly off in the balloon. The ending is clever. Fleischer is watching their flight through field glasses. They fall and land in his eye. Another artist picks them out with a handkerchief and shakes that over the ink bottle, so that the clowns return from whence they came.—S. S.

"Nuts and Squirrels"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

The farmer goes photographing squirrels, with the cat and mouse lowering him over a precipice with a rope, in this amusing Paul Terry cartoon in the Aesop's Film Fables series. The squirrel family lines up for the event, but a troublesome youngster, aided by a few crows, makes life miserable for the earnest photographer.—S. S.

"Flirting With Death"

(Red Seal—Special—Two Reels)

The second of Red Seal's "twin two-reelers" dealing with skiing in the Alps. This one shows three expert Alpinists on skiis with great difficulty ascending a particular hazardous mountain peak covered with ice and snow. There are a number of beautiful and striking shots and a lot of thrills, however the most thrilling part is the ascent. It will make your heart feel as if it were leaping up into your throat to watch these fellows skiing down the mountain side at break-neck speed, narrowly skirting abysses and jumping ice bridges, and many times just saving their lives by their quickness and skill.—C. S. S.

"The Movies"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

In his newest comedy for Educational, Lloyd Hamilton appears as a country sap who seeks the city, exhorted by his father to beware of the movies. Of course, he finally gets mixed up with picture making as Hollywood is the place where he lands. Hamilton gets considerable comedy out of a scrap he has with a big burly chap whom he unsuccessfully tries to elude and finally finds himself playing opposite him in a picture. There is an interesting and amusing sequence showing Hamilton invading a picture restaurant where the guests are all movie people made up for various parts. The actor who impersonates King George is excellent and Washington, Lincoln, Roosevelt and others are good. A clever bit of camera work has Hamilton leaving the vine-clad cottage, walking out into the middle of the road and finding himself in one of Los Angeles busiest streets. This is good trick work, mystifying and amusing. An excellent bit, sure to get a laugh is where his aged mother leaps through the air to embrace him. "The Movies" is thoroughly entertaining.—C. S. S.

"Officer No. 13"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Eddie Gordon who has the starring role in this Century comedy is shown as being released from jail and then spending his time trying to get away from cops who appear on every side and appear to be after him but who are obvious to his presence. Finally he gets mixed up in a melee between cops and thugs and finds himself in a policeman's uniform and eventually by slipping up behind them and tapping them with a billy captures the whole gang, but is thrown into jail for impersonating an officer until a cop explains he is a hero. Between Eddie and the director they have succeeded in getting a considerable amount of fun out of a familiar line of gags and it should please the average patron.—C. S. S.

"Gold Rush" Sets Records In New York and Chicago

"THE GOLD RUSH," Charlie Chaplin's United Artists Corporation release, has broken all records for New York City and the world in its first week's business at the Mark Strand Theatre, and also has broken all records of seventeen years of the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, in its first week's run there.

At the Strand, New York, the week's net gross totalled $72,577.15, according to a letter to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists' Corporation from Joseph Plunkett, managing director.

At the Orpheum, Chicago, seating a little less than 800, "The Gold Rush" grossed $19,829.08, more than $5,000 in excess of the previous house record which was made by a picture two reels shorter than the Chaplin film, and breaking all records since the Orpheum was opened, seventeen years ago.

In a letter to Mr. Abrams, Joseph Plunkett wrote as follows:

"I am happy to advise you that Charlie Chaplin in 'The Gold Rush' has just finished the greatest week ever played in any theatre in the world, insofar as gross receipts and attendance is concerned. The week's gross was $75,577.15. I am sure this establishes a record for the world. Our second Sunday receipts were as big as the first Sunday. You must remember that all this business was done in very hot weather, which makes it all the more remarkable; also when you consider we have no ice plant."

Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaeffer, of the Orpheum Theatre, Chicago, sent the following telegram to Mr. Abrams, outlining the business of "The Gold Rush" in the second biggest City in the United States:

"Our Orpheum Theatre seats less than 800. On the week ending last Saturday, charging 50 cents week days and 75 cents Saturday and Sunday with Charlie Chaplin in 'The Gold Rush' we grossed $19,829.08. This beats previous house record held by a picture two reels shorter than 'The Gold Rush' by over $5,000. The first day of second week was $15 better than the opening Sunday. The Orpheum average on the opening week was better than $3.55 per seat per day. Believe this constitutes the world's record. Regards."

"The Gold Rush" also broke all records for the Strand Theatre, Atlantic City, N. J., when it opened there concurrently with the opening in New York and Chicago; and drew business of a similar record breaking nature at the Regent Theatre, Toronto, in its Canadian premiere.

"Galloping On" Completed

Louis Weiss, managing director of Weiss Brothers' Artclass Pictures, announces the completion of production on "Galloping On," the third in the series of Eight Five Reel Acrobatic Stunt Thrillers, featuring Wally Wales.

With the featured star are Jessie Cruzon, Louis Lester, Charles Whitaker, Richard Belfield, Gretchen Waterman, Art Phillips, N. E. Hendrix, Jack O'Brien and Lawrence Underwood.

The direction was done by Hichard Thorpe, the continuity by Betty Burbridge from the story by Frank L. Inghram.

New York Premiere

The New York premiere of Syd Chaplin's "The Man on the Box," his first starring production for Warner Bros., will take place at Warners Theatre, New York City, Saturday, September 26th.

Scenes in "The Price of Success," Columbia's Waldorf release, featuring Alice Lake, Alma Bennett and Gaston Glass.

Fox Production Units Ahead of Schedule But Coast Studios Are Still Going Ahead

ALTHOUGH Fox Film Corporation production units are away ahead of schedule, there is no slackening of activity on the Fox lot in Hollywood.

With "Lazybones" completed, Frank Borzage has started shooting on his second Fox picture, "Wages for Wives," based on the John Golden stage success, "Chicken Feed." He has selected an excellent cast, including Jacqueline Logan, Creighton Hale, Zasu Pitts, Earle Foxe, David Butler, Claude Gillingwater, Margaret Seddon, Dan Mason and Tom Ricketts. The story deals with tightfisted husbands and how to handle them.

John Ford has left for Jackson's Hole, Wyoming, with a crew numbering more than a hunderd to start filming "Three Bad Men," which is another big outdoor picture like "The Iron Horse." So far the cast includes George O'Brien, Olive Borden, J. Farrell MacDonald, Tom Santchi, Frank Campeau, Lou Tellegen, Otis Harlan, Jay Hunt (the screen's Lightin' Bill), Georgie Harris and Walter Perry.

Tom Mix has just finished "The Yankee Senor," scheduled as his second starring vehicle of the season, and is engaged in casting for his next, as yet untitled. "The Yankee Senor" is based on Katherine Fullerton Gerould's novel, "Conquistador." Olive Borden, Margaret Livingston, Kathryn Hill, Alec Francis and Tom Kennedy are in the supporting cast. Emmett Flynn directed.

"The Silver Treasure," Fox screen version of Joseph Conrad's "Nostromo," has just been finished under the direction of Rowland V. Lee and is now in the cutting room. George O'Brien is Nostromo, the lovable swashbuckling hero of the tale. Lou Tellegen is the villain. Others in the supporting cast are Harvey Clark, Joan Rene and Hedda Hopper.

Henry Otto has finished filming the fantasy sequences in "The Ancient Mariner," based on Samuel Taylor Coleridge's poem. Paul Panzer portrays the title role. The modern story has not yet been produced.

Buck Jones is well along on the season's schedule. He is now in the midst of filming "The Desert's Price," based on William MacLeod Raine's novel, under the direction of W. S. Van Dyke. "The Timber Wolf," "Durand of the Bad Lands" and "A Man Four Square" are completed. In addition, Buck has the title role in "Lazybones" to his credit.

Casting has started on "The First Year," one of the John Golden stage successes, in which Matt Moore will play the leading male role.

George O'Brien has been selected as the dashing young cavalry officer hero of "The Golden Strain," first of the Peter B. Kyne stories.

Four of the Van Bibber comedies based on Richard Harding Davis' stories—"The Big Game Hunter," "The Sky Jumper," "The Wrestler" and "A Parisian Knight"—have been completed and Director Robert P. Kerr has the fifth, "The Feud," in the cutting room. Earle Foxe continues as the star.

In the O. Henry series, "Shoes" and "Transients in Arcadia" have been completed. The third, "Failure," has been launched into production under the direction of Daniel Keefe with Harvey Clark as Lawyer Gooch and Kathryn McGuire as the heroine.

Albert Ray has two comedies in the Helen and Warren series, "A Business Engagement" and "All Aboard," ready for exhibitors and the third, "The Peacemakers," is in the cutting room. Kathryn Perry and Hallam Cooley play the title roles.

With six Imperial Comedies completed, Lew Seiler, Bryan Foy and Benjamin Stoloff have three companies at work on these mirth reels.

Scenes in "Three Wise Crooks," starring Evelyn Brent, for F. B. O. release.

Storey Victory Campaign, Comedy Contest Successful

THE Storey Victory Campaign and the Special Two-Reel Comedy Contest conducted by Pathe Exchange, Inc., have been brought to a successful close, resulting in the greatest summer business for a given period on record.

As an incentive to better business, Pathe instituted a selling campaign, named in honor of Assistant General Manager J. E. Storey, then general sales manager. This campaign started on April 19 and was continued for sixteen weeks. At the same time a special Two-Reel Comedy Contest was started and run coincidently with the Victory Campaign. Every employe entered actively into the spirit of the drives and results have been better than were ever anticipated.

To add zest to the campaigns the various branch offices were arranged in groups and given the names of military divisions.

The winners follow:

In the Infantry Division of the Storey Victory Campaign Boston took first place at the start and never relinquished it once during the entire period. Boston Branch Manager Ross G. Cropper kept his staff at top speed on to victory. New York, under the management of William E. Raynor, grabbed second place the fifth week and pushed the Bostonians right hard to the finish but could not edge them out of the lead. In the Two-Reel Comedy Contest this situation was just reversed. Boston held the lead the first seven weeks with New York second. The eighth week, New York forged into the lead, maintaining it to the end, while Boston dropped to second place and finished there.

In the Artillery Division of the Storey Victory Campaign Detroit stepped right out at the start. Branch Manager Oscar Hanson and his staff held first place the first week and never left it. In the Artillery Division, Two-Reel Comedy Contest, Detroit took the lead the first week and San Francisco the second. Then in the third week Dallas stepped into first place and held it to the finish.

In the Cavalry Division of the Storey Victory Campaign Manager Oscar Kuschner and his Milwaukee branch held first place for twelve weeks. Then Los Angeles, under the managership of William Jenner, jumped into first place and held the position until the close. In the Cavalry Division, Two-Reel Comedy Contest, Atlanta looked like the winner by holding first place for ten weeks. Then Milwaukee took first the eleventh week, only to be replaced by Atlanta the twelfth. But Milwaukee came back to first the thirteenth week and finished in that position.

In the Engineer Division, in both the Storey Victory Campaign and the Two-Reel Comedy Contest, New Orleans, under the managership of Paul Schmuch, made a record that will long stand as something to shoot at. They won both contests in their division. In the Storey Victory Campaign, Des Moines stepped into first place the first week and held it right up to the twelfth. In the thirteenth week, New Orleans forged into first and maintained its leadership right up to the end. In the Two-Reel Comedy Contest, New Orleans held first place continuously through the entire period, being hard pushed by Des Moincs, which maintained second place all the time.

In the Aviation Division of the Storey Victory Campaign, Salt Lake City, under the managership of W. G. Seib, started things off by taking first place first week and holding it until the fourth, when Memphis, under the managership of A. J. Cary, took the lead. Memphis held on in first until the eighth week, when Salt Lake City came back into first and finished that way. In the Two-Reel Comedy Contest, Butte, under the managership of W. A. Calkins, held first the initial two weeks and then relinquished the lead to Memphis, which held top place until the end.

Since the close of the contests there have been changes of managership in two winning branches. Walter S. Wessling replaces William A. Jenner at Los Angeles and R. V. Nolan replaces Oscar Kuschner at Milwaukee, but since both Messrs. Jenner and Kuschner were in charge of winning exchanges during the contests, they are credited as winners.

Pathe Has Harry Carey

New Contract by Elmer Pearson and Charles R. Rogers for Series

Pathe will release a series of Western features starring Harry Carey, according to the terms of a contract just signed between Elmer Pearson of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Charles R. Rogers producer of the Carey films.

It is announced that the same organization that has been making Harry Carey pictures for Hunt Stromberg during the past two years will continue to produce his pictures. Charles R. Rogers associated with Stromberg in the previous Carey films, will devote his personal attention to production activities, which will center at Universal City.

An adaptation of the story "Buck Up," written by Basil Dickey and Harry Haven, will be Carey's first feature Western for Pathe. Scott Dunlap who directed Carey in three recent successes, will continue to direct.

"A Misfit Sailor"

Billy Dooley will make another sailor character famous at the Christie studios. His first comedy, "A Misfit Sailor," has been completed and he is again appearing in a blue jacket character as "A Goofy Gob." William Watson, who directed "A Misfit Sailor," is directting the latest Educational-Christie Comedy. Natalie Joyce plays opposite Dooley in the new picture.

Walter Hiers Injured

Walter Hiers suffered a serious injury to his hand while on location making one of his Educational-Walter Hiers Comedies. He is confined to his home, having stopped work on the picture temporarily. A large iron pipe nearly severed one of Hiers' fingers, which has been saved by skillful surgery.

Del Lord Remains

Del Lord, who has made thirty-two comedies released by Pathe and produced by Mack Sennett during the past two years, has just signed a new contract with the noted comedy producer.

ALICE CALHOUN
This charming star will be seen in "The Other Woman's Story," a B. P. Schulberg-Preferred Picture.

Dorothy Cumming Is Queen

Versatile Actress Will Appear in Betty Bronson's Cinderella Story

Dorothy Cumming is a busy person these days, flitting from one production to another. Upon the completion of her work in the California production, "The Coast of Folly," with Gloria Swanson, she came East to start one of the leading roles in "The New Commandment," with Blanche Sweet and Ben Lyon. Now comes further word that as soon as she is through with this society role, she will play the part of the Queen in Herbert Brennan's "A Kiss for Cinderella" for Famous Players.

"One Sheet" Posters For Newsreel

A great forward step in newsreel advertising and exploitation was taken this week by the International Newsreel Corporation with the inauguration of a new style—one-sheet poster, illustrated with still pictures of the events shown in the newsreel. This is the first time in the history of newsreels that such a poster has been put out.

The new International Newsreel poster is a striking two-color sheet, with block type captions, setting forth the more important subjects in the newsreel, and three illustrations, reproduced in full eight by ten inch size.

International has found, by careful study, that a picture is by far the best way of advertising the news reel. Fortunately for this newsreel company, they are well supplied with stills of all subjects included in the International Newsreel.

The new style poster was devised as a means of enabling the exhibitor to take full advantage of black and white photographs, not only in his lobby but in every place where he can put a poster.

Michigan Theatre Owner Advertises His "Shorts"

ADVERTISING and exploitation of short subjects in the Northwest in recent months show the theatres of this section to be among the leaders of the country in taking advantage of the briefer pictures to make added profits.

Under the management of Roy Tillson, the Fuller Theatre of Kalamazoo, Michigan, has long made a practice of 100 per cent advertising, backing up in its newspaper space every item on the program. For, as Mr. Fuller explains, "There are a whole lot of my patrons come to see the comedy as much as they do the feature and the vaudeville."

"The exhibitor who advertises only his feature picture and leaves his patrons to guess whether he is going to provide a comedy or other short subject," writes Mr. Tillson, "is simply passing up much of the profit which might be his if he let his patrons know about all the entertainment which he has to offer.

"I believe in giving the short subjects advertising backing nearly equal with the feature, for there are a whole lot of my patrons who come to see the comedy as much as they do the feature and the vaudeville.

"I devote a good conspicuous box in my newspaper ad layout to my comedy, and make it especially forceful when I have stars like Lloyd Hamilton. Comedy stars such as Hamilton get 50 per cent. of the electric sign display and I consider that any comedy that is worth showing in the theatre is worth giving a good display in front of the theatre.

"This is by no means an experiment with me, for I have proved the value of exploiting the short subject through a long period of such exploitation, and have shown conclusively that good short subjects will attract people to the box-office when properly advertised.

"We have been showing Educational pictures for a long time and advertising them just as regularly. I certainly like 'The Spice of the Program' and the box office results show that my patrons do as well. I believe, based on my experience in showing these pictures and showing them as box office attractions, that they are the greatest on the market. They have always been very nearly 100 per cent.

In Milwaukee there has been a very noticeable increase in newspaper space devoted to comedy subjects.

"As a matter of fact," writes Max Stahl, manager of the Educational exchange in that city, "every two reel comedy which is used at our first run theatres in Milwaukee is advertised in the newspapers with the one or two column ads illustrated in our press sheets, for which we furnish exhibitors with free mats.

"It is very pleasing to note that throughout the Milwaukee territory about three-fourths of the Educational accounts are making use of the one-column ads shown in the press sheets."

With the increased attention being given to Short Subjects everywhere, it is very noticeable that the briefer pictures are getting better representation in theatre programs and house magazines.

The Rohs Theatre, Cynthiana, Kentucky, uses its short subjects to advantage in the attractive Rohs Theatre Magazine.

"LIKE TO LAUGH?

is a caption over an item in this program magazine which takes advantage of Educational's national advertising. This reader says:

"LIKE TO LAUGH?

"Sure you do. Every Tuesday and Saturday we offer a special Educational Comedy, just to make you laugh. The comedies, advertisements of which you read in the Saturday Evening Post every week, contain the highest priced fun stars on the screen today. See them."

The Rohs Theatre reminds its patrons that they are given the best pictures obtainable, no matter what the length, in another article in the program magazine:

"Napoleon was a small man, but he changed the map of Europe and all but mastered the world. Diamonds are small stones. A teacup is too large to hold all the radium in the world. Dimensions do not determine values. The other day a patron of the theatre said: 'I'd rather see a comedy like that than all the long-winded dramas ever made.' This theatre offers the best pictures obtainable, whether they come in two reels or a dozen."

"Our Gang" Has New Comedy On Pathe Program, Sept. 27

THE Pathe release schedule of short subjects for the week of September 27th will be headed by "The Land Rush," the first chapter of "Wild West," featuring Jack Mulhall and Helen Ferguson, supported by numerous well-known players and the entire Miller Brothers' 101 Ranch Wild West Show.

Other releases of the week are "Your Own Back Yard," an "Our Gang" comedy; "Love and Kisses' with Alice Day; "The Big Kick," a Hal Roach one-reel comedy; "Topics of the Day," "Aesop's Film Fables," Pathe Review and Pathe News.

"Your Own Back Yard" is another typical "Our Gang" comedy, directed by Robert McGowan at the Hal Roach studios. In this two-reeler, Farina appears in the principal role.

"Love and Kisses" is a two-reel comedy featuring Alice Day, produced by Mack Sennett and directed by Eddie Cline.

"The Big Kick" is a Hal Roach one-reeler, directed by Fred L. Guiol. Billy Engle appears as "Dinky" Dubb, a fight manager with ups and downs—any time hard luck knocks him down, worse luck picks him up.

Pathe Review No. 39 offers a trio of entertaining subjects: "Fireside Factores," how the peasants of Picardy manufacture cloth in their own homes; San Antonio, Texas, one of the series American Cities in Pathecolor; and "Seeing Things," chapter one of "The Magic Eye" series photographed by Louis Tolhurst.

"Hungry Hounds" is the cartoon comic of "Aesop's Film Fables" and other releases of the week are "Topics of the Day" and two issues of Pathe News.

Lubitsch Completes Cast Of "Lady Windermere's Fan"

WITH the signing of Ronald Colman, by arrangement with Samuel Goldwyn, to play the role of Lord Darlington, the cast of Warner Bros.' "Lady Windermere's Fan," now being produced by Ernst Lubitsch, is complete.

Irene Rich as Mrs. Erlynne; Ronald Colman as Lord Darlington; May McAvoy as Lady Windermere, and Helen Dunbar and Carrie Daumery as the Duchesses.

Oscar Wilde's greatest classic, which for many years maintained its world-wide popularity on the stage, bids fair to prove quite as successful on the screen if the preparations being made by the Warners and Mr. Lubitsch may be taken as a criterion.

The cast is also complete for Warner Bros.' "His Jazz Bride," production work on which is well under way according to reports from the studio to the home office in New York.

Marie Prevost and Matt Moore have the leading roles. The list comprises Marie Prevost as Gloria Gordon; Matt Moore as Dick Gregory; John Patrick as Stanley Wayburn; Mabel Julienne Scott as May Seymour; George Irving as Mr. Seymour; Don Alvarado as Jim Carewe,

Short Subject Drive Brings Big Results

RESULTS from the campaign of producers and distributors to secure stronger representation for short subject films are apparent everywhere, a check-up just completed by Fox Film Corporation's short subject department discloses.

In the general publicity disseminated by the Fox company's own publicity department, the survey shows, the number of stories written about short films have increased 100 per cent. A special staff has been detailed exclusively to gathering and compiling stories on the little features.

That this has brought about rapid recognition in the newspapers is proven by the increase in the number of clippings on shorts that appear. Stories on anything but feature productions were a rarity a few months ago. At the present time, however, clips on stories about the O. Henry picturizations, the Van Bibber comedies, the Helen and Warren married life series and Imperial comedies are appearing throughout the country every day.

Reports from the various Fox exchanges show that exhibitors are extending the fullest co-operation to the producers in the matter of publicizing the "little fellows." A composite of these reports, which are in answer to a Home Office query, would read:

"Exhibitors in this territory are going after shorts as never before. Efforts to boost apparent in lobbies, newspapers and outdoor advertising. Our new press books and other accessories hailed with delight and being put to full use. Keep them coming. Orders increase 100 per cent."

Praise "Stereoscopik"

World Theatre in Omaha Plays Pathe's "Zowie" as an Act and Subject Wins Applause

"Zowie," one of the Pathe third-dimension films, known as Ives-Leventhal "Stereoscopiks," was recently played as an act by the World Theatre in Omaha Nebraska, and the local newspapers gave it enthusiastic praise in their columns.

The Evening World-Herald of Omaha said: "Pictures that seem to rush out at you from the screen in fantastic grotesqueness are a novel feature at the World Theatre this week. The act is called 'Zowie' and it leaves you puzzling as to how it was accomplished."

The Omaha Daily News said: "'Zowie,' third dimension picture, is placed right in the middle of the World's current vaudeville bill. 'Zowie' proves the outstanding success of an excellent bill. Armed with red and blue glasses, the audience saw fantastic figures jump right out of the screen. A bold, bad brigand fires a gun within an inch of your face, a nifty bathing girl swims over the audience, a cowboy throws a lariat almost around your neck, and you involuntarily 'duck' as a pitcher heaves a baseball at your head. Screams and shouts from women of the audience prove the realism of 'Zowie.'"

"The Four Stragglers"

"The Four Stragglers," one of the recent notable novels by Frank L. Packard, the author of "The Miracle Man," has been purchased for motion picture production at an early date, according to an announcement from the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. This is a tense mystery story, concerning four odd characters whose apparent shortcomings in reality mask a very remarkable purpose in life.

"The Sea Beast"

"The Sea Beast" with John Barrymore will be completed within the next three weeks. The company, aboard a whaling vessel, is now cruising "somewhere in the Pacific," and the majority of the sea episodes are finished. Mr. Barrymore is said to be highly pleased with the picture so far. He will prepare for "Don Juan" upon his return from the sea cruise.

Dorothy Revier, Columbia Pictures' prize beauty who is being starred in their Waldorf series, wears a white wig in "Sealed Lips" on several occasions. "I have half a mind to wear it at social functions," she declared after the first time she was screened in it, "and I believe it would look really attractive. It was all the rage about a hundred and fifty years ago and with so many of the styles of that era returning, we surely should be able to stand one more." Dorothy is seen here with her director, Antonio Gaudio.

"The Checkered Flag" To Be Ginsberg's Next from Banner

HENRY GINSBERG expressed himself as particularly pleased with the manner in which production on Banner and Royal pictures is proceeding on the West Coast. The schedule for production is one picture per month, alternating with Banner and Royal, the first picture, "The Love Gamble," having been released on July 15. It is now being shown in the principal theatres throughout the country.

At the present time the two first Banner Productions have been released also the first Royal. The second Royal, "Big Pal," has been completed and prints are expected in New York the latter part of the week.

Mr. Ginsberg scored a remarkable coup in bringing Robert Frazer into the fold of the independents in the first release of his distributing corporation, "The Love Gamble," in which the well-known star was cast with Lillian Rich, now under contract with Cecil B. De DeMille.

The list of stars engaged for Banner and Royal productions is evidence of the general excellence of the product. In the Banner series are included such stars and players as Lillian Rich, Robert Frazer, Pauline Garon, Arthur Rankin, May Allison, Holmes Herbert, John Miljan, Rosemary Theby, Estelle Taylor, Bryant Washburn, Alec B. Francis, Frankie Darro and Mary Carr.

The first two of the Royal series include William Russell as the featured player with Barbara Bedford, Julianne Johnston, Mickey Bennett, Phillips Smalley and others.

The third of the Banner series, "The Checkered Flag," will go into production this week.

The finished script was completed by Charles and Fannie Hatton and approved by Henry Ginsberg and has been returned to the Coast with instructions to Ben Verschleiser, who is producing for Banner, to spare no expense in making a pretentious production of this widely read story of the automobile speedway.

"The Checkered Flag" was written by John Mersereau and appeared first as a serial and is no wissued in a photoplay edition by Grosset and Dunlap.

It is possible that Mr. Ginsberg will take a flying trip to the coast in the course of the next ten days to approve the final selection of casts for the remaining pictures of the season's schedule. As outlined previously, the Ginsberg Corporation is making one release a month and all the stories and titles have been selected. There will possibly be a change in the fifth of the Banner Production titles, "The Man With the Brooding Eyes."

As the result of a contest Henry Ginsberg has in his possession more than three thousand titles which have been submitted for the renaming of this picture.

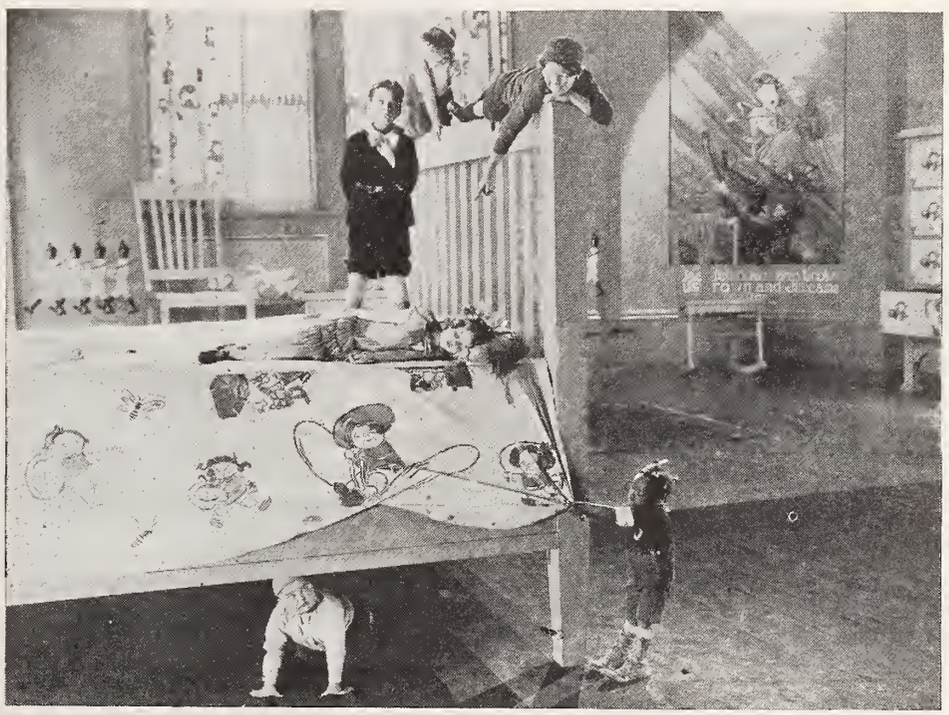
With the season getting under way, Banner and Royal productions are finding their way into a number of the more important theatres throughout the country, while in Europe the Ginsberg London office, under the managing directorship of Jeffrey Bernerd, reports a hundred per cent distribution in the United Kingdom.

First Half of Gotham Program Finished; Announce Second Six

WITH the final editing and titling of The Shadow on the Wall" completed, Gotham Productions have finished and delivered fifty per cent. of their present season's schedule of twelve productions over sixty days ahead of time. The productions so far completed and delivered to exchanges to be released in the order named are: "The Overland Limited," "The Police Patrol," "A Little Girl in a Big City," "His Master's Voice," "The Part Time Wife" and "The Shadow on the Wall." Each production has also been sent out complete with accessories.

In announcing the second half of the production schedule Sam Sax is quoted as follows: "In delivering six productions not only on schedule time but with a margin of sixty days ahead of the promised date and having them ready for exchanges and exhibitors with complete paper and accessories we are setting a new example for the trade.

"We have today started actual production work on our seventh production with the signing of Ralph Lewis for the featured part in "One of the Bravest." He will be surrounded by a strong cast. Number eight on our schedule will be a big circus picture entitled "Hearts and Spangles" which will be followed by another story starring "Thunder" the Marvel Dog and entitled "The Phantom of the Forest." Number ten will be "Racing Blood" and then comes "The Speed Limit" a rapid fire auto comedy-drama. The last on the list is "The Sign of the Claw" the third feature starring the dog "Thunder." When the regular production plans are cleared away we will put into production our big comedy special "McFadden's Row of Flats."



A scene in "Mary, Queen of Tots," "Our Gang" comedy produced by Hal Roach for Pathe release.

Melodrama With Comedy Holds Big Place in F. B. O. Program

"DRAMA abounding in romantic sentiment and sensational incidents, typically ending happily."

That is what that eminent word monger, the late Mr. Webster, has to say about melodrama. And that is precisely the policy to which Film Booking Offices is committed for its big current production program of sixty pictures.

Just how completely F. B. O. is "sold" on the theory that melodrama will be the popular form of screen entertainment for some time to come is proved by the fact that of twelve Gold Bond special productions scheduled, all but two are distinctly of the melodramtic variety, albeit they range from a certain sophistication down (or up) to the rock-ribbed "red shirt" variety. And of the forty odd program pictures, all are melodramas.

Evelyn Brent, for instance, is making crook melodramas. Six of the late eight pictures she has completed for F. B. O. are of this type, and the other two are romantic melodramas in a colorful setting.

Fred Thomson is making western melodramas, heavily spiked with comedy. Lefty Flynn is making comedy-melodramas, largely of the athletic school. His last picture, "Heads Up," was really burlesque melodrama in a South American locale.

Tom Tyler, the new western star, is making melodramas; as is Bob Custer. And even the new two-reel "Adventures of Mazie" series starring Alberta Vaughn will have melodramatic incidents woven through it.

The real punch of the screen, as of the theatre, has always been in the field of melodrama. Recently producers swung blindly into a sex wave that threatened for a time to engulf the whole industry; but that day is past. Small town exhibitors reports prove conclusively that there is no demand for the sex story. Powerful melodrama, logically developed and imbued with sufficient comedy to relieve its tension will have a stronger hold on the picture going public in this country during the next year than it has ever had, in the belief of F. B. O. officials; and its influence, always potent save for a comparatively short period of time, will mould entirely the production policy of this organization.

These figures, of course, do not include some of the short subjects on the Film Booking Offices' program, nor some of the comedy subjects which will obviously be designed as straight laugh-producers.

Marion Davies Again Signs With Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer

A NEW CONTRACT for the services of Marion Davies has been signed at the Culver City studios, as a result of which this popular star will appear in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer pictures for a long term. Miss Davies' original contract called for only one picture, but following the completion of "Lights of Old Broadway," directed by Monta Bell, a new arrangement has been entered into whereby Miss Davies will soon start work at the Culver City studios on the first of a series of Cosmopolitan productions for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

"Lights of Old Broadway," the picture which has won Miss Davies her new contract, is scheduled for release in October. It is based on the Laurence Eyre stage success, "Merry Wives of Gotham," and has been adapted to the screen by Carey Wilson. Conrad Nagel plays opposite the star, who is presented in a dual role. The story deals with New York in the early seventies, when electric lights, then newly invented by Thomas Edison, were first being adopted by Manhattan for street lighting.

The comic talent for which Miss Davies was so highly praised by her critics and her public in her last picture, "Zander the Great," has found ready outlet in "Lights of Old Broadway." Particularly in the role of Fely, the waif adopted by certain Irish settlers, has Miss Davies disported herself in hilarious manner. The picture contains, in addition, highly dramatic and thrilling scenes.

"Zander the Great," the Marion Davies' picture now playing throughout the country to large grosses, is a Cosmopolitan production for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer directed by George Hill from the Salisbury Field stage success, adapted to the screen by Frances Marion.

Marion Davies, now starring in Monta Bell's "Lights of Old Broadway," photographed on the grounds of her new home in Beverly Hills. "Lights of Old Broadway" is a Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer picturization of the Laurence Eyre stage success, "Merry Wives of Gotham," adapted to the screen by Carey Wilson.

Shapiro Books Tiffany Films

William D. Shapiro, president of the Franklin Film Company, who are the distributors of the Tiffany and Truart Productions in the New England territory, announces that he has booked the entire Tiffany "Big Twelve" by famous authors for the Poli Circuit of theatres.

"The Auction Block"

Frederic and Fanny Hatton have begun work at the Culver City studios on the screen adaptation of Rex Beach's "The Auction Block," which is to be produced by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer at an early date.

HENRY KING
The famous director, has completed "Stella Dallas," a Samuel Goldwyn production, for release by United Artists Corporation.

King Finishes Camera Work on Goldwyn's "Stella Dallas"

AFTER four months of actual filming, with the exposure of more than fifty reels of negative, the Henry King production of "Stella Dallas" has been finished. In the next few weeks the picture will be titled and edited, then previewed in half a dozen theatres on the West Coast representing different classes of clientele, in order to get first hand audience reactions before the feature is offered for general release by United Artists Corporation.

The end of actual production activities on "Stella Dallas" marks the closing chapter in the filming of this drama, events of which have been spread out over eighteen months.

More than a year and a half ago Samuel Goldwyn, who is sponsoring the production, bought the motion picture rights to Mrs. Olive Higgins Prouty's novel of the same name. For more than a year he waited till he could get the services of the one director he believed could give to "Stella Dallas" the depth of feeling the story possesses.

The selection of Henry King came after most of the directorial talent had been considered. Mr. Goldwyn's final decision was determined by King himself, who after reading the novel, asked Mr. Goldwyn for the chance to translate "Stella Dallas" from book to screen.

Mr. Goldwyn's next step was to find someone to play the part of Stella, a role made difficult by the fact that the character calls for three different ages; that is, a girl of twenty, the same character at thirty and at forty. After seventy-two candidates had been tried out and tested for the role, sought by the screen's most emotional actresses, the part of Stella Dallas was given to Belle Bennett.

In the selection of others for the cast, Mr. Goldwyn chose only those in the front rank of their particular lines. Ronald Colman was picked to play the romantic role of Stephen Dallas; Alice Joyce to play the dignified and cultural part of Mrs. Morrison; Jean Hersholt for the character part of Ed Munn, the riding master; Lois Moran, the young, unsophisticated and unmodernized child wonder, is the daughter Laurel to the life, and Douglas Fairbanks, Jr., is cast as young Grosvenor, the juvenile lead.

Mr. Goldwyn personally will bring the "Stella Dallas" print from Hollywood to New York, in October, when a Broadway presentation will be arranged and final details perfected for the general release of the picture by United Artists Corporation.

"The Phantom of the Opera" Booked for Run in Chicago

THE PHANTOM OF THE OPERA," Universal's master-picture for the 1925-1926 season, will have its Chicago premiere sometime in November in the big Roosevelt Theatre, the principal Balaban & Katz house. This information was brought to New York this week by Ned Marin, sales director for Universal, who has just returned from a swing through the Middle West.

The arrangement between Universal and the B. & K. interests for "The Phantom" was concluded by Marin and Leroy Alexander, Universal's Chicago manager on the one hand, and Sam Katz and Floyd Brockwell, general manager of the B. & K. Midwest Theatres, Inc., on the other.

The big Universal spectacle drama will go into the Roosevelt for an indefinite run, and it is expected that it will be presented in elaborate settings, both scenic and musical, similar to those which are to mark its New York premiere next Sunday in the Astor Theatre.

The Balaban & Katz executives are highly enthusiastic over "The Phantom" and have great confidence in its box-office possibilities, Marin reports.

The Roosevelt is Chicago's famous long-run house and is one of the most important houses in the entire United States. It ranks in moving picture importance with Grauman's Egyptian Theatre because it only plays pictures which have possibilities of long runs. The success of "Don Q" which is playing there now will determine, more or less, when "The Phantom of the Opera" is to go into the Roosevelt.

The Roosevelt booking is one of the most important contracts so far signed on "The Phantom of the Opera," Marin states. Booking on this big special is exceptional throughout the Middle West, he says.

"I screened the picture for various exhibitors in this section, and all are enthusiastic over it. They hail it as a really great picture and expect it even to exceed the records established by 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame,'" the Universal sales director reports

Completes "The Sixth Degree"

Camera activity ceased this week on the Associated Exhibitors feature picture, "The Sixth Degree," which was produced by Henri Diamant Berger at the Diamant studios in Fort Lee, N. J. The film is now undergoing editing and titling, and is scheduled for release in the late Fall.

A STAR, A CRITIC AND A DIRECTOR
Douglas Fairbanks, Louella O. Parsons, noted motion picture critic of the "New York American," and Christy Cabanne, photographed at the Culver City studios of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, where Cabanne is now completing "The Midshipman," Ramon Novarro's first starring vehicle. Miss Parsons is one of the best informed, most exacting and wholly charming of all the feminine authorities on motion picture matters. She visited the big studios in Hollywood for several weeks and wrote entertainingly of them in her column in the "American."

New Educational Gagster

Charles Gordon Saxton, formerly a cartoonist on the New York World, has forsaken the pen and pencil for the typewriter, and is now busy formulating funny gags for Educational Mermaid Comedies at the new Educational Studios in Los Angeles. Mr. Saxton was attached to the World for two years and his odd cartoons attracted wide attention on account of the individual treatment accorded them. His work was also a feature of the Sunday World during this period.

Color Sequence in Gloria's Next

One of the most gorgeous bits of color photography ever shown on the screen will be a part of Gloria Swanson's coming Paramount picture, "Stage Struck," which, with Allan Dwan directing, is being completed at the Long Island studio. Miss Swanson has the role of a poor little waitress who dreams she is a great actress, and the color sequence is the dream.

Kenneth Harlan's Next

Warner Bros. started production work this week on "The Fighting Edge," their picturization of William McLeod Raine's thrilling novel. The cast, as so far recruited, comprises Kenneth Harlan, Patsy Ruth Miller, Gayne Whitman, Charles ("Heine") Conklin, Pat Hartigan and Eugene Palette. Henry Lehrman is directing.

"S O S Perils of the Sea"

Elaine Hammerstein, starred in "S O S Perils of the Sea" which Joe Brandt, president of Columbia Pictures, wrote, has the most dramatic role ever created for her. Her leading man is Robert Ellis. Pat Harmon, William Franey, Jean O'Rourke, Lewis Sargeant and Frank Alexander also play important roles. James P. Hogan is directing.

Buys Gothams for New England

Hardly a week passes by without the announcement of a new territory sold by Lumas Film Corporation for the new series of twelve Gotham Productions. The latest deal to be announced by Sam Sax relates to the New England territory, the franchise for which was placed with Messrs. Montague and McConville of Independent Films, Inc., of Boston, Mass.

Stage Calls "The Mystic"

So successful has Tod Browning's "The Mystic" proved that New York stage producers are negotiating with Director Browning for the stage rights to this Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, in which Conway Tearle and Aileen Pringle have the leading roles.

Fashion's Queen

Stella Doyle, an English girl who recently joined the Christie Company, was selected as a queen of the fashion parade which San Francisco held as a part of the Diamond Jubilee festivities celebrating San Francisco's seventy-fifth birthday.

Schulberg Releases De Sano

Marcel De Sano, film director, has been released from his contract with B. P. Schulberg, due to the director's ill health. He will take an extensive vacation at a mountain health resort before resuming his directorial work, De Sano says.

Add to Cast of "Martinique"

Four players were added to the already extensive cast of "Martinique," Bebe Daniels' latest for Paramount. The new members of the cast are Edith Yorke, Brandon Hurst, Evelyn Sherman and Billy Franey. In addition to Miss Daniels the featured players already announced include Ricardo Cortez, Wallace Beery, Arthur Edmund Carew, Dale Fuller, Robert Perry, Eulalie Jensen and Emily Barrye. William K. Howard is directing.

"Limited Mail" Goes Big

Warner Bros.' "The Limited Mail," starring Monte Blue, got 'em on both the Atlantic and Pacific edges of the continent. It is the opening attraction, this week, at Warners Theatre in New York. Last week it played the Granada Theatre, San Francisco, and smashed attendance records at that popular house.

"Graustark" Takes Capitol Record

Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, announces that the Norma Talmadge production of George Barr McCutcheon's famous love story, "Graustark," has hung up a new box office record at the Capitol, which means a new record for Broadway.

"Graustark" brought into the Capitol box office on Labor Day $16,126.70, breaking all previous records for a single day's receipts. Monday's receipts added to $14,483.90, representing receipts for Sunday, has established a new world record for a two-day total.

Major Bowes surrounded "Graustark" which is a First National picture with one of the most colorful and entertaining programs the theatre has ever presented.

"Bellamy the Magnificent"

Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer has purchased an original play entitled "Bellamy the Magnificent," from Roy Horniman, the English actor, playwright and novelist. "Bellamy the Magnificent" was first published by the author as a novel, and proved so popular that he dramatized the story in 1908.

"Free Lips"

Production has begun at the Culver City studios on "Free Lips," Norma Shearer's new starring vehicle for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Hobart Henley is directing this Carey Wilson story, and Lew Cody plays the leading role.

Semon Starts Comedy

Larry Semond has started the filming of the initial scenes of "Stop, Look and Listen," an adaptation of the popular Broadway musical comedy success, his first feature comedy under the Pathe banner. Semon is directing.

M-G-M Keeps D'Arcy

Louis B. Mayer has exercised the option which he held on Roy D'Arcy's contract, thereby retaining the services of the player who has made a pronounced hit in Erich von Stroheim's "The Merry Widow."

Norma Shearer's Next Vehicle

Norma Shearer's next starring vehicle will be "Free Lips," by Carey Wilson, according to an announcement just made by Harry Rapf, associate executive at the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios. Hobart Henley is to direct this production under his new contract with the Culver City studios, and Lew Cody is to have the leading male role. Hope Loring and Louis Leigl ton have adapted the story to the screen.

To Adapt "Fifth Avenue"

Anthony Coldewey, for the past two years special scenarist for James Cruze, has been engaged by A. H. Sebastian to prepare the screen version of Arthur Stringer's forthcoming Saturday Evening Post serial, "Fifth Avenue," which will soon go into production at the Metropolitan Studios in Hollywood for release through Producers Distributing Corp., under the directin of Robert Vignola.

Start Imperial Comedy

"All At Sea" is the working title announced for the latest Imperial Comedy which has just been put into production at the Fox West Coast Studios. Lew Seiler, veteran director of Fox comedies, is directing this new short subject. Sid Smith and Judy King will be seen in the leading roles. The other principals are Stanley Blystone, James Farley and Nora Cecil.

Victory Bateman Signed

Victory Bateman, famous player on the legitimate stage, has been enrolled in the cast of "The Great Love," now being directed by Marshall Neilan for the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Miss Bateman is a character woman. Her resemblance to the late Queen Victoria is remarkable, and she approaches the famous British ruler even in dignity and poise.

Again—"The Barrier"

Norman Kerry, Universal male star, has been signed by the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer studios to play the leading role in Rex Beach's "The Barrier," to be directed by George Hill. Hill was formerly under contract to Cosmopolitan and directed Marion Davies in her recent success, "Zander the Great."

"The Great Love"

Marshall Neilan is at work at the Cuver City studios on the big circus scenes of "The Great Love," which he is producing for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Viola Dana is featured in this ambitious production, and Bobby Agnew has the leading male role.

Mauritz Stiller Here

Mauritz Stiller, famous Swedish director, and Greta Garbo, the actress who has become famous throughout Eurpoe under his direction, have arrived in Los Angeles from New York, having been signed by Louis B. Mayer on his recent visit to Europe, to work for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer.

Third Wales Feature Arrives

Artclass Pictures has received the first print and negative of "Galloping On" the third in the series of Eight Five Reel Acrobatic Stunt Thrillers featuring Wally Wales (The Cowboy Prince.)

DeMille Completes Work on "The Road to Yesterday"

CECIL B. DeMILLE has put aside his megaphone and taken up his finest magnifying glass in the cutting room where the final shots of De Mille's personally directed production, "The Road to Yesterday" were sent this week.

Work on the preliminary assembly of this first big production through Producers Distributing Corporation has been in progress since the first week of "shooting" and now with De Mille at liberty to personally supervise the editing, the picture will rapidly assume its final form.

John C. Flinn, vice president and general manager of Producers Distributing Corporation, who returned from Los Angeles last week, reports that after viewing a rough draft of "The Road to Yesterday" in the studio projection room, he is confident that this production will register as the greatest achievement of De Mille's ambitious career.

"Neither effort nor expense has been spared to make this picture a really great production," says Mr. Flinn, "and I believe that artistically and commercially we will have something decidedly unusual to offer in "The Road to Yesterday."

This production was filmed from an adaptation prepared in collaboration by Jeanie Macpherson, author of the story of "The Ten Commandments," and Beulah Marie Dix, co-author with E. G. Sutherland of "The Road to Yesterday." Joseph Schildkrault, Jetta Goudal, Vera Reynolds, William Boyd, Casson Ferguson and Trixie Friganza fill the featured roles.

Dwight C. Leeper Asserts Europe Uses Our Films

DWIGHT C. LEEPER, Vice President of Richmount Pictures and associated with Harry J. Brown in the production of Reed Howes and Billy Sullivan Pictures for Rayart Pictures, returned from a tour of the principal cities of Continental Europe the latter part of last week.

Mr. Leeper was especially enthusiastic over the outlook in the countries visited which included England, France, Belgium, Germany and Switzerland.

"Every place I went," stated Mr. Leeper, "I found the American picture the popular entertainment of the country. I was elated to find our product playing in Paris, London, Berlin and other principal cities that I visited and Reed Howes seems to be gaining popular favor in these foreign countries the same as here.

"In England I find that the American picture is especially strong and the Independent picture is getting an even better break in that country than here. In France I find the Independent picture rapidly finding its place in that market, while Germany, which has been backward due to financial and war conditions, is now coming to the front and the Independent picture is being sought by the representative buyers.

"Summing up, I believe that in the coming season the Independent distributors will find a more ready market abroad than at any time in years past."

Mr. Leeper spent a couple of vacation weeks at Deauville and Monte Carlo.

He will leave early in October for the Coast to go over with Mr. Brown and Mr. Johnston, President of Rayart, plans for forthcoming productions.

An early production to be started by Messrs. Brown and Leeper will be "The Beloved Pawn," from the novel of that name.

Added to Cast of "Morals for Men"

Robert Ober, Mary Beth Milford and Otto Matieson have been added to the cast of the fourth of the Tiffany Production's "Big Twelve," "Morals For Men" suggested by the "Love Serum" by Gouverneur Morris. The story was adapted for the screen by A. P. Younger, who is also supervising production.

Conway Tearle and Agnes Ayres are the featured leads in "Morals For Men."

Signs Bowers and De La Motte

William Sistrom, general manager of Metropolitan Pictures, releasing through Producers Distributing Corporation, announces the signing of Marguerite De La Motte and John Bowers on individual contracts for their exclusive services in Metropolitan Pictures during the coming year.

Metropolitan Signs Cunningham

Metropolitan Pictures have signed Jack Cunningham as head of the film editorial department, according to announcement by William Sistrom, general manager of the Metropolitan Studio.

In accordance with plans to enlarge the output of Metropolitan Pictures, which will include the stories to have been filmed by Hunt Stromberg, Sistrom states that all departments will be enlarged.

Made Eastern Scenario Head

Pearl Keating, who for several years was head of Warner Brothers' scenario department, has been engaged by Metropolitan Pictures, Inc., to head that company's eastern scenario department.

"Pony Express" Has Great World Premiere in 'Frisco

AT one of the most brilliant social and theatrical gatherings in the history of San Francisco, that city gave a tremendous ovation to James Cruze's epic of California, "The Pony Express," at its formal world premiere opening at the Imperial Theatre, September 3. Sun arcs and kliegs played on the theatre and thousands packed Market Street, unable to gain admittance.

United States Senator Samuel Shortridge voiced the thanks of the State when he said: "This is history made visible. In the name of the State of California I extend official thanks to Mr. Cruze and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation for their masterful filming of 'The Pony Express.'"

"The Pony Express" has been officially named the Diamond Jubilee picture and is part of the celebration commemorating the seventy-fifth anniversary of California's admission into the Union. Notables in every walk of life were present. United States Senator Hiram W. Johnson, former Senator James D. Phelan, Federal and State Judges, officials, dramatists, writers and prominent publishers appeared to honor Cruze, the master director who had made "The Covered Wagon" and to view his new epic of Western history. An elite audience, thoroughly conversant with the minutest details of Western history, applauded and cheered, and at the end went forth proclaiming "The Pony Express" as the true dramatic epic of their own State and a worthy successor to Cruze's earlier epic, "The Covered Wagon."

The special feature of the evening was the introduction of a score of Hollywood's brightest stars and luminaries to the audience. They ranged from Hollywood's youngest star, beautiful Mary Brian, the Wendy of 'Peter Pan,' and only sixteen years of age, to Luke Cosgrave, who quit telling his age when he was sixty, and included Neil Hamilton, Billie Dove, William Collier, Jr., Jack Holt, Noah Beery, Kathlyn Williams, Warner Baxter, Winifred Bryson, Edmund Lowe, Lilyan Tashman, Richard Tucker, Wallace Beery (whose performance in "The Pony Express" won round after round of applause), Charles Eyton, West Coast manager of the Paramount studio, and Director Irvin Willat.

Senator Shortridge, in the closing talk preceding the showing of the picture, said:

"As our pioneer fathers sixty-five years ago welcomed the arrival of the pony express to California, so do we, tonight, gathered for the Diamond Jubilee Celebration, welcome 'The Pony Express,' Mr. Cruze's great story of this epic page of our history, again to our State and our city. No more romantic story of heroism, of obstacles surmounted, of difficulties overcome, of sacrifice and loyalty exists in our annals. Mr. Cruze has made a great picture and I have asked for a special print of it to place in the Congressional Library. It is history made visible!"

On their arrival in San Francisco the stars were met with an old Overland stage coach. They all piled in and Jack Holt drove the coach with its six horses through the crowded traffic to the St. Francis Hotel amid applause of thousands of noolookers.

The real thing in freaks will be seen in the Frances Marion production, "Simon the Jester." Here (on the left) are the giant, the midget, the fat lady, and the human skeleton, recruited by Director George Melford from one of the big circuses. On the right, famous circus clowns strike an impromptu tableau between "shots" of the picture. "Simon the Jester" will be released by Producers Distributing Corporation.

Bachmann Back from Coast Trip; Praise "Plastic Age" At Preview

J. G. BACHMANN, general manager of distribution for B. P. Schulberg Productions, has returned from a visit to the coast studios of Preferred Pictures after a series of conferences with B. P. Schulberg concerning production matters. During his sojourn in Hollywood Mr. Bachmann saw the screen version of Percy Marks' novel, "The Plastic Age" completed by Director Wesley Ruggles and shortly before entraining for the east attended the preview given for picture folks and exhibitors.

"The preview audience," states Mr. Bachmann, "received 'The Plastic Age' with enthusiasm such as seldom has been accorded the industry's biggest pictures. It is only natural that we ourselves should be convinced that we have a potentially great box-office attraction in it—but what is more, the judgment of everybody present indicates that 'The Plastic Age' is the greatest production success that Mr. Schulberg has ever made—bigger than 'Rich Men's Wives,' bigger than 'The Virginian' or the other money makers he has turned out in the past. And the west coast reviewers say it is a finer achievement than 'The Girl Who Wouldn't Work' which has won so many critical endorsements. The work of Director Ruggles and the two leads, Clara Bow and Donald Keith is outstanding. The spirit of youth that prevades the whole picture is sure to find favor."

Gasnier completed his current Preferred Picture, "The Other Woman's Story" while Mr. Bachmann was in the west. Two more releases, "Lew Tyler's Wives" by Wallace Irwin and "Horses and Women," a screen version of "The Biography of a Race Horse" by L. B. Yates, were also put into production.

Bow and Keith Teamed Again

Clara Bow and Donald Keith who were featured in the leads of "Parisian Love" and "Free to Love," are united once more as the principals in the picturization of Percy Marks' novel, "The Plastic Age" now being filmed by Wesley Ruggles. It is probable that this popular young team will be featured together in several more of the twenty big stories on the current Schulberg program.

Constance Bennett Signed for "Sally, Irene and Mary"

CONSTANCE BENNETT has been engaged to play the part of Sally in Edmund Goulding's production of "Sally, Irene and Mary" for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, according to an announcement by Harry Rapf, associate executive of the Culver City studios. Negotiations, which have been going on for some time, were brought to a final close in New York yesterday with the signing of the contract.

Miss Bennett, who has been in the east making a series of pictures, will leave immediately for the West Coast and will start work in the Goulding production within the next few days.

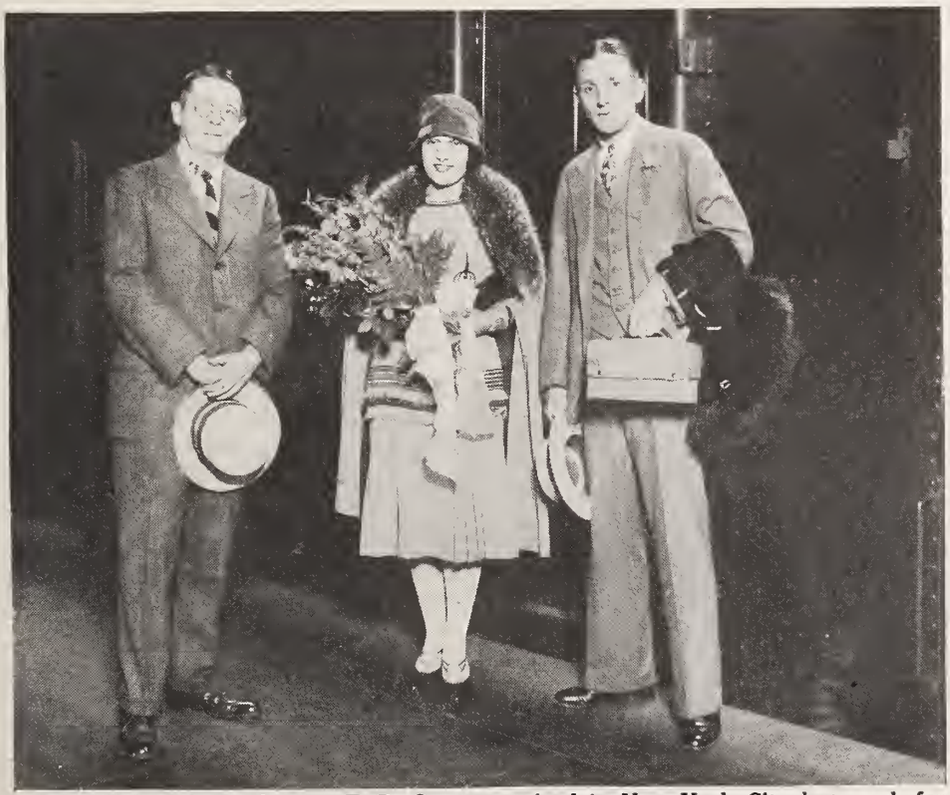
The role of "Sally" calls for intense emotional acting. It is one of the most important in the production, which is to be filmed on a large and elaborate scale.

Miss Bennett, a daughter of the famous actor, Richard Bennett, has been in pictures for two years, scoring triumphantly since her first appearance in "Cytherea." Recently she was featured in "My Son," with Alla Nazimova.

Joan Crawford (formerly known as Lucille Leseuer) has been cast as Irene and William Hainos as Jimmy Dugan.

"The Love Toy"

With the completion of "The Love Toy," Lowell Sherman's second picture for the Warners, Mr. Sherman left for New York to fill a stage engagement. Jack Warner is so enthusiastic regarding Mr. Sherman's two pictures that he is anxious to have him return for at least one picture next season, if it can be arranged.



When Evelyn Brent, famous F. B. O. star, arrived in New York City last week for her first visit in three years she was met at the train by Harry Osborne, of the F. B. O. offices (right) and Frank Leonard, the F. B. O. exploitation expert.

Edna Purviance to Be Starred in Chaplin Films

Edna Purviance, leading woman in many of Charlie Chaplin's earlier comedies, and star of "A Woman of Paris," his first serious dramatic production, arrived in New York last week and left for Europe by the steamship Majestic.

On her return, she will be starred in a number of productions to be made at the Chaplin studios under supervision of Chaplin himself; the director's name to be announced shortly.

$1 for Your Time

Many exhibitors tell us that Moving Picture World Guide to Releases is the most accurate available to them. We know it is the most complete, in that it is the only chart containing names of stars, type of picture, and all necessary information to the exhibitor.

We want it to be absolutely accurate—Moving Picture World recognizes the importance of accurate footage information, etc.

If you notice an error in FEATURE footage, or any other major error, we will pay you $1 for the effort on your part of writing us a letter telling us the correct facts.

In many territories local censorship cuts after the footage to a minor extent. Don't write to tell us of these unimportant variations. But in any case where you feel that our figures will work a real hardship on the exhibitor following them—shoot us the word and we will shoot the dollar for your trouble.

Moving Picture World is willing to back up its complete confidence in the accuracy of its chart with its money.

We can't do more. No one else does as much. We thank you.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Did Not Realize

Roy Saxon, Lufkin, Texas, in remitting his second set of Bluebook School answers adds this:

I have been working on the questions ever since the "School" started, and, as I told you in my first letter, I have derived worlds of good from it. My only regret is that I have not been sending in answers every week. Honest, Richardson, I did not realize what I was missing. How any man, myself included, can overlook or pass up this opportunity of broadening his knowledge and his mind, and striving to better himself and his position by fitting himself for a higher plane, I am unable to understand.

I used to wonder how any projectionist could possibly benefit from such a school if he was compelled to look a part of the answers up in books, and copy a part of his answer from them, too, but I now see where I was wrong in that, because THERE IS NOT A SINGLE ANSWER THAT I HAVE GONE AFTER WITH MY LITTLE MENTAL PICK AXE AND DUG UP, AND WRITTEN OUT CAREFULLY, THAT I DO NOT UNDERSTAND PERFECTLY WHEN I HAVE FINISHED.

The Reason

This is partly due to the fact that in order to actually put one's answer down on paper in a creditable way, one is compelled to really get the whole matter pretty clearly in the mind, and many times I have actually written the answer four or five times before I got it just the way I wanted it. And after all that, believe you me it is not an in-at-one-ear-and-out-at-the-other matter at all. You just simply have the whole thing planted in your mind, and IT STAYS THERE.

Brother Saxon has set forth the whole matter exactly as it is. The highest value of the questions and answers is, as I have several times pointed out, the fact that at least nine out of every ten men who start seriously examining themselves to see how many of the questions they can give a really competent answer to, ARE GOING TO GET THE JOLT THEY NEED. They are going to wake up to the fact that they cannot really answer a lot of them with any degree of accuracy. If the man who really wants to learn will get busy and do the very real work necessary to dig out a competent answer, and put that reply in its best form, as he naturally would for publication, when he is through it may be safely assumed that not only has his knowledge been broadened, but also the knowledge acquired is fixed in his mind with at least reasonable permanence.

More Mutilation

Brother Saxon sent a foot of film in which were two varieties of scratch mark change-over signal—two punch mark signals and one daub of just plain white paint of some sort. Saxon says it is an outrage. Well, yes, but that doesn't get us anywhere. Personally I would enjoy operating an old fashioned ducking stool to which the business end of the three men who made these marks were securely tied. I'd like the water to be real nice and cold, and the weather real warm and I'd give them a five-second complete emersion every fifteen minutes, say, for about eight hours. Of course that really would not be adequate punishment for the offense, but anyhow it would help.

Better Projection Pays

It would require more than that to really penetrate the solid ivory of men who pull such stunts, and reach their brain—you see, I'm complimenting them by assuming that they really have a brain, though a small one.

But after all it is pretty nearly useless to talk to or about men who commit such idiotic outrages. They are really too dumb to care what is said about them, so what's the use? The exchanges CAN stop it if they really want to and try. I will undertake to go into any territory and stop ALL film outrages of this sort within one month, at most, provided the exchanges will ALL agree to do what I tell them, which is no more than they ought, for their own protection, to do. If I don't stop it within thirty days I will agree to forfeit one thousand dollars cash.

Bluebook School

Question No. 373—(Roy Saxon, Lufkin, Texas, submits this as a practical question. I am of the opinion that what he has in mind is one certain type or make of projector. His question is): Is it or is it not advantageous to keep the framing lever in as nearly as possible one fixed position at all times?

Question No. 374—(Practical question submitted by T. R. Guimond, Mobile, Alabama)—Using carbons well within their rated capacity, either negative or positive pencil—burn to a long, slim point. What is the probable cause or what various things might be the cause?

Question No. 375—Describe a cartridge fuse in detail.

Question No. 376—Name and describe two types of cartridge fuses.

Question No. 377—Suppose you took charge of a new installation and found there would be a maximum current consumption, at times, of 150 amperes of current in the projection room. The projection room supply circuit you found to be fused with 200 ampere cartridge type fuses, with ferrule contacts in good condition and tight, would you accept the layout?

The Right System

Ray Guaegy, Paducah, Kentucky, comes across with answers to part of a series of Bluebook questions, and this note:

Realizing that the one best way to secure maximum benefit from the Bluebook School is to pitch in and hustle the answers to the questions by my own energy and effort, I hand you herewith answers to questions 336, 337 and 338.

Have been following the department for about seven years. It has taught me very much with regard to better projection. I also have the "Bluebook," which I think is priceless. It is one of my most treasured possessions. I also have Hawkins Guides and a set of I .C. S. Electrical books and the lens chart.

In reading my replies to the questions, please remember that I am only trying to increase my knowledge of projection, to the end that I may be able to put better results upon the screen. I am NOT afraid to be criticized for my mistakes, for the man who makes or made none has never yet been born.

All right, brother Guaegy. I will examine your answers carefully, but cannot undertake to write criticisms thereon. Your benefit will come through having tried to answer the questions, thus getting the matter fixed in your mind, and finding where your error was, if there was any, when the correct answer is published.

Those who really try to compile a COMPETENT, complete answer to the questions cannot possibly but be benefited. The minimum benefit is had by those who merely reply briefly without making the real effort necessary to get at the meat of the matter. Answers such as, for instance, Gray is sending, cannot but be enormously beneficial to him, BUT, brother, in this world of ours THERE IS NO EXCELLENCE WITHOUT GREAT LABOR, and if you want to get real benefit you will have to dig in and WORK.

I am of course well pleased that you have reaped benefit from the department and you are by no manner of means the first one who has waited seven years to say so. Well, better late than never. You're in, now make it your business to stay in. In the words of the poet: "Pleased t' metcha."

L. C. Porter Ill

L. C. Porter, Past President of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, enthusiastic worker, able engineer and a thoroughly good fellow in the best sense of that term, has been ill with appendicitis.

However, after a term of retirement into the depths of a hospital, where the sawbones abstracted a part and parcel of his anatomy, he is out again, well again and up-and-at-it again—which fact will be hailed with delight by all his friends, and "his friends" comprise most of who's who in the land of motion pictures.

Congratulations, Friend Porter! Accept a carload of roses (American Beauties of course) from us all, which roses are very real in our thoughts, if not in fact.

Thomas A. Edison Sketches His Early Activities in the Motion Picture Field

Last winter the writer set about gathering data concerning the early history of motion picture inventions, particularly as refers to projection. I was engaged in the preparation of an historical paper to be read before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers. In due course I asked Thomas A. Edison to prepare a statement covering his own connection with the in tion of the motion picture projector. Mr. Edison demurred, saying he was getting far along in years and did not feel able to undertake to dig that far back into the past. After I had called upon him personally and directed his attention to the fact that, while we all hoped he would be with us for many, many years, still should he be gathered unto his fathers there would be no personally prepared, personally signed statement of his early activities in the direction named, and much of the credit due him might be claimed by others, as the shadows deepened in and with the receding past, he finally consented.

His statement is in the form of a letter addressed to the Editor. It is personally signed by Mr. Edison, and is thoroughly authentic as his own personal statement. It will be published, as a part of the paper I prepared, in the forthcoming proceedings of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.. It was with the idea of placing in the archives of that body a permanent record, made by the men themselves (I secured other statements as well, one of them by Mr. George Eastman), which will be published later.

Here is Mr. Edison's letter:

Dear Mr. Richardson: In accordance with your request I will give you a brief account of my work in the development of the motion picture, with the hope that it will be filed in the proceedings of the Society, so as to constitute a permanent record.

One of my early notes on the subject made shortly after the kinetoscope was invented, not later than 1890, was the following:

In the year 1887 the idea occurred to me that it was possible to devise an instrument which should do for the eye what the phonograph does for the ear, and that by a combination of the two all motion and sound could be recorded and reproduced simultaneously. This idea, the germ of which came from a little toy called the zoetrope and the work of Muybridge, Marey and others, has now been accomplished so that every change of facial expression can be recorded and reproduced life size. The kinetoscope is only a small model illustrating the present stage of the progress, but with each succeeding month new possibilities are brought into view.

I believe that in coming years, by my own work and that of Muybridge, Marey and others who will doubtless enter the field, grand opera can be given at the Metropolitan Opera House at New York without any material change from the original and with artists and musicians long since dead.

I knew, of course, that both Muybridge and Marey had been able by photography to produce the illusion of motion by first securing instantaneous photographs of a single cycle of movement and indefinitely repeating the same, and that they had actually employed projectors by which the moving image would be shown on a screen. The work of these two pioneers was essentially scientific and in no sense utilitarian; they were interested only in analyzing movement and not in creating a source of entertainment. Their pictures were taken on plates and therefore were limited in number, so that a continued exhibition necessitated the constant repetition of a single cycle of movement. Furthermore, with both Muybridge and Marey, the photographic images were located centrally on the plates and for this reason when projected on the screen the image of the subject remained stationary with its arms or legs in motion. It was because of this limitation that, with the early pictures of Muybridge and Marey, it was not possible to utilize a distinctive background and therefore the pictures were taken before a screen of uniform color.

"Creating a New Art"

When I first turned my mind to the subject in 1887, it was with the thought of creating a new art. I was not interested in analyzing motion because that had been done with brilliant success by Muybridge and Marey before me. Just as with the phonograph which makes a permanent record of an indefinite number of successive sounds, I wanted to make a permanent record of an indefinite number of successive phases of movement, doing for the eye what the phonograph had done for the ear. This meant the photographing instantaneously of a scene as viewed by the eye and involved the following problems:

1. The pictures had to be taken from a single point of view and not from a changing point of view as with Muybridge and Marey. In other words, the camera should not move with respect to the background but the moving object or objects should move with respect to the camera—exactly the reverse of what had been done before. And taking the pictures from a single point of view meant the use of a single lens.

2. The pictures had to be taken at a sufficiently rapid rate to give a smooth and uniform reproduction without jerking; that is to say, the displacement between the succeeding photographs had to be made very small. With my early pictures the rate at which they were taken varied from 40 to 50 per second. This gave a smooth and beautiful reproduction even though the movements photographed were quite rapid. With the modern art this rate has been reduced to about 16 per second, solely in order to prolong the exhibition. Therefore sudden and rapid movements are avoided.

3. The reproduction of the photographs, either by direct view or by projection on a screen, had to be so effected that the interval between successive images would be less than one-seventh of a second. This was a purely physiological limitation made necessary to take advantage of the phenomenon of persistence of vision as had been done for many years with the zoetrope and toys of that character.

4. Since my conception involved the thought of permanently recording and reproducing a scene of indefinite duration, the use of disks or wheels on which to carry the pictures, as had been proposed by Muybridge and Marey, was impossible. A carrier of indefinite length was required and my conception included taking the photographs on and reproducing the positive prints from a tape of light, tough, flexible material, such as a narrow celluloid film. In this particular development I was very materially assisted by the intelligent and hearty co-operation of Mr. George Eastman, of Rochester, New York. At the time the invention was being developed by me, it was the accepted belief that the size of the grains of a photographic emulsion bore a definite relation to its sensitiveness and that a very high speed film must necessarily be one with very large grains. If this belief had been true it would have been difficult to secure satisfactory results, especially if the photographs were enlarged on the screen. However, I did not believe it was true, and, thanks to the skill of Mr. Eastman and his assistants, I was able to obtain from them for my experimental work and later for commercial use an extremely sensitive film of very fine grain.

Early Experiments

With the problems above stated before me, I took up my experimental work late in 1887 or early in 1888. As a preliminary and to test out the feasibility of my ideas, the first photographs were made on a cylinder (somewhat resembling a phonograph record) turning continuously, the pictures being of small or almost microscopic size and being arranged in a continuous spiral line on the cylinder. A positive print of the photographs was then made and placed upon the cylinder which, upon being again rotated, gave a reproduction of the original scene by illuminating each picture as it passed the eye by means of an electric spark. This was a purely tentative experiment and was eminently successful, a perfect reproduction of the object in motion, background and all, being secured.

I immediately perceived that my original conception of 1887 was entirely feasible and that it was possible to make a permanent record of a continuous scene just as it had been possible to make a permanent record of a continuous musical selection.

First Apparatus Impracticable

But the first experimental apparatus was obviously impracticable not only because the pictures were too small but also because the duration was limited by the length of the spiral path. The pictures were small because with the first experimental apparatus the sensitive surface moved continuously; to have made them larger would have meant inevitable blurring. I concluded, therefore, that in order to make larger pictures so as to secure sharp impressions it would be necessary to move the sensitive surface intermittently many times per second, thereby permitting the exposture to be made when the surface was stationary.

Turning then to my original thought of using a continuous film, I first employed a film of a width of one-half inch, but found that the pictures were still too small for satisfactory reproduction, especially if enlarged by projection on a screen. I then experimented with photographs one inch wide by three-quarters of an inch high. These dimensions were adopted by me in 1889 and remain today the standard of the art.

"Intermittent" Problems

The problem then arose as to the mechanical possibilities of feeding such a film intermittently past the field of a camera lens many times per second with the assurance that the film would be stationary at the instant of exposure and not shaking and vibrating to blur the image, and with the further assurance of such accuracy that the succeeding photographs would be exactly superposed one upon the other in reproduction. Various methods and schemes were experimented with for thus feeding the film and I concluded to adopt the scheme of using sprocket holes or perforations outside the photographs in order to permit the film to be engaged accurately by the feeding devices and to be moved always precisely the same distance in making the successive photographs. In forming the sprocket holes in the film I first used only a single line at one side, but finding this unsatisfactory, I utilized two lines of sprocket holes spaced so as to provide four holes for each picture, which also has been and now is the present standard of the art.

First Successful Camera

Very many forms of start and stop mechanism were tried, and by the summer of 1889 a satisfactory arrangement was adopted by me and was embodied in an actual full size camera by means of which the first motion pictures were taken on a celluloid film. These pictures were made in the summer of 1889; they were exactly like the present pictures except that they were taken at a considerably higher speed. In the latter respect they were actually superior to the present practice of the art, because the reproduction was smoother and less jerky.

Having by a long course of experiments thus made my first successful camera in the summer of 1899, I applied for a patent on it on August 24, 1891, and the patent thereon issued August 31, 1897, No. 589,168. This patent with its several reissues was recognized by the early manufacturers as the fundamental patent in the art and royalties under it were paid to me by the American manufacturers of films until its expiration in 1914.

Salient Camera Features

My first camera constructed by me in 1889 and covered by this patent disclosed the following features which have always been utilized in the art:

1. A single lens.
2. A long celluloid film carrying a sensitive surface and having two rows of sprocket holes.
3. A reel from which the film is unwound and a second reel on which the film is wound after exposure.
4. Mechanism having a minimum inertia for moving the section of the film between the two reels intermittently past the lens many times per second, the film being stopped and brought to rest at each exposure.
5. A shutter co-ordinated with the feed mechanism to expose the film during the periods of rest.

The following quotation from my patent (written in the year 1891) may be of interest to you:

> The purpose I have in view is to produce pictures representing objects in motion throughout an extended period of time which may be utilized to exhibit a scene including such moving objects in a perfect and natural manner, by means of a suitable exhibiting apparatus.
> In carrying out my invention I employ an apparatus for effecting by photography a representation suitable for reproduction of a scene including a moving object or objects comprising a means, such as a single camera, for intermittently projecting at such rapid rate as to result in persistence of vision, images of successive positions of the object or objects in motion as observed from a fixed and single point of view, a sensitized tape-like film, and a means for so moving the film as to cause the successive images to be received thereon separately and in single-line sequence.

"The Egg of Columbus"

The invention by me of this camera was in my opinion the egg of Columbus. By its means I had been able to secure as early as the summer of 1889 motion pictures on a long celluloid film representing exactly a scene as it would be observed by the eye with all of its details both as to background and as to objects moving with respect to the background. No such film had ever before been secured. No such camera for feeding a film intermittently and making exposures during the periods of rest had ever before been made or suggested.

After making my camera, the question then was, how shall the pictures be reproduced? It was obvious that they could be viewed directly through a suitable magnifying lens or that they could be projected on a screen as had been done by Muybridge and Marey in their classical work on the analysis of motion.

Slot Machine "Projection"

The most fruitful field immediately before me was the exhibition of the pictures by direct observation rather than by projection, because in the year 1890 and for some time afterwards a very popular form of entertainment in this country was the so-called "slot parlor" where phonographs were installed, arranged to be operated by coin-controlled mechanism. It therefore occurred to me to start out with a device by which the motion pictures could be made use of in the many hundreds of slot parlors which were then doing a flourishing business in the United States. This resulted in the development of the peep hole kinetoscope in which the film was moved continuously by a coin-started electric motor passing a magnifying lens of about two diameters; the picture was illuminated by an electric light below it and was observed through a slit in a shutter which exposed the picture when substantially in the optical axis of the lens. This gave an entirely satisfactory reproduction and anyone who remembers the old peep hole kinetoscope will, I think, agree with me that the results secured were remarkably clear and natural. Several thousands of these first kinetoscopes were made and distributed throughout the country in the years following 1890 and many of them were exhibited at the World's Fair in Chicago in 1893. Hundreds of films were made from 1890 and even earlier, for which purpose the first motion picture studio was erected, known as the "Black Maria."

I had always had in mind the projection of motion pictures on a screen even before the completion of my first successful camera in 1889. As a matter of fact, it was our practice from the very first to test the character and quality of films by projecting them on a screen by equipping the kinetoscope with a more powerful light and with a projecting lens.

Birth of Projection

Of course such a device would not have been suited for the public exhibition of pictures by projection owing to the insufficient light. For this purpose I saw that the successful projector should be based upon the principle of my camera wherein the periods of rest greatly exceeded the periods of motion of the film, thus giving the opportunity for much greater illumination, or in other words, making it possible to very greatly prolong the shutter opening. But in the early days there was no demand for a projector; there were no motion picture theatres and even after projectors were made by me their introduction was slow. The competitive struggle between the motion picture theatre and the penny arcade lasted, as you will remember, for a good many years.

In the year 1895 I had reached the conclusion, largely as the result of urging on the part of my agents, Messrs. Raff and Gammon, to design and manufacture a projector based upon the principle of my camera, feeding the film intermittently so as to secure satisfactory illumination. This work was well under way when, early in the year 1896, Mr. Thomas Armat, of Washington, D. C., brought my attention to a projector which he had invented and which he had exhibited in the previous Fall at the Cotton States Exposition at Atlanta. That exhibition, by the way, although technically successful, was a commercial failure. Any public interest in the possibility of motion picture projection was still dormant. Mr. Armat had worked out the details of the mechanism quite ingeniously and I concluded that the intermittent device which he had developed was more satisfactory than the one upon which I was working. I therefore arranged with him to use his type of projector, which was thereupon put on the market in 1896 as the Edison Vitascope and that machine (later known as the Edison Projecting Kinetoscope) was with various modifications and refinements manufactured and marketed by me for many years thereafter.

The foregoing comprises the essential facts in connection with my invention and development of the motion picture art. Of course much of the success of the motion picture as we now know it has been due to many factors, such as the skill and artistic ability of the directors, the technical skill of the cameramen, the exhibition value of the scenarios, the genius of the actors, and the business judgment and courage of the manufacturers, distributors and exhibitors.

Art Created in 1889

But from a purely mechanical and technical standpoint the motion picture art was created when my camera was completed in the summer of 1889. That device made it possible for the first time to secure a permanent photographic record of a scene including movement—something never before accomplished—and that device also was the basis of and disclosed the principle used with the modern projector. In the latter respect it disclosed the two reels for storing and taking up the film after exposure; it disclosed intermittent mechanism for feeding the film step by step past the lens; it disclosed the feature of relatively long periods of rest with correspondingly short periods of motion, and it disclosed the shutter for exposing the film during the periods of rest. In a broad sense all that was necessary to convert the camera into a projector was to use a suitable source of illumination for the film and to enlarge the shutter opening to secure the maximum lighting effect.

Very truly yours,
THOS. A. EDISON.

[Mr. Edison's official statement, contained in the above letter, provides the most important single document relative to the birth of cinematography. It will be noted that Mr. Edison gives credit to Mr. George Eastman for splendid co-operation in finding film suitable to those early experiments. The "Edison letter" will be followed by a similar statement by Mr. Eastman.]

English "Thumping"

John O'Leary, Projectionist York Palace Theatre, Philadelphia, Pa.—or at least he writes from Philadelphia, though I suspect the Palace is in York, Pa., says:

In July 18 issue you ask what is meant by "Thumping" reels, as mentioned in a circular letter sent out by First National Pictures, Ltd., London, England. I offer the following explanation, which I think will make it clear:

In Great Britain, as well as in many of the British Colonies, a roll of film is called a reel of film, or a "reel," while the thing we term a reel is called a "spool" over there. In their terms a "reel of film," which we would call a roll of film, is shipped in a tin can, and must be wound on a "spool" (reel) to be projected. After projection is finished the film must be again rewound into a roll ("reel") and placed in its shipping can to be returned to the exchange.

Now, it sometimes happens that through high speed rewinding, or from other causes, the layers of film are not even. Some layers project out beyond others, and the "Operator" having placed the "reel" in the "tin" proceeds to level the layers by striking the side of the film roll with the palm of the hand vigorously, thus "thumping" the reel to make the layers of film even, or level.

Thanks, brother O'Leary, but I suspect your explanation possibly may lack being an entirely full one, for I'll bet dollars to marbles that the "palm of the hand" isn't always used. I can almost see the "operator" dropping an obstinate, tightly wound "reel" on the bench with vigor—and language—if it doesn't settle down level pronto, especially if his flapper is waiting his coming, and the uneven "reels" delay him.

I knew about the films being shipped in rolls and placed on reels, or "spools," at the theatres, but the "thumping"—well, that was a bit over my head. Again, thanks!

Bluebook School—Answers 344-347

Question No. 344—Three months ago I took a position in this theatre as Chief Projectionist. It is a fine theatre, seating 1,075. Everything is the best that money can buy, except the projection machinery, which is old, badly worn and in a miserable state of repair. The owner is the manager. He pays the union scale because he has to, but to get repair parts from him is impossible, until the part to be replaced is absolutely and completely worn out. Even then it often means a fight. He buys job lot carbons, and doesn't seem to care what the picture is, so long as there is one on the screen. He says were it not for the union he would have a boy "run the machine," and seems to have the idea that "running the machine" is absolutely all there is to motion picture projection. How would you proceed to show such a man that his position is wrong, and to educate him to understand that better projection pays?

Ray Guaezy, Paducah, Kentucky; C. H. Hanover, Burlington, Iowa; Ray Saxon, Lufkin, Texas; Cecil St. Peters, Moville (Anyhow, that is what the name looks like), Iowa; Thoreau and Clark, Vancouver, British Columbia; C. O. Henning, Iowa City, Iowa; G. L. Doe, Chicago, Illinois, and Chas. C. Colby all made more or less complete answer to this one. We should have had replies from at least ten thousand projectionists concerning a matter of such vital importance to them.

Guaezy handles the matter thus:

First, let the projectionist be sure of himself—sure that he understands his work in all its branches. Let him be careful never to make suggestions to his boss, or discuss anything with him, until he himself is sure he understands the matter sufficiently well to talk at least intelligently and understandingly concerning the matter. (I must bust in right here to say that Brother Guaezy put one BIG bundle of wisdom into very few words there. He put his thumb right smack on one of the BIG and amazingly common faults, which does more to bring projection and projectionists into contempt than all other things put together. The boss is not exactly an absolute dummy, even though he be a bit dumb in some respects, and when you try to talk to him about something you really have slight knowledge of yourself, he tumbles to that fact right pronto, and promptly discounts your knowledge about everything. Pardon me for butting in thus, but I just couldn't keep still. NEVER talk to the boss about anything connected with your work until you THOROUGHLY understand that matter yourself, and are in position to impress him with the fact that you do.—Ed.)

If the boss gets the idea that you don't know what you are talking about, it is all off with you, for right then and there he marks you down as a bull artist. Next time he desires information concerning a new screen, or other projection equipment or matters, he seeks elsewhere for his information, and you cannot blame him. (Read that at least fifty times, and if it fits YOU, take it to heart.—Ed.)

Every time you need new parts, or some new improvement, STUDY THE SITUATION FROM ALL ANGLES. Consider what his probable questions and objections will be. Try to see his probable viewpoint, as well as your own. You will thus be able to meet his objections, and to meet them in a way which will convince him that you not only know your business, but that you are right.

By careful study of the matter, put yourself into position to explain CONVINCINGLY AND INTELLIGENTLY the advantage of securing the desired thing or things, and the harmful effect their lack will produce upon the work.

For example, when the new Cinephor Parabolic condenser came out, I made a study of them and their optical action. I went to my manager, and, by means of drawings and charts, showed him just what their advantages would be in our equipment. I explained to him that he was losing the money they would cost in light loss anyhow, which meant wasted electric energy registered on our meter, and that with them we would get better results at less expense. He listened to my argument and bought them. It is the same with carbons and other supplies and repair parts. I try to know what I am talking about, and to set forth my ideas intelligently.

It is no easy matter to impress the sort of mis-manager described in the question of the importance of perfect projection, but by consistent, persistent effort, constantly talking better projection, and continually fighting for it, it is possible even to penetrate the ivory of his skull, and finally to get results. You will by this course be able to convince even this sort of bird that you know a little more about projection than he does about "operating."

THE REAL JOB OF THE PROJECTIONIST IS TO PROJECT THE SHOW IN A WAY THAT WILL PLACE BEFORE THE AUDIENCE, AS NEARLY AS MAY BE, THE IDEA OR IDEAS OF THE DIRECTOR AND ACTORS WHO MADE THE ORIGINAL SCENE. JUST SO LONG AS PROJECTIONISTS MAKE NO EFFORT TO COMPEL RESPECT TO AND FOR THEIR PROFESSION BY ENDEAVORING TO CONVINCE THE EXHIBITOR AND THEATRE MANAGER THAT IT IS IN THE NATURE OF A PROFESSION THEY HAVE NO RIGHT TO EXPECT THE EXHIBITOR OR THEATRE MANAGER TO SHOW MUCH RESPECT FOR THEM OR THEIR WISHES. Convince the exhibitor and theatre manager of the skill and knowledge required for perfect projection, and that we HAVE both, and added respect will come automatically. Also with added respect will come, to some extent at least, added remuneration and improved working conditions.

CONSTANT DROPPING OF SMALL DROPS OF WATER WILL, IN TIME, WEAR AWAY THE HARDEST STONE. CONSTANT PREACHING OF BETTER PROJECTION WILL EVENTUALLY PLACE OUR PROFESSION ON A DISTINCTLY HIGHER PLANE.

Brother Guaezy wandered a bit outside of the question, but his words contained so much of wisdom that I was very willing to permit him to wander. In my opinion he has absolutely the right idea. He has preached a sermon, the title of which might well be "Salvation for Projection." I don't understand him as belittling the union in any way, but merely that what the union gets, or ever can get, is not the maximum which may be had, and will be had, too, by men of superior ability, once that respect is accorded motion picture projection which its importance demands. In other words, the union scale will then be indeed what it is intended to be, viz.: a MINIMUM scale to be paid the least competent men.

Hanover says:

Teaching such a manager is next to impossible, but it nevertheless usually may be done, and the first step in the process is to compel his respect for the man—the projectionist himself.

This may only be done by hard, persistent work, covering a considerable period of time. The manager described is not a showman. He represents the roughneck end of the business. However, even the most confirmed picture-is-a-picture (as our editor so aptly expresses it) nut may be taught that he is in the wrong, and the way to do it is, as I have said, to compel his respect for the projectionist—meaning by that, chiefly, respect for his knowledge.

The projectionist confronted by such a situation, unless he wishes to throw up the job, has a hard proposition before him. First, he must not himself be a four flusher. If he needs, for instance, a new intermittent sprocket, he must be able to meet the objections such a manager will put up by clear, consistent argument tending to show the necessity for the renewal, and that a worn intermittent sprocket is bad from a business viewpoint. But since our hypothetical manager cares nothing for a good picture, it is first necessary to convince him that his position in that important matter is wrong, and bad business.

Just how to approach such a man would, in the nature of things, depend considerably upon the individual himself, but this much applies in any case: the projectionist must himself preach good projection, and he must do it at every opportunity and over an extended period of time. Such a thing cannot be done in a moment, a day, a month, and perhaps not completely in a year. It takes time, and lots of it.

To answer the question in detail would require many pages, because to go into details would involve many, many things. I think we might perhaps come as near to a broad answer thus, as any other way: First, talk, teach and preach good projection to the manager at every opportunity, and keep on doing so, even though he sneer, ridicule our statements and there may seem to be no immediate results. Second, know your business thoroughly, so that you may be able to, through your arguments when asking for equipment or repairs, impress the manager with the fact that you know your business up, down and sidewise. Many managers have no respect for projection or the projectionist for the simple reason that when they ask the projectionist some question concerning projection, they get an answer which convinces them that there is not much to know about it, and what there is the man does not know.

Some time when no show is on get the manager to remain for a few moments. Project a picture—a hundred feet or so—with low amperage and discolored light, loosening the tension so that there is movement of the screen image as a whole. Then switch to the other projector and project a hundred feet with high amperage, brilliant light and a rock steady picture.

Go down and ask him which is best. His answer is obvious. Then land on him something like this: "Mr. Papalongshortsky, you say there is no value in good projection. I have showed you two extremes. You will certainly admit that the first picture would not be one which would tempt patrons to come as often to our theatre as the second one would. If that is true, is it not also true that in lesser degree any graduation of quality of projection between the extremes I have shown you would have a proportional effect. But as I said, much depends upon the individual you have to deal with.

Saxon replies at considerable length, winding up with this:

The best method I know of to deal with such a man would be to present him with a Bluebook, and ask him to read it for the good of the motion picture industry. Any man who reads, or even extensively examines the Bluebook cannot fail to be impressed with the knowledge necessary to high grade projection. If after even glancing through it the manager asserts that a boy could run his projectors and satisfy his patrons, then he is either a tremendous fool or just a plain liar.

Of course the question of how to get him to read the Bluebook arises. I have found it to be the usual thing that it is very hard to get any man to admit that he is wrong. If you gave him the book, or loaned it to him, he probably would never permit you to see him reading it, but just the same it is a safe bet that he WILL read it. It might be some time before you would notice any change in his attitude, but in time it would come. There are many ways of dealing with this sort of a "manager," but in all sincerity I believe this one to be the best, because it shows him convincingly what a lot there really is to motion picture projection.

Thoreau and Clark say:

Get an act passed by your state or provincial government similar to that in force in British Columbia, Canada, and I think it will do more than anything else to educate the theatre manager in the importance of the projection room and projection. When the manager sees that the government really recognizes the importance of these things he will begin to sit up and take notice. The sort of animal this question refers to is rapidly becoming extinct in British Columbia. All Canadian provinces either already have, or are about to copy, our laws and rules dealing with projectional matters. It's the only thing, boys.

Question No. 345—What is meant by the "front" and "back" end of an armature?

Hanover says:

The front end of an armature is the end from which the current is taken. It is the commutator or collector ring end. The back end is the opposite end, of course.

Question No. 346—Describe a generator armature?

Doe says:

The armature of a generator consists of a core of soft, laminated steel attached to a shaft upon and with which it rotates. Upon this core coils of insulated copper wire are wound, each end of which is soldered to suitable connections, so that the current generated therein may be collected, either by a commutator or by collector rings, depending upon whether the external circuit uses D. C. or A. C.

Question No. 347—What is a "constant current" dynamo?

Some of the boys confused this with direct current. Better change your bootlegger!

Colby says:

A constant current generator is one in which the field winding is such that when running at its rated speed it delivers a certain current flow, which changes little, if any, so long as the armature speed is constant. The winding is such that if the resistance of the load changes, the E. M. F. or voltage of the machine will automatically change in proportion, but the current flow will remain constant, or nearly so.

Thoreau and Clark say:

A constant current generator is one which has its field winding so designed that it will maintain a constant current flow across its terminals so long as its armature is rotated at its rated speed. The power output is varied only by variation in the voltage of the generator. The old series arc generator was an example of this type of machine. A later type, used in motion picture work, is the two-arc series machines, first developed by the Hertner Electric Company and the General Electric Company.

In an electric generator the armature revolves in the field of a magnet, and the amount of current taken from the armature is largely determined by the resistance opposing its flow. Current flowing in the armature makes a magnet of it, and in the Transverter this magnetism is used to oppose the strength of the fields. As the armature current increases the armature magnetism more strongly opposes the field, with the result that over a fairly wide range of voltage change the current flow is constant.

Frankly, I don't know whether that last is exactly right or not, but I'll take a chance and assume that it is. That is a good way to get out of it (IF it is right), because it is one A. M., and I'm very tired and darned sleepy! Good night.

Mirror Trouble

There have been many complaints of trouble with mirror breakage in the case of reflector type lamps. Others report that they have used the same mirror for a very extended period of time, and it still is in apparently perfect condition.

I am not yet as familiar with the trouble the reflector arc is heir to as I would like to be, but think much of the mirror breakage is due to two things, viz: Failure of manufacturers to set forth competent instructions for the handling of the mirror arc, and (or) failure of projectionists and machine operators to either understand the thing they are handling, or failure to handle it properly.

I believe we may start with the proposition that the mirror is presumed to work at a set, given distance from an arc of given amperage. In other words it is designed and constructed to withstand a certain given amount of heat—the heat produced when the mirror is in proper relation, in the matter of distance, to the light source, and the lamphouse ventilation open and free.

You probably know that the diameter of spot is governed by the distance of the light source from the mirror AND the distance of the mirror from the cooling plate of the projector. If the mirror is the correct distance from the crater, the distance from mirror to cooling plate will be automatically right when the spot is the correct diameter, and if the lamp is operating at no more than its rated capacity, then the mirror is working under normal conditions of heat.

But

But, it is entirely possible to abuse the mirror by either one of two or three things, Viz: (A) To use a higher amperage than the lamp is presumed to accommodate, in which case the mirror will either be subjected to heat it was not designed or constructed to withstand, or if it is not then the lamp will be operated so inefficiently that the excess amperage will have no added light producing power because of the fact that the light source is too far from it, thus bringing into action the law of inverse squares as applies to an open light source. (B) The lamp is operated at its rated amperage BUT with a too short crater-to-mirror distance.

This latter is entirely possible. You can get the right size spot that way, but it (the spot) will, I think, not be as sharp as normal in its outline. Under this condition the whole thing operates rather inefficiently, I think, though it is a fact that the mirror picks up a very considerably added amount of light.

This latter condition, however, shortens the crater to mirror distance, and thus subjects the mirror to abnormal heat. The combination of this condition and excess amperage is very bad indeed. (C) Inefficient lamphouse ventilation, which is inexcusable.

Projectionists who handle the reflector type lamp, or who expect to, should study its operating peculiarities. The foregoing is not set forth as hard and fast fact. It is merely what I have been able to reason out. It is presented to you as a starter for studying the lamp and its operation.

Reflector type lamp makers are invited, through this department, to instruct the projectionist and machine operator in such matters. They OWE to those using their lamps very much better instruction than any I have examined up to this time.

Of course in all this I refer to the types of lamp which use no condenser. Those which do use a condenser operate differently, but I nevertheless think that probably what I have said will apply, at least in some measure to them, though not in exactly the same way.

Mebby. Perhaps I Dunno!

Earl G. Mathewson, Projectionist Classic Theatre, Owen Sound, Ontario, has a scheme, which he sets forth as follows:

Dear Mr. Richardson: Have just read Mr. Cecil's letter, August 8 issue, in which he discusses cue sheets on film. I thoroughly agree with him that the exchanges should place cue sheets with the films before they are shipped out; also his own idea is excellent, though I think I am able to go him one better, and that by making the suggestion that the cue sheet be placed on the film itself, instead of on the reel band.

For some while past I have been doing this, as I get new prints nearly all the time. I place them on the title, at the end, close to the leader. It covers the whole feature, and looks something like this:

CUE SHEET FOR "LIGHT OF WESTERN STARS",

JOINING REELS 1 & 2, 3 & 4, 5 & 6 together.

End Part Two—As horses leave scene (long shot).

End Part Four—After man shoos goat away L. S. and so on. What is your personal opinion of the plan?

I have been studying the Bluebook School questions the past year. I find them to be of great value. WHEN ONE STARTS TRYING TO ANSWER SOME OF THEM, HE SOON REALIZES HOW LITTLE HE KNOWS ABOUT THE VARIOUS BRANCHES OF MOTION PICTURE PROJECTION. I sincerely hope the "School" will continue. I am a member of Toronto local union 173 I. A.

Fair

Well, I dunno. Rather seems to me the reel band is best, because it may be removed and hung beside the observation port for reference. Still, on the other hand, the pasting of it to the title, close to the leader, will do no real harm to anything, except to shorten the title a trifle, and it will be more likely to "stay put" than if it be on something detachable. The projectionist can easily copy it off on paper. But anyhow it is not so much what I may think about it as what the men who will read this will think. They are the ones who will use the plan, if it appeals to them, or who will effectively squelch it by not using it if it does not appeal to them.

Yes, I think one of the greatest values the "School" has is just simply rubbing the nose of Mr. Up Stage into or on the FACT that he cannot himself answer many of the apparently simple questions because HE DON'T KNOW HOW. Not long ago a Broadway man—and you know that crowd are always pretty well up stage, and apt to think they know perhaps a bit more than they really do—said to me: "That darned school of yours has got my goat, Rich! I had no idea how many things I didn't know until I took a slant at some of your questions, and tried to actually answer them." And he told me he was now following the questions religiously and working out the answers. He also confessed that not infrequently he "got stuck," and had to wait for the publication of the answer; also that sometimes when the answers were published he found he was wrong in one or more points in his own reply.

Simplex Sales

The Howells Cine Equipment Company, Simplex distributor for New York City, reported sales of Simplex Projectors during the month of August as follows: Band Box Theatre, two, Bronx, N. Y.; Orpheum Theatre, two, Newark, N. J.; Kinema Theatre, two, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Pathe Theatre, New York, N. Y.; Rialto Theatre, two, Glens Falls, New York; Proctor's Theatre, two, Yonkers, New York; Public School, New York, N. Y.; Plaza Theatre, two, Jamaica, New York.; Cumberland Theatre, two, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Cameo Theatre, two, Yonkers, N. Y.; New Theatre, two, Rockaway, N. Y.; Oxford Theatre, two, Plainfield, N. J.; Salaam Temple, three, Newark, N. J.; Baldwin Temple, two, Baldwin, N. Y.; Royal Theatre, two, Roosevelt, N. Y.

One Thing More

In your modern motion picture house every detail of projection, decoration, ventilation, temperature, seating, has been carefully worked out to make the theatre attractive and comfortable.

But there's one thing more you can do—and it's a real factor from the box office point of view: make sure the picture is printed on Eastman Positive Film, the film that safeguards for the screen the quality of the negative so your public may enjoy it.

Eastman film is identified in the margin by the black-lettered words "Eastman" and "Kodak"

Scenes from the great hit, "The Tower of Lies" with the three personalities of "He Who Gets Slapped"

San Francisco starts the big clean-up on "The Tower of Lies"

—and you will clean-up, too!

"it will go down in history"

"'The Tower of Lies' will go down in history as one of the finest five photoplays of 1925. Lon Chaney as fine as anything he has done before, Norma Shearer exceeding even her arresting work in 'He Who Gets Slapped' and 'Lady of the Night'; marvelous photography, deft direction and a heart burning narrative. Smashing hit."

"a greater Lon Chaney"

"In 'The Tower of Lies' a greater Lon Chaney is revealed than we saw in 'The Hunchback,' 'The Phantom of the Opera' or 'The Monster!'"
—San Fran. Herald

"has the elements of a great success"

"'The Tower of Lies' tells a moving story and has all the elements of a great success. Lon Chaney gives one of the finest performances of his brilliant career, a figure to wring the heart of lookeron. Miss Shearer is as lovely as a dream and plays with a wondering naivete that is delightful to watch.'"—San Fran. Chronicle

"the finest thus far this season"

"Unquestionably the finest dramatic screen play thus far brought forward this season. At every stage there can be traced the guiding genius of Seastrom, the man who made 'He Who Gets Slapped.' It was the latter picture in which Lon Chaney and Norma Shearer first scored a joint triumph. It was a happy idea to bring them again together in the present picture. The picture is a shining example of the progress made in photoplay achievement."—San Fran. Bulletin in Camille of the Barbary Coast

Camille of the Barbary Coast
(Dierker-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Laurence Reid)

THERE'S a lot of good common sense developed in this picture—which treats of the redemption theme. What is shown here could really happen and it is treated logically all the way without any recourse to melodrama to give it a punch. The director skates over thin ice in establishing the morals of the dance-hall denizens. But he gets away with it nicely. He has cast the picture well—Mae Busch, Owen Moore and Burr McIntosh being excellent types for portraying the girl, the youth and the hard-hearted father, respectively.

The idea is not new—and the characters have been used in a score of similar plots. But where it differs from the general run of such stories is the emphasis placed upon the humanities. The author shows us a well-to-do youth who is refused aid by his father when he commits embezzlement. The young man takes his "medicine" and goes to jail. He becomes embittered and disheartened. After being released with the customary ten spot he drifts to the Barbary Coast (the action of the story has Frisco for a background) and picks up a flirtation with a dance-hall girl.

That's all there is to the plot—but it is told with no wavering whatsoever. To balance it the director introduces a lot of honky-tonk incident and atmosphere. The detail of the dance-hall is realistic—and while it has a sordid flavor there is no denying that it rings true to life. The manner in which the proprietor and his bouncers run the place—and the way the various hangers-on conduct themselves shows real grasp on the atmosphere of the underworld.

It is acted with genuine feeling. There isn't any humor, but plenty of heart interest and pathos.

THEME. Romantic drama of youth cast out by his father because of a theft and who is encouraged and redeemed by a girl of easy virtue. Reconciliation follows.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The heart interest touches when youth wins sympathy of girl. The scene when he meets his father. The final reconciliation. The honky tonk atmosphere. The sincere acting by Mae Busch, Owen Moore and Burr McIntosh.

DIRECTION. Keeps plot even and builds it logically. Provides good atmosphere for different scenes. Refrains from adding melodrama. Brings out the sympathy for the central characters.

EXPLOITATION ANGLES. You can bill as a truthful little story of two despondent people—who meet and have a romance. Play up the redemption theme. Use teaser statements such as "His father scorned him, but a girl had faith in him."

DRAWING POWER. Suitable for all average houses. The heart interest and romance should appeal to the every-day picture goer.

SUMMARY. This picture is developed with a lot of common sense. To make a story out of it the father is painted rather harshly, but the climax brings on a happy ending. Treats of redemption and the power of romance to work good. Is staged with first rate atmosphere and acted with sincerity.

THE PLAYERS

Mae Busch, Owen Moore, Fritzie Brunette, Burr McIntosh, Harry T. Morey, Tammany Young, Dorothy King, William Robert Daley, Dagmar Godowsky.

By Forrest Halsey. Directed by Hugh Dierker.

SYNOPSIS. Youth is caught in a theft and his father refuses to save him. After serving a prison term the young man drifts into a notorious cafe and develops romance with girl. Her sympathy helps him to get on his feet. They get married and refuse to seek assistance from the father. Eventually his heart is softened and a reconciliation follows.

...mille of the Barbary Coast"

Prod.: Encore Prod.
Dist.: Asso. Exhibitors

As a Whole... MUCH GOOD ACTING AND SOME VERY EFFECTIVE DIRECTION, BUT STORY NEEDS SOME KIND OF SPEEDING UP. CUTTING MIGHT DO IT.

Cast.....Mae Busch excellent as a dance hall girl who is the means of making a man" ot hero, played particularly well by Matt Moore. Tammany Young contributes some comedy business that gets over hrst rate. Burr McIntosh is one of those unrelenting parents and others are Harry Morey, Dorothy King, William Robert Daley.

Type of Story... Drama. There is a familiar ring about Forrest Halsey's "Camille ot the Barbary Coast." It has to do with a dance hall girl who isn't all bad and of her regeneration of a wealthy down-and-outer. But there is such a lot of good atmosphere and good acting that it does make for pretty interesting material at that. It is slow in getting started and even when they do get hero and heroine teamed up it doesn't step along as lively as it might. This could probably be improved with some cutting, especially the over-long close-ups of Mae Busch. They are mostly all far too long. Hugh Dierker has surrounded the characters with some great atmosphere. The dance hall and its patronizing element is typical and Tammany Young's comedy contributions are good. He makes some easy change by escorting "ladies" into the dance hall when they come unaccompanied by a "geut."

Box Office Angle.... Pretty effective box office material and with a heart interest punch climax that will make it pleasingly "sad" for a good many.

Exploitation.... Good cast and names to work with. Talk about the good work of Mae Busch and Matt Moore. Regarding the story, let them know it deals with a rich youth who was "down" and of a dance hall girl who brought him "up." Has hrst rate angles for exploitation and a trailer including Tammany Young's comedy slant should get them interested.

Direction.....Hugh Dierker; good, but a bit slow on development.

"Camille of the Barbary Coast"

Mae Busch and Owen Moore Score in Pleasing and Dramatic Story of the Seamy Side of Life

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Many a picture has for its climax a court room scene with the hero on trial, but in the Associated Exhibitors production "Camille of the Barbary Coast" the end of the trial and the sentence of the hero to jail for forgery opens the picture and provides a punch that makes the spectator sit up and take notice.

A few flashbacks quickly cover the events leading up to this situation; the hero's prison term ends quickly and then in the sordid and drab surroundings of San Francisco's centre of underworld and half-world, The Barbary Coast, there begins an appealing story of regeneration based on human kindness and awakened self-respect.

The woman is a disillusioned frequenter of a questionable dance hall, a sort of Camille type hence the title. Something about the stranger awakens her better nature; she offers to aid him and this rekindles ambition. Together they fight their way back up the ladder.

Mae Busch gives one of the best characterizations of her career bringing unusual sincerity and intense human appeal to the title role and Owen Moore is a good type for the man. The other roles are all in capable hands with Tammany Young providing some out of the ordinary comedy.

Mr. Dierker has used to advantage considerable footage in establishing the proper atmosphere for the story by developing various types around the dance hall and made this section interesting besides enhancing the dramatic value.

The final reconciliation with the father is not entirely convincing and is more a concession to a happy ending, but the story as a whole is an excellent characterization of a girl of the underworld, and with its unusually intense sympathetic note should provide pleasing entertainment for the majority.

As a Whole SELF-SACRIFICE THEME AND SMALL TOWN ATMOSPHERE WILL GET THIS OVER NICELY IN CERTAIN COMMUNITIES. NOT JUST RIGHT FOR CITY TRADE.

Star Has a great hero role that gives him a series of sacrifices that he executes very effectively although you probably won't always feel that they are justified.

Cast Edna Murphy suitable as Mary, the heroine, and butt of small town gossip. Others Douglas Gilmore Marcia Harris, Flora Finch, Gordon Begg, Harlan Knight, Blanche Davenport

Type of Story War drama adapted from a story of the same name by T Howard Kelly. The war serves again as a basis for a drama of sacrifice and romance Kelly has included in his story most every angle that is known as good audience "dope" the kind that makes for the right sort of entertainment and reaches the greatest majority of the people living outside the metropolitan districts. For them "His Buddy's Wife" holds a big appeal. It has that ever popular small town atmosphere with the gossips "doing their stuff" to perfection. It has romance, it has heart interest and mother love; it has sacrifice. The only drawback is an anti-climax that brings about a half-happy ending. The girl is reunited with her husband she thought dead and hero, who loves her, goes on his way alone If they had brought out that the girl preferred her husband to hero the final ending would be more acceptable

Story Jimmy and Bill are buddies in France The latter is killed and Jimmy keeps his promise to look after Bill's wife Mary. His protection is misunderstood and the gossips get busy At the height of the scandal Bill returns from the dead The scandal blows over and Mary and Jim plan to marry Bill, who had been hiding in town, appears and Jimmy once more makes a sacrifice by giving back the girl he loves to her husband

Box Office Angle Good box office picture for many houses. All you have to do is be sure you have the right crowd for it City people may not take to the rather exaggerated small town atmosphere.

Exploitation Talk about the two buddies that went away to war together; of the one that came back and the situation that arose when he was about to marry the wife of his buddy and his buddy came back from the dead.

Direction Tom Terriss; usually good; small town gossip angle a bit overdone.

"HIS BUDDY'S WIFE." Associated Exhibitors' Photoplay. Stars Glenn Hunter. Director Tom Terriss. Length, 7 Reels.—A crackerjack audience picture, this starring vehicle for Glenn Hunter should exert wide appeal. There is nothing new in the way of a story, but it is the type of photoplay that the fans delight in; there is pathos action and sentiment, with a number of vivid war sequences thrown in for good measure. The atmosphere is true to life and colorful, the plot is nicely worked out so that right up to the end, it keeps you guessing as to the final outcome. There is nothing here that has not been done legions of times, but since the fans seem to like them this way this is a point in its favor rather than otherwise.

The narrative may be described as Enoch Arden brought up to date. Two chums at the outbreak of the war are buddies in No Man's Land. They both love the same girl, but Bill was lucky enough to marry her before embarking for France. Through all the grim tragedy of war with its stark realities and sordidness, they both cherish the memory of this sweet girl. When Bill is called on to perform a hazardous mission, he leaves his wife's picture with his best pal, telling him in the event of his death, to go back and take care of the girl. Bill is swept down in the melee of battle, and his pal faithful to his trust goes back to the girl. Complications arise, and to silence the wagging tongues of idle gossips, he marries Bill's wife

When all is going well, the ghost from the dead appears in the flesh and Bill's pal, with a nobility prompted partly by unselfishness and partly by love, leaves the two lovers together.

Glenn Hunter as the youth, is well cast and Edna Murphy, as the wife, is daintily wistful and winsome. Others deserving of a word of mention are Flora Finch and Gordon Begg The piece was adapted by Tom Terriss from a story in Smart Set by T. Howard Kelley, and capably directed by Mr. Terriss

"His Buddy's Wife"

Glenn Hunter Featured in Appealing Sentimental Story of Youthful Romance and Self-Sacrifice

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Against backgrounds of the World War and a small New England village there is unfolded a touching and tender romance of youth in the Associated Exhibitors production "His Buddy's Wife" with Glenn Hunter in the leading role.

Using a magazine story by T. Howard Kelley as the basis and preparing his own adaptation, Director Tom Terriss has turned out a picture that is filled with charm and beautiful sentiment. He has left no angle untouched that would add to the building up of sympathy or the bringing out of the pathos of the two leading roles, for sadness and sacrifice are the keynotes of this little story which is intense in its heart interest.

Glenn Hunter was an ideal selection for the role of the fellow who felt his first thrill of love, when in the trenches he saw a picture of his buddy's wife and who, true to his promise when his buddy failed to return from a raid, went to the village and devoted his life to the girl. His sincerity and splendid handling of the emotional angle makes the character very real and causes a tug at the heart. Edna Murphy gives a good performance as the girl who, while deeply grateful to the boy, finally came to his rescue when he was threatened with jail for defending her name and bravely declared her intention of marrying him although her real love was for her missing husband.

Fifty-Fifty

(Berger Prod.-Associated Exhibitors—Six Reels)

(Reviewed by Frank Ellion)

A PICTURIZATION of the same story in which Norma Talmadge appeared way back in the old Triangle days and which has now been given a modern tinge. The picture also serves to bring Louise Glaum back to the silver sheet. It opens with a camera tour of the French capital, showing us views of the points of interest in the upper and lower world.

The tale, as will be recalled by some of the old timers, has as its theme, "what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander." An American millionaire visiting in Paris meets, and later weds a mannequin-dancer, but tiring of her "steps out" with a beautiful divorcee. The wife decides to do the same thing, and after the husband's jealousy has been aroused and he learns that the "frame-up" of his wife and "the other man" was just a trick of his new flame, there is a reconciliation.

Hope Hampton has the leading feminine role and during the action of the story displays a great array of latest styles for milady direct from the fashion centers of Europe. These gowns and scenes will be a good selling point with which to interest women patrons. Opposite Miss Hampton is Lionel Barrymore who gives a clean-cut characterization of the role of Harmon, millionaire. Miss Glaum is adequate as the vamp, while Arthur Donaldson and J Moy Bennett inject the comedy element.

There are some interesting scenes in the cafes of the Parisian underworld which have been filled with realistic color. There are shots of mannequins displaying gowns in a Paris atelier which suggest a style show as an exploitation theme. There are absolute dances which give opportunity for some fine musical accompaniment.

THEME. A society drama in which a wife finding her husband falling for the other woman gets him back on his feet by stepping out with another man.

PRODUCTION HIGHLIGHTS. The scene of Paris above and below the boulevards. The Apache dances in Montmartre. fashion emporium. The Apache dances in Montmartre. The framing of the wife and "the other man." The gowns and jewels worn by Miss Hampton. The appearance of Louise Glaum.

DIRECTION. Has succeeded in injecting a Parisian atmosphere in this one which also contains enough action to hold the interest as well as a wealth of novelty EXPLOITATION ANGLES. Play up the names of the stars and emphasize the return to the screen of Louise Glaum. Put on a style show. Stage an apache dance as a prologue. Use stills of Miss Hampton for fashion ads.

DRAWING POWER. Should do business in most houses with a little exploitation. Should go good in the towns where its Parisian atmosphere will arouse interest.

SUMMARY. A good program picture which, because of its large number of exploitation angles, should be developed into a good box office feature. There is a good cast, an interesting, if not overly original plot

CAST AND SYNOPSIS

Ginette	Hope Hampton
Frederick Harmon	Lionel Barrymore
Nina Olmstead	Louise Glaum
Charles O'Malley	J. Moy Bennett
Grand Duke Popovitch	Arthur Donaldson
Jean	Jean Del Val

Frederick Harmon accompanies Charles O'Malley on the Grand Duke's personally conducted tour of the Parisian underworld. Here he rescues Ginette from two Apaches who quarrel over her and takes her home. Returning to the cabaret, he finds it all a fake for the exploitation of thrill-seeking Americans. Even the Grand Duke is working on a commission basis. Harmon marries Ginette, and proceeds to neglect her for Nina Olmsted, a designing vamp. Ginette flirts with Jean, now a dancer in an American resort. Nina attempts to frame them so that she may marry Harmon, but her plot goes awry, and in the end Ginette and Harmon are reunited with a greater mutual understanding.

THIS one will bring the old-timers memories of the same picture done by Norma Talmadge some years ago. It was a good picture then, and it is a good one now. It has been brought up to the minute and should prove a satisfactory box-office attraction for the average house.

There is plenty of excitement, lots of interesting background, plenty of the local color of Paris, fashion shows and love scenes for the women, and a couple of good fights for the men.

The film opens with a sort of Parisian travelogue showing the various arcs, towers cathedrals that embroider the city on the Seine. Later there are Apache resorts, wild dances and villainous characters galore. That they are all "atmosphere" for resort proprietors does not lessen their realism.

There are some fine fashion show shots in the sequence where Harmon accompanies Nina on a shopping tour, and there is some clever business during the sequence where Ginette and Jean are placed in a decidedly compromising position by Nina, with the aid of the Grand Duke, a firm of shyster lawyers and a photographer.

There is not a little of the comedy element in the film, most of it being supplied by the American cabaret proprietor, Charles O'Malley, and the old fraud of a Grand Duke, who seeks to eke out an existence through expedients that we hope he would have passed up under the regime of the Romanoffs.

It is a pleasure to welcome Louise Glaum back to the screen in one of the vamp roles in which she excels. She is as beautiful as ever and has not lost the fine histrionic touch which gained her prominence in other days. As Nina Olmstead she gives one of the best portrayals in the production.

Hope Hamnton is a blonde Ginette, who proves that she knows not only how to win a husband, but also how to hold one. Lionel Barrymore is convincing as an American millionaire who is somewhat susceptible to the charms of femininity. The remainder of the cast is wholly adequate, Arthur Donaldson being especially good as the pompous and rascally Grand Duke.

There are a dozen exploitation angles to "Fifty-Fifty" including a fashion show, the apache element, the title, and the cast. Feature Miss Glaum's name together with those of Hope Hampton and Lionel Barrymore. She has many friends who will be glad to see her again.

"Fifty-Fifty"

Prod.: Diamant Berger Dist.: Associated Exhibitors

AS A WHOLE, PARISIAN ATMOSPHERE AND SOCIETY WILL MAKE THIS ATTRACTIVE FOR MANY. HAS SOME GOOD HOUSES. HAS CARDS IN THE CAST. DRAWING

Cast.....Lionel Barrymore is well suited as the American who falls in love with a Parisian dancer. Not given many opportunities for dramatic acting but handles the part easily. Hope Hampton vivacious as the dancer-wife who plays her husband's game in order to win back his love. Louise Glaum, long absent from the screen, returns in her old forte—that of vamp and "other woman." Domestic drama

Type of Story.....refers to the libertines taken by the husband in the case "Fifty-fifty." The idea, though not and his wife who decides that the new, works out in pretty interest- best way to cure him of his infatu- ing fashion with a lot of Parisian ation for the "other woman" is to night life atmosphere and Apache have an affair herself. Then it's business affording effective trim- "Fifty-Fifty" is the result. mings for the story. This sort of thing appeals to a large majority of the typical fan crowd and to them "Fifty-fifty will be a first rate entertainment. It has some fine action in its Apache sequence and one bit of particular moment are the fashion revue scenes in the Montmartre and these like. There are occasional evidences of careless cutting which it would be well to remedy.

Story: Harmon, an American traveling in France, meets Ginette, a model by day and a dancer by night. He marries her and brings her to America. He is followed by a vamp, Nina. He is followed discovers the cause, she decides to neglect Ginette and Harmon begins have a flirtation with Jean, her old dancing partner. Nina frames Ginette and Jean in the hope of bringing about a separation between Ginette and Harmon. Her plan fails and the two are reconciled.

Box Office Angle..Good type of offering for many houses. You know whether or not your crowd is right for this particular type of entertainment. Should go well in certain theaters.

Exploitation.....Run a trailer showing some of the Apache sequence and also the fashion revue. The latter readily suggests a fashion show for exploitation if you care to go in for such extensive advertising. Use the names of Lionel Barrymore and Hope Hampton and tell them that Louise Glaum returns to the screen in "Fifty-Fifty." Title will work well with catchlines.

"Never Weaken"

Reissued Harold Lloyd Three-Reeler Chock Full of Laugh-Provoking Gags and Thrill Stuff

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Included in Associated Exhibitors program for the first four months of the new season is a Harold Lloyd reissue "Never Weaken." This comedy, which has been re-edited, was one of the first Lloyd pictures to exceed two reels, in fact in its present form it is only 2339 feet but every foot is filled with laughs or thrills or both.

The early part of the picture is devoted to amusing scenes showing Harold carrying on a romance with Mildred Davis, who is now Mrs. Harold Lloyd in real life. Seeing her in the arms of another he determines to commit suicide and the various schemes which he tries and discards as unsatisfactory introduce a fine collection of laugh-getting gags with a lot of uproarious and quite a little subtle comedy.

After he has mistaken the bursting of an electric globe for the report of a pistol he has rigged up, a steel girder lifts his chair out of the window and up to the top of a skyscraper. The situation where he removed a bandage from his eyes and sees the figure of an angel on the corner of a building and hears the angel's chorus being played on a harp by a girl inside one of the offices, and thinks he is in heaven, is one of the best comedy situations ever filmed.

A lot of thrill comedy follows with Harold scrambling over the steel framework continually meeting with mishaps and having a lot of near falls. This picture is just as amusing today as when it was first issued and fool for foot should be able to hold its own with the majority of his later releases.

MOTION PICTURES TODAY

GOOD COMEDY

"NEVER WEAKEN." Associated Exhibitor. Photoplay. Star, Harold Lloyd. Author and Director, Sam Taylor. Length 3 Reels.—This re-issue of one of Harold Lloyd's earlier efforts is mildly entertaining. Nothing in which this clever comedian appears could possibly be dull, but the gags are not as humerous, or as laugh-provoking, as in some of his other comedies.

There are thrills aplenty, however, in which Harold balances himself perilously on the iron girders, being suspended in mid-air high up in a building under construction.

The story is slight, and concerns Lloyd's efforts to boost the business of a friend of his who is a chiropractor. He meets with considerable success, but arouses the wrath of a hostile policeman who persists in turning up at the wrong time. Perhaps the most amusing stunt in the picture is where Harold, contemplating suicide, is blindfolded when he mistakes the sound of a breaking electric bulb for the report of a revolver, and is subsequently lifted out of the window by a moving girder on a huge chain. He hears a harp played, and he takes his ascent to be a journey to the heavenly regions.

Any Lloyd comedy is a good buy for any house, and this one is no exception to the rule. He is one of the best comedians on the screen, for he knows the secret of extracting laughs from reluctant spectators. Mildred Davis plays opposite the star.

"Now or Never," the first of the Popular Demand Series, was a clean-up everywhere

Knocked a score of house records galley west.

Salvaged lots of weeks that exhibitors had charged off in advance as bloomers.

All you have to do is to advertise this one—

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

THERE are big pictures coming—the advance whispers and rumbles are under way. Prepare to hear once more—"The greatest picture ever made."

Over at Paramount they can't talk about anything but "The Vanishing American." The title tells the theme, the name of Zane Grey gives assurance that there is "story" aplenty. And those who have seen it whisper that magic phrase "it's big."

Then travel to Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. And see the broad smiles when you mention "The Big Parade." New York only knows what the Coast is saying—but the Coast is saying enough. They even seem to have forgotten "Ben Hur" in the flurry of excitement and enthusiasm over the Laurence Stallings war picture.

There's a lesson here. Two of the coming big ones are the result of IDEAS conceived originally for the screen, developed with the screen alone in mind.

The scramble for stage plays and novels to fit particular stars like a glove is a discouraging task. Talk to scenario editors about it and you feel impelled to shed tears in sympathy with their woes.

But perhaps a suggestion would be of greater help than the sympathy. So here goes:

Let's go digging deeper than the novels and the plays; plumb the thousand foot depths where those golden nuggets are found—SCREEN IDEAS.

* * *

Few picture executives have embarked on a new enterprise with the backing of a good will chorus exceeding in sincerity and volume that which will accompany Oscar Price to Associated Exhibitors.

That makes it mutual. A clean, outstanding figure takes over a company with a clean record and an unusual share of exhibitor good will.

Theater men will do well to watch closely the activities of Oscar Price and his associates in the new Associated. They are practical picture folk, they have ample capital, and their ambitions are big. That's a blend that should result in interesting action.

THE value of intelligent executive supervision in the production of pictures is nowhere so concretely shown as in the results achieved by Benny Schulberg in his Preferred pictures.

Picture companies with many times the capital and facilities possessed by Schulberg would no doubt be glad to exchange records with him. A combination of box office thoughts and shrewd appreciation of screen values has given Benny's schedule a rating that is high.

Now they tell us that Benny has hit the bell again with "The Plastic Age," that Clara Bow was never more at home nor more delightful, that Donald Keith will be sought after when the sharps see his personality register in this one.

Glad to hear it. For Benny's sake, and for the boost it gives to the idea of "intelligent executive supervision."

* * *

WITH these few concluding paragraphs the writer gives up the editorial reins, makes a lingering exit, and sets forth to explore new fields.

They are not easy paragraphs to write.

It never is a simple matter to say good-by to "the family." And the thousands of World readers have always managed to convince the editor that they are a great big family. That they will give the same measure of loyal support and family interest to his successor is his wish, and his assurance.

The "good-by" being difficult to say perhaps it is best to say it quickly and be done with it.

So long! Good-by! Good luck!

First in the Field!

ANNOUNCEMENT

IT is with pleasure I announce to our readers the appointment of William J. Reilly as Editor of MOVING PICTURE WORLD. Mr. Reilly succeeds Robert E. Welsh, who has so ably filled that post, and who leaves it now after a brilliant record to fill a new position in the picture field with which he has so long been prominently identified.

Mr. Reilly is not new to us or to the trade. He joined the editorial staff of MOVING PICTURE WORLD six years ago. Previously he had conducted the motion picture department of the Philadelphia North American.

The trade will remember the interesting and constructive manner in which Mr. Reilly handled feature articles and interviews for the WORLD.

In 1920 we gave Mr. Reilly the important work of promoting our Spanish magazine, CINE-MUNDIAL, in the field of America's big international advertisers. The identity which he gave CINE MUNDIAL in this field will be a lasting one.

In 1923 we promoted Mr. Reilly to the post of Advertising Manager of CINE-MUNDIAL.
